Q. Substantially, he is one who himself is a participant in the commission of the crime charged?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. The first inquiry I want to find out from you is your state of mind with respect to any possible bias or feeling or prejudice against the prosecutor of the county, Judge O'Dwyer, who, in order to solve a murder case, accepts the [fol. 2360] testimony of an accomplice and uses it against others who committed the crime. Have you any fault to find with the prosecutor for doing that, or have you any bias or prejudice against him for accepting such testimony?

A. No, sir.

Q. With respect to the prosecution of an indictment wherein the testimony of an accomplice is used, do you find any fault or have you any bias or prejudice against such prosecution?

A. No, sir.

Q. There will be legal tests that the Judge will give you that will apply to weighing the believability of that type of witnesses.

A. Yes, sir.

Q. In other words, an accomplice says he himself was one who was involved, and his testimony is subject to certain tests which the Judge will give you.

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Is it clear to you that the purpose of applying these tests the Judge gives you on the law as to accomplice witnesses is to ascertain, "Does that person speak the truth?"

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Is your frame of mind such that you understand that even a bad man can at times tell the truth?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. So that no matter who the accomplice is or what his criminal background may be or has been, what hopes he may have kindled in his own breast, the whole test is, Does he speak the truth about the crime participation, as a group, by these defendants, in the killing of the victim named in the indictment?

A. Yes, sir.

[fol. 2361] Q. If accepted, will you use your common sense and understanding to find out does that person speak the truth about this group or combination and the part that each one of them played in the commission of the murder?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you understand in certain cases the prosecutors take certain safeguards with respect to witnesses they are going to use?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. In other words, will you weigh all of the evidence and everything that you hear in court, with common sense and understanding?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do not accept anything that any of counsel tell you in open statements in lieu of proof; don't accept anything the prosecutor tells you in lieu of proof. When I say to you that Judge O'Dwyer has broken the case from the inside, I must necessarily employ that language to find out your state of mind. You find out whether or not a case is broken from the inside when you get all of the proof in the case; do you understand?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. All I want to find out now is that you do not have some inherent bias or prejudice against the use of accomplice testimony as would cause you to reject it no matter what the circumstances were, because obviously if you did that you could not do justice to the People of the State.

A. Yes, sir.

Q. As to whether or not the District Attorney of the county sustains his burden of proof of establishing guilt [fol. 2362] beyond a reasonable doubt, you don't take my word for that; you listen to the testimony.

A. Yes, sir.

Q. In other words, do you understand that I am not here to find out whether you like a witness or you do not like an accomplice witness—that is not our purpose—our purpose is to find out does he speak the truth about these men on trial.

A. Yes, sir.

By the Court:

Q. How long have you been in the soap business?

A. About thirty-five years I have been in it. My father was in it before.

Q. You make toilet soap?

A. Yes.

Q. You cater to the drug-store trade?

A. Retailers and wholesalers.

Q. How long have you lived in that section of Brooklyn?

A. About eight years in one house.

Q. Before that?

A. I lived on 58th Street between 7th and 8th Avenue.

Q. You always lived in the same section?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Are you American born?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. I ask that because you gave a French pronunciation.

A. My father was French; my mother Irish.

Q. I see your first name is William. That is not French.

The Court: Go ahead.

By Mr. Turkus:

Q. In that case in the Supreme Court where Mr. Amen [fol. 2363] was the special prosecutor, were you excused for some knowledge of a particular defendant on trial, or was that some other case?

A. I was challenged by the defendant; I was satisfactory to Mr. Amen.

Q. I want to find out whether the excuse was one because of knowledge of a particular defendant. If it was I would have to find out the name of that defendant.

A. No, sir.

Q. It has been brought out here by one of the lawyers for the defendant Buchalter that his client has been convicted for other crimes, and I have got to go into this because I must find out your state of mind. Would you, because he is in jail for a long time, for other offenses that he has been convicted of and now being punished for, would that relax your attitude toward The People of the State on this murder charge, because he is in prison for some other offense?

A. No, sir.

Q. Would you deviate from a proper, just result in this murder charge because he has been convicted of past offenses?

A. No, sir.

Q. In other words, will you, if accepted, decide the question of guilt here upon the evidence that you hear in court?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. When you mention the name of Mr. Amen, Mr. Joseph calls my attention to the fact that Mr. Todd was the special prosecutor for this Luckman case; it may have been Mr. Todd?

A. It was before Judge MacCrate.

[fol. 2364] Q. Then it was Mr. Amen, you were right.

A. It may have been one of them that hung over, I am not familiar; I think Judge MacCrate did handle the Amen special investigation.

Q. Is your frame of mind such that, in your inquiry for the truth, whether you like or dislike an accomplice in the case, if you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that these three, as a group, participated in the murder of Rosen, whether you like or dislike the accomplices, that like or dislike is not to be reflected in your verdict—it is whether you believe what they say is the truth—do they speak the truth about the group or combination part that each one of these men played in the commission of the crime?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. In other words, if you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt as to the guilt of the three defendants, you do not release them because you do not like accomplices?

A. That is right.

Q. You will be charged, in words or substance—substantially the Judge may say to you that there can be no conviction upon the unsupported or uncorroborated testimony of an accomplice.

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And no matter how believable the man who participates in the commission of the crime is, no matter how much you believe his story, if the prosecution had nothing else, the Court would have to charge you to release the defendant.

A. Yes, sir.

[fol. 2365] Q. That is the law of our State.

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Should the Judge, when he charges you about corroboration, say the following, in words or substance, will you follow it, namely, the burden is upon the prosecution to corroborate the testimony of an accomplice, and is not to corroborate each and every item of the accomplice's testimony, but the corroboration may be deemed sufficient by the jury when it comes from an independent source, and by "independent source," it means a source other than accomplices.

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Which tends to connect the defendants with the commission of the crime, will you follow that instruction of law?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Will you apply your experience to the facts in the case?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. With respect to the allocation of evidence, as I have explained to another juror who preceded you in the jury, the prosecutor does not prove his entire case through any single witness; it is through a series of witnesses that he establishes a case.

A. Yes, sir.

Q. One witness may testify as against one defendant, and another may implicate two, and three may be implicated all of the defendants. Rules will be given to you by the trial judge and the manner in which to apply the testimony as against the defendants. Will you use your common sense and understanding and where, subject to the rules, it [fol. 2366] hits one defendant, will you apply it against that defendant?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And where, with common sense and understanding, the application of the rule hits all three, will you apply the testimony against the three?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. To sum it all up, if, at the end of this case, your mind is satisfied from the proof adduced in this court-room that in this court-room there are three of the group who killed the victim named in the indictment, and you are satisfied of that beyond a reasonable doubt, will you say so?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Is there anything in your background, your present business connections, or anything, that I have not inquired about, which would prevent you from fearlessly and without hesitation rendering such a verdict if you are satisfied as to guilt beyond a reasonable doubt?

A. No, sir.

Q. And if you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt as to their guilt, will you say that in your verdict?

A. Yes, sir.

By Mr Turkus:

Q. Mr. Phillips, were you a juror in one of those cases where I was prosecutor before?

A. No.

Q. At any rate, we did not meet as jurymen and prosecutor in one of the cases I tried for Judge O'Dwyer?

A. No, sir.

Q. You reside on Farragut Road?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Is Farragut Road in Flatbush?

A. Vandeveer Park.

Q. That is quite a residential neighborhood?

A. Yes, sir.

[fol. 2367] Q. Have you lived there for a number of years?

A. Twenty.

Q. You are listed as a clerk for somebody.

A. The Guaranty Trust Company.

Q. At its New York office?

A. That is the main office.

Q. Are you a bank teller?

A. No, sir, I am a correspondent.

Q. Have you been with the bank for a number of years?

A. Yes, sir, for twenty-one years.

Q. I think I can go along with you very rapidly. I don't suppose that through any business contacts you come in close association with anyone in the garment district of Manhattan or the clothing center?

A. No, sir.

Q. Or in the clothing trucking?

A. No, sir.

Q. Do you know any union official of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers of America Union or any trucking union?

A. No, sir.

Q. Were any of the names I mentioned to the other prospective jurors at all familiar to you by way of business contact?

A. No, sir.

Q. Have you had any connection of any kind or description in the Brownsville or East New York areas?

A. No, sir.

Q. Have you heretofore served as a juror in criminal cases?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was that recent?

A. About three years ago.

Q. That was in 1939, you figure?

[fol. 2368] A. No, I think it was in 1940.

Q. Do you remember the judge?

A. O'Dwyer.

Q. That would be in 1939, Judge O'Dwyer took office as District Attorney January 1, 1940.

A. That would make it close, yes, sir.

Q. Did you receive the benefit of Judge O'Dwyer's instruction on the law in that case?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was that a capital case? I mean, was it a murder case?

A. No, sir.

Q. Were any lawyers in the court-room in that case?

A. No, sir.

Q. Do you know any of these nine lawyers representing the defendants at the bar?

A. No, sir.

Q. Or anyone connected with their offices?

A. No, sir.

Q. Do you know any member of the bar who specializes in the defense of criminal cases?

A. No, sir.

Q. Do you have any scruples, conscientious or otherwise, against capital punishment?

A. No, sir.

Q. If accepted, will you exclude the question of punishment in deliberating in this case? That is what the Judge will tell you is your job.

A. Yes, sir.

Q. The same as the Judge, the same as the prosecutor, the same as the defense counsel, the jurors have a job to do in the case, a job to do in consonance with their duty toward The People of the State and the defendants at the bar?

A. Yes, sir.

[fol. 2369] Q. The business of the jury is to do that job without fear, without favor, without sympathy, without prejudice?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. If accepted, will you render a verdict in consonance with justice in the case?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. I assume you are in sympathy with law enforcement?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. With respect to accomplice testimony, you heard me discuss with Mr. Pagnod and the other gentleman?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Is there anything you would have said differently, if you had made the responses instead of Mr. Pagnod?

A. No, sir, nothing whatever.

Q. You have no prejudice or bias against the use of accomplice testimony?

A. No, sir.

Q. You will look the testimony over and find out if he speaks the truth about this group and combination and the part that each of these defendants played in the case?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you will apply the tests which will be given to you?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. No matter whether you like them or not, that is not the point, the point is does the accomplice speak the truth about them?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. With respect to corroboration, will you take the law from the Judge?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. In its every aspect, to constitute corroboration?

A. Yes, sir.

[fol. 2370] Q. Now, it may be—I don't say it will happen, but it may—that three of the lawyers may sum up—each lawyer has a right to sum up for each defendant—I have no fault to find with them, they are entitled to have every safeguard the law of the land gives them, certainly no less, and, of course, no more?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. You will give them all attention?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. The lawyers in arguing the case may or may not adhere, each with the other, on the same argument. For example, they may or may not agree with themselves that everybody in the case is an accomplice, and maybe they will not, I don't know—but just because you hear an argument three times, it will not have three times the force because you hear it repeated?

A. No, sir.

Q. I merely want to call that to your attention. You may hear certain arguments repeated, and properly so; each lawyer has a right to defend his client to the limit of the law of the land; with that nobody can find fault; so no matter what they say, if they repeat the arguments, I want you to bear in mind that it is still the same argument, no matter how many times you hear it?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you feel the same as Mr. Pagnod does, upon the fact that the defendant Buchalter, having been convicted of another crime and presently serving a jail term, has no part to play in whether or not he is guilty or innocent of this charge?

[fol. 2371] A. Yes, sir.

Q. You will not relax or deviate from a proper result because he is paying the penalty for other offenses he has been convicted for?

A. No, sir.

Q. With respect to one statement that was called to the attention of the jury by one of the lawyers, and properly so, each defendant has to meet a single charge in this indictment, that is all they have to meet—what is charged in this indictment.

Q. By the same token, that is all the prosecutor can do; he can go no further. He can only establish the guilt on this indictment beyond a reasonable doubt. The law does not permit less or more.

A. Yes, sir.

Q. So the proof is limited to the charge in this indictment.

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And the prosecutor, by believable evidence, which he brings into this court of justice, must establish to your satisfaction beyond a reasonable doubt that these three men at the bar, Buchalter, Capone, and Weiss, are three of a group that took part, collectively took part, in the murder of the victim named in the indictment, will you reflect that in your verdict?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Will you say it without fear or hesitation?

A. Yes, sir.

By Mr. Talley:

Q. Have you formed any impression at all about this case [fol. 2372] or these defendants?

A. No, sir.

Q. Have you read anything about the case?

A. I have seen it in the paper.

Q. Has your attention, as you saw it, created any impression in your mind about these defendants or anyone connected with this case?

A. No, sir.

Q. Does that apply also to you, Mr. Pagnod?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you read anything about the case?

A. Only the headlines.

Q. And did you read any articles in the Mirror?

A. I don't read the Mirror.

Q. Did you read any series of articles pertaining to these defendants in this case directly?

A. No, sir.

Q. So both of you gentlemen come into this court without any preconceived notion as to the guilt or innocence of these defendants?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. The Court will charge you that the burden of proof in this case, as in every criminal case, rests always with The People—the burden is on the District Attorney, representing The People, to prove the guilt of the defendants.

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And that there is a presumption of innocence under our law, a fundamental right to every man charged with crime?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And that there is a presumption of innocence in favor of every defendant that comes into a criminal court?

A. Yes, sir.

[fol. 2373] Q. That is simply another way of saying, "The People must prove guilt." We do not have to come into a criminal court because we are charged with a crime, and say, "We are innocent" and prove our innocence. That is not our type of administering justice. The law is The People must prove the guilt of everybody it charges with crime, whether by indictment or otherwise.

A. Yes, sir.

Q. My question to you is, Will you require the People to sustain that burden throughout this case?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. I can rely upon your doing that?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Following that same theory of our law as to the presumption of innocence and the burden of proof, there follows the natural corollary that the defendant is not required to explain anything or testify to anything or to take the stand.

A. Yes, sir.

Q. That is one of the privileges of our law—not a privilege, but a right—and it is for the protection of innocent men rather than for the protection of guilty men?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. The Court will charge you that if these defendants or any of them choose not to take the stand, you, as jurors, are not to indulge in any unfavorable inference against them because of their failure to take the stand.

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And will you follow that proposition of law?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And will you, Mr. Pagnod?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Be guided in arriving at your verdict by those in [fol. 2374] structions as to the law?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. The District Attorney in one of his questions suggested that when an accomplice takes the stand, as they will in this case, that he may say, "Yes, I did commit this murder," or, "I did not engage in it—I did participate in it." If that type of witness takes the stand, you gentlemen of the jury are to determine whether they tell the truth or not?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And that all the jurors are concerned with is to ascertain whether the accomplices are telling the truth about these defendants. I say to you, gentlemen, that is not a correct statement of the law—that you are concerned, necessarily, with something more than that—much more than that. That is, you must ascertain, you must be satisfied that what these accomplices say about these defendants must be corroborated, supported, backed up, sustained by testimony that is entirely independent of their testimony. That the Court will charge you again as part of our American law.

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And the Court will further charge that unless that testimony of an accomplice is backed up and supported by testimony independent of what they say or what they say some defendant said to them, that you must acquit these defendants. The Court will charge you that in very plain, succinct language, as Judge Taylor charges juries. My question is to you two gentlemen, will you agree now to definitely follow that instruction of law, to require that addi- [fol. 2375] tional, outside, supporting, corroborating evidence before you convict?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. The Court will charge you that unless you do find that evidence you must acquit. My question to you is, will you acquit without fear or reluctance these defendants under that instruction of law if this case is built up of testimony of accomplices and lacks in your opinion and judgment corroborating evidence that our American law requires: will you acquit them?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. The Court will charge you again that you are the sole judges of the facts in this case, the sole judges of the facts. You have no right to be influenced by what you think the Court thinks from the facts.

The Court: I will let you go to dinner now, gentlemen. Please do not discuss the case, let nobody talk to you about it, keep your minds open. Be back at two o'clock. In the meantime, everybody remain seated. The jury will go out first. The other members of the panel will now leave.

(After the jurors and talesmen leave the room:)

The Court: For the record, to complete it on this point: United States District Attorney Harold Kennedy called this morning during the court session in reference to an apparent conflict in jurisdiction. The following are the conclusions of the Court from the assurance given:

There was apparently a misunderstanding by the United States Marshal concerning his instructions from Mr. [fol. 2376] Bennet. There is no disposition by the Federal authorities to interfere in the trial of this case, and with the discretion of the trial judge. The Federal authorities are concerned only in the matter of there being at all times adequate police guard while the prisoners are over here. That has been at all times provided and is being at all times provided, and the proper instructions in regard thereto were given some time ago by the Court to the captain of the court officers—concerning the police at all times—so the incident may be deemed closed.

Mr. Talley: Has this Court assumed the responsibility of seeing these men are properly fed? That important thing must not be overlooked, and apparently there has been some conflict with that.

The Court: I will take that up with you later. That is a detail the Court is not required to rule on now.

The defendants are remanded.

(A recess was then taken until 2:00 P. M.)

[fol. 2377] Afternoon Session—Trial Resumed

(All defendants represented by counsel.)

(The examination of Wilbert Pagnod and Kennon T. Phillips was resumed.)

By Mr. Talley:

Q. Mr. Pagnod, outside of anything that has been asked by the District Attorney or by myself, do you know of any reason why you cannot sit as a fair and impartial juror in the trial of this case?

A. No, sir.

Q. Mr. Phillips, do you know of any reason why you cannot sit as a fair and impartial juror?

A. No, sir.

Mr. Talley: I have no further questions.

By Mr. Climenko:

Q. Mr. Pagnod, I will address my questions to you first. Have you read about the case or any of the people in it at any time?

A. No, sir. I seen the heading, but I never noticed the reading.

Q. You never read any article about any of the defendants?

A. No, sir.

Q. And you never read any article about this case?

A. No, sir.

Q. Is that the same answer that you would make, Mr. Phillips?

A. Correct.

Q. Never read anything about any of the people in this case?

A. Just headlines.

[fol. 2378] Q. You understand this is a case to be tried in this court and that the consideration by the jury of it is wholly apart from any other thing that may be going on in New York at this time, do you understand that? In other words, the fact we have a political campaign going on at this moment is a matter which has no connection with the case, is that right?

A. Yes.

Q. And that the defendants and all of them are presumed to be innocent, you understand that?

A. Yes.

Q. And I take it that you understand also that the fact that one of the nominees for an elective office of the City of New York happens to be the District Attorney of Kings County is a factor which would not have any effect in your thinking about the case as jurors, were you selected; is that correct?

A. Yes.

Q. That is something which is entirely foreign to the case here that will be presented to the jury—correct?

A. Right.

Q. And it is something which you will not permit to enter into your minds or your consideration of the case were you selected as jurors, is that correct?

A. Yes.

Q. The fact that the Assistant District Attorney in questioning talesmen such as yourself about your capacities for fairness may have mentioned certain names, the mere fact that he has mentioned those names would not in and of itself affect your thinking about the case at all, would it?

A. No, sir.

Q. For instance, Mr. Turkus has asked for some weeks [fol. 2379] now all talesmen as they have taken the box whether they were acquainted with the name of a gentleman named Petofsky. Whether or not you are acquainted with him is not what I am interested in, and the mere fact that he has mentioned those names would not affect your consideration of this case, would it?

A. No, sir.

Q. Assuming there were no other reference to that particular name at any time in the future; is that correct? Or the fact that he has mentioned the names of officials of unions, if those names don't play any part in the proof of the case once we get to the point of actually swearing witnesses, the mere fact that he has mentioned names of officials or of a particular union, that would not affect your consideration of the case at all, would it?

A. —.

Q. That would merely have been the announcement by Mr. Turkus of the name of a union official prior to calling any particular witness, isn't that so?

A. Yes.

Q. And it would be something which would be dismissed by you jurors entirely from your consideration, is that so?

A. Yes.

Q. And so with respect to the name of a union lawyer by the name of McGuire—have you ever heard of that name?

A. No.

Q. Nor have you?

A. No, sir.

Q. Or with respect to the name of a lawyer called Louis Waldman, have you ever heard of him?

A. No, sir.

Q. The fact that those names may or may not have been mentioned in the past and they have no part in the trial of this case, that is a fact which has nothing to do with the [fol. 2380] merits here, is that so?

A. Yes.

Q. You have been asked something with respect to accomplice testimony, and I think that Mr. Turkus has tendered to you a definition of accomplices. Assuming that an accomplice should take the stand and offer testimony in this case, and assume that the Court should instruct you that the testimony of any accomplice is to be regarded with suspicion by you as jurors, would you have any difficulty in following that instruction?

A. No, sir.

Q. In other words, to strip that of its legal verbiage, if you were told that a man who takes the stand and says, "Yes, I participated in a particular crime," is a man whose word you must look into very carefully and with suspicion before you accept it, that that is one of the rules of law for the guidance of jurors, you would have no difficulty in following that instruction; is that so?

A. Yes.

Q. And if you found that the accomplice, in addition to being an accomplice, is a man who had the most urgent reasons to falsify, will you take that into consideration in determining whether or not he is telling the truth; is that so?

A. Yes.

Q. Mr. Phillips, that would be your response too, I take it?

A. Yes.

Q. So also if you find that the accomplice was a person who had a record of being unable to tell the truth or at least of having wilfully falsified in court before, you will take that into consideration in determining whether or not [fol. 2381] you could accept his word, is that so?

A. Yes.

Q. And as jurors you would scrutinize whatever was offered to you by way of testimony with at least the same degree of care that you would use in passing on the merits of a matter affecting your own interest, isn't that so?

A. Yes.

Q. Because, in any event, even though the Court will instruct you that punishment is not a matter for the jury to determine, you realize that this is what Mr. Turkus has called a capital case, and a matter of vast importance in the sense that it requires your honest, deliberate consideration; is that so?

A. That is right.

Q. And a matter involving as careful consideration, perhaps, as anything that may ever come before you in your life; is that correct?

A. Yes.

Q. You realize also that the function of jurors is to pass on the facts and, in other words, it is the duty and the obligation of you and your fellow jurors to decide who is telling the truth and who is not, and you realize also that that is a function which you as jurors do not divide with anybody else. You and your fellow jurors are the only judges of the facts and in ascertaining what the facts are you work independently of anybody else in the court-room. It is your judgment, and nobody else's judgment can be a substitute for yours—you realize that?

A. Yes.

Q. And you realize also that each one of you is under an [fol. 2382] obligation to consult with your fellow jurors, but that you are each under an obligation to adhere to your individual opinion in the event that your fellows cannot persuade you by argument based on the evidence that they are right and you are wrong. You understand that?

A. Yes.

Q. So it is the obligation of the members of the jury, and the individual members of the jury, in the event that they are not so persuaded, to adhere to their own individual opinions; you understand that?

A. Yes.

Q. This is not such a situation as may confront, let us say, the members of a board of directors where it is required that perhaps some people give in to others.

Mr. Turkus: I object.

Mr. Climenko: I have not finished my question.

Mr. Turkus (to talesmen): Will you refrain from answering, gentlemen?

Q. This is a situation in which you are under an obligation under your oath not to sacrifice or give up your own opinion unless it is done in consequence of reasonable argument, based on the evidence, advanced by fellow jurors. You understand that this is that type of situation?

Mr. Turkus: Objected to, the analogy between a board of directors. This is going into a purely legal proposition which the Court must charge.

The Court: Sustained.

[fol. 2383] Mr. Climenko: Exception.

Q. You do understand that you have an individual responsibility to pass on the facts and that that individual responsibility goes to the point of your maintaining your point of view unless you were convinced by the arguments of your fellows and unless those arguments are based on the evidence; is that correct?

A. Yes.

Q. Is there any reason why, in this particular case, which by intimation is one which has received a good deal of public attention in the press, at least,—is there any reason why you would have the slightest feeling of restraint in returning a verdict of Not Guilty if, after hearing all of the evidence and hearing the able counsel for the District Attorney, the Assistant District Attorney, you harbor a doubt, a reasonable doubt, about the guilt of the defendants or any one of them, would you be under any restraint about saying that you had such a reasonable doubt and saying it in the form of a verdict of Not Guilty?

A. No, sir.

Q. None whatsoever? You would not have any hesitation about doing that?

A. No, sir.

Q. You would not have any fear about doing that? Now, there has been reference to your obligation to The People of the State of New York. You understand, of course, do you not, that The People of the State of New York is a phrase by which is referred to all of us, the Court, the District Attorney, the defendant, the lawyers, and themselves. That makes up The People of the State of New [fol. 2384] York. You understand that?

A. Yes.

Q. And that your obligation to The People of the State of New York in that sense is your obligation intelligently and courageously to discharge your duty as jurors under your oath, is that so?

A. Yes.

Q. And that under that obligation, first you must give to the defendants the benefit of the doctrine of their presumption of innocence. You understand that?

A. Yes.

Q. You are also under the obligation to The People of the State of New York to say "Not Guilty" if you entertain a doubt as to the guilt of the defendants or any one of them; do you understand that?

Mr. Turkus: That is bad law.

Mr. Climenko: Reasonable doubt, is what I meant.

The Court: Sustained.

Q. You understand that you are also under a duty to The People of the State of New York, in the event that you entertain a reasonable doubt about the guilt of the defendants or any one of them, to return a verdict of Not Guilty?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. That is your duty to The People of the State of New York, and neither one of you feel any hesitation about your intellectual courage to perform that duty if that is the decision which you come to; is that right?

A. Yes.

Mr. Climenko: Thank you.

By Mr. Fischbein:

[fol. 2385] Q. Mr. Pagnod, you realize that lawyers ask a lot of questions simply to get your present state of mind?

A. Yes.

Q. You know we have no quarrel with your answers, no matter what your answers may be, so long as we can finally determine what your state of mind may be. Then we are satisfied. Is there anything in your state of mind at the present time——

A. No.

Q. —which would in any way preclude you from being fair to The People of the State of New York and to the defendants on trial?

A. No, sir.

Q. You have heard Mr. Sidney Rosenthal refer to the fact that he together with his associates—I am one of Mr. Rosenthal's associates—represent the defense of Louis Capone. Do you feel that you would be able, under the instructions of the law as his Honor will tell you the law is in this case, to take just that portion of the testimony adduced in this court room which applies to the defendant Louis Capone, and consider that evidence separately and distinctly as though you were trying three distinct cases here?

A. Yes.

Q. You feel you can do that?

A. Yes.

Q. Of course, we are not kidding ourselves. We realize that this case together with other cases have received a great deal of publicity and that is why there were headlines as you have spoken about in the papers. I believe you have spoken about it too, Mr. Phillips,—certain headlines that you have seen in the newspapers. Because of that publicity [fol. 2386] we also appreciate the fact that sometimes defendants are on the unpopular side of the lawsuit, and this, in the strict sense, is a lawsuit where these defendants are brought forward to meet certain charges. Now, coming back to Mr. Turkus's statement: He made a statement to the effect that you won't accept the opening statement of counsel in lieu of testimony or in lieu of evidence. Do you remember that statement that Mr. Turkus made?

A. Yes.

Q. The law provides that The People of the State of New York by their representative, the lawyer that they have retained to represent them, must, by law, make an opening statement. Now all we have before us is an indictment, a short-form indictment, charging each of the defendants with participation or with actual shooting and killing of one Rosen in 1936. We don't have—you can appreciate that—that is the law—his Honor will tell you that that is the law we don't have to say one word during the course of the entire trial, that the burden rests solely upon the prosecution and only with the prosecution to prove the guilt of the defendants beyond a reasonable doubt. If his Honor tells you that that is the law, whether you agree or disagree with the law, do you feel that you would accept it and apply it to the facts in this case?

A. Yes.

Q. In view of that, if that is the law—I am sure that I am not misquoting it, will you still feel, because of the [fol. 2387] statement made by Mr. Turkus on the voir dire, that do not accept the opening statement of counsel in lieu of testimony, do you feel that because of that statement you are expecting some sort of testimony coming from any one of these defendants or the defendant Louis Capone, whom I and my associates represent?

A. I don't get the question.

Q. I withdraw the question.

Mr. Turkus: That is a legal question.

Mr. Fischbein: I withdrawn the question. I will put it in this form:

Q. Because of the headlines that you have read and because of things that you may have heard or statements that you may have heard in the court-room, and also with respect to the statement that "Don't accept anything in lieu of testimony," do you feel at this time that you cannot serve as a fair juror unless the defendants or any one of them come forward with some sort of proof to satisfy you with respect to their innocence or with respect to the creation of a reasonable doubt?

Mr. Turkus: I object to it. That is a legal question.

The Court: Sustained.

Mr. Fischbein: Exception.

By the Court:

Q. Mr. Pagnod, if the Court should charge you that defendants don't have to prove anything, will you be able to lay aside anything that is in your head at the present time concerning the case and decide the case fairly upon the evi- [fol. 2388] dence?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Without being influenced by anything that you have read or heard?

A. Yes, sir.

By Mr. Fischbein:

Q. Is your present state of mind such that you will not require any sort of proof coming from the defendants?

A. Yes.

Q. In other words, if the defendants do not offer any proof to rebut any testimony that is adduced by The People, do you feel that you can weigh the evidence solely upon what you have heard adduced on behalf of The People?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. You realize, do you not, Mr. Pagnod, that your commitment is to The People of the State of New York, that you give the defendants a fair and impartial trial?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. You realize that The People of the State of New York do not want a conviction no matter what the evidence is; you realize that?

Mr. Turkus: We do.

Mr. Fischbein: No matter what the evidence is. Except. I will supplement that with this statement:

Q. Except that if the proof is such that establishes in your mind and to your satisfaction beyond a reasonable doubt on the testimony and upon the evidence that you believe, that the defendants are guilty; in that case you will bring in a verdict of guilty, will you not?

A. Yes.

Q. But, on the other hand, you realize that The People of [fol. 2389] the State of New York demand from you that in the event you are not satisfied of the defendants' guilt beyond a reasonable doubt, they demand of you to acquit the defendants. Will you do that?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. You realize, do you not, and I speak to you, too, Mr. Phillips, that a reasonable doubt can arise from the character of the evidence or from the character of the person who supplies the testimony? You realize that? Or the lack of evidence sometimes creates a reasonable doubt. You appreciate that, can you not?

A. Yes.

Q. So that in the event we have certain individuals taking the stand who are produced here by the prosecution, will you say, after listening to them and after their cross-examination, after their direct examination, you say to yourself, "Well, I don't believe that man under oath," after hearing everything, you realize that that could create a reasonable doubt?

A. Yes.

Q. You realize——

Mr. Turkus: That is a bad instruction of law, Judge.

The Court: Sustained

Mr. Fischbein: Exception.

Mr. Turkus: It will give the juror an improper impression of the law, possibly.

Q. You did say you will follow this instruction: That a reasonable doubt could exist from the lack of evidence or from the character of the person who gives the evidence? [fol. 2390] A. Yes.

Q. You realize that suspicious circumstances is not evidence?

A. Yes.

Q. Or do you realize loud talk in a court-room is not evidence?

A. Yes.

Q. It is just that portion of a person's testimony which you honestly and conscientiously can say, "I believe." That is the evidence in the case.

Mr. Turkus: I object to it. There is something there about loud talk that was ambiguous.

The Court: Sustained.

Q. The loud talk I am referring to—if you should find that either side, whether it is for the prosecution or the defense, if you should find either side, one on one side appealing to prejudice and one on the other side appealing to sympathy, you will disregard that, will you not?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. You won't let prejudice enter into your verdict?

A. No, sir.

Q. Or into your deliberations?

A. No.

Q. You realize that these defendants are entitled to twelve fair, impartial verdicts, based upon the evidence in this case and nothing else?

Mr. Turkus: That is bad law. There are not twelve verdicts in the case.

Mr. Fischbein: Twelve individual verdicts, I said.

[fol. 2391] Mr. Turkus: That is not the law.

The Court: A verdict based upon the decision of twelve individual minds.

Mr. Fischbein: That is right.

Q. Collectively it would make up your verdict?

A. Yes.

Q. We are entitled to twelve minds meeting upon common ground and coming to a conclusion based upon the evidence in this case. And the defendants are entitled to that individual opinion and verdict based upon the evidence.

A. Yes.

Q. Assuming, Mr. Juror, that other jurors voted contrary to the manner in which you voted, you won't change your ballot solely because others vote contrary to the manner in which you vote and because of force of numbers, because they outnumber you? That won't be a reason that you would give for changing your ballot?

A. No, sir.

Q. You would insist upon being persuaded by fair and reasonable argument?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Before you change your opinion?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Before you change your ballot or vote?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was there any impression created in your mind as the result of seeing police officers outside this court room?

A. No, sir.

Q. You feel that Mr. Capone could rely upon you and upon your word that if you are selected as a juror in this case you would consider the evidence in this case carefully [fol. 2392] and that you would render a verdict solely upon the evidence in this case?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And that if you did not believe an accomplice who says he is an accomplice, a person who says, "I killed Joseph Rosen; I killed him on the 13th day of September, 1936," the fact that he says that he killed that person and then he goes on to recite a story that So-and-so and So-and-so participated in the murder with him, would you, solely because he implicates himself in that murder, accept that testimony as true?

A. No, sir.

Q. Merely because the prosecution offers a witness to you as a witness and because that witness is offered to you by the prosecution, would you start out with the assumption that that witness must be telling the truth?

A. No, sir.

Q. You would apply all the tests that you have heard recited here before accepting the testimony of anybody?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. You would find out whether he is interested?

A. Yes.

Q. Whether he has a motive for giving his testimony in this court room?

A. Yes.

Q. You would take into consideration the opportunities that witnesses had to speak together with respect to the facts in this case?

A. Yes.

Mr. Clinenko: Your Honor, there are two additional questions which I would like to put, if I may.

By Mr. Climenko:

[fol. 2393] Q. Gentlemen, assuming that it should be testified to as a fact during the course of this trial that the defendant Louis Buchalter is presently under a sentence by reason of convictions for offenses having nothing to do with this case, for a period of imprisonment that runs somewhere from forty to seventy years, is that a fact which would prejudice you against Mr. Buchalter in the trial of this action?

Mr. Turkus: That is not properly worded. It has a right to prejudice a juror under certain circumstances. The question does not take them into account.

The Court: Sustained.

Q. Assuming that you should learn in the course of this trial that the defendant Louis Buchalter is already, and in connection with other offenses independent of this case and having nothing to do with it, under a sentence of imprison-[fol. 2394] ment for a period of forty to seventy years, would that circumstance prejudice you against that defendant in the course of your deliberation?

Mr. Turkus: The question is still bad as to law.

The Court: Yes. Supposing the Court should charge you that upon the evidence that was adduced in the course of the trial there was nothing that justifies an inference of guilt or a prejudice because of the present conviction and sentence of such defendant and simply disregard it, would you follow the instruction of the Court?

Talesman Pagnod: Yes, sir.

The Court: Will you, Mr. Phillips?

Talesman Phillips: Yes, sir.

Q. Then those prior convictions would not affect your thinking about this case at all?

A. No, sir.

Mr. Turkus: I object to it and I ask it be stricken and the jurors told to disregard it.

The Court: Yes. There might be something come up which would make it relevant. The Court would have to charge on that at the proper time.

Mr. Climenko: Then I would like to rephrase the question, if your Honor pleases.

The Court: I don't think I would pursue it, if I were you.

[fol. 2395] Mr. Climenko: I adopt your Honor's suggestion.

The Court: It is very difficult to express without getting confused and confusing the jury.

Mr. Climenko: Very well, your Honor, I want to drop the subject then and ask about the other questions that I said I had in mind.

Q. Gentlemen, it is conceivable that in the course of the trial of this case you as members of the jury may in a sense be incarcerated for the duration of the case. Aside from the fact that that may prove to be a circumstance of come inconvenience, would it be a circumstance that you would permit in any sense to become the source of prejudice against the defendants?

Mr. Turkus: There is an objection to the use of the word "incarcerated." This jury will not be incarcerated.

Mr. Climenko: If your Honor pleases, I think everybody understood the sense in which I used it.

Mr. Turkus: I cannot help that. It is not said right.

The Court: I did not hear the question.

Mr. Climenko: May I withdraw the question?

The Court: Yes.

Q. Gentlemen, assume during the course of the trial of this case and under the Court's administration of the court, under the Judge's administration of the court, you were kept together as a group while the case is in progress until such time as you reach a verdict; would you permit that [fol. 2396] circumstance, if it should develop into becoming a circumstance, to become a source of any prejudice against the defendants or the source of any ill will or any ill feeling against the defendant or any one of them?

A. No. No.

The Court: Don't you think if the jury dislike the Court's ruling, it would take it out on the Judge, rather than on the defendants?

Mr. Climenko: I don't think anybody would do that.

The Court: It impresses me as being a somewhat superfluous question.

Mr. Climenko: Well, it may be, but it was one that presented itself to my mind.

Q. And then the last question that I wanted to address to both of you gentlemen, are you acquainted to any extent of intimate friendship with any member of the Police Department of the City of New York?

A. (By No. 11) I have a cousin in The Bronx.

Q. Is he a patrolman?

A. Yes.

Q. Anyone else?

A. (By Mr. Phillips) Relationship, did you say?

Q. Do you entertain a feeling of intimate friendship?

A. I play poker with one now and then.

Q. Have you ever talked about the case with your police friend, this case?

A. Never.

Q. The fact that each of you, in turn, has as a friend a [fol. 2397] member of the staff, would that in any way color your thinking about the case?

A. No. No.

Q. Or instil in your mind, a prejudice against somebody or sympathy for somebody or feeling of partisanship with anybody, simply because police officers may testify?

A. No.

Q. It is a circumstance, you realize, which is entirely foreign to any issue in this case and that you must relegate outside of your mind; is that right?

A. Yes.

Mr. Barshay: No further questions.

Mr. Turkus: Mr. Pagnod is satisfactory to The People of the State of New York. Mr. Phillips is a peremptory.

Mr. Fischbein: Peremptory by the defense.

Mr. Barshay: All defendants join.

Mr. Cuff: All counsel join.

May Counsel address your Honor at the bench on a matter that we think may facilitate selection?

The Court: Is it necessary to do that now, or can it wait?

Mr. Cuff: It can wait, but I thought it better be done at this time.

The Court: Concerning one juror?

Mr. Cuff: Yes.

The Court: Let it wait for the present.

(The two following talesmen were called and took their places in the jury box: Harry Rosenblatt, of 36 Kenilworth [fol. 2398] Place, and Julius Baker, of 2110 Westbury Court.)

By Mr. Turkus:

Q. Mr. Rosenblatt, is Kenilworth Place Flatbush?
A. Yes.
Q. Have you lived in Flatbush for a number of years?
A. About twenty years.
Q. You are listed here as a special representative, without any further indication of what line of work you are in.
A. Standard Brands, food products.
Q. Who is the head of that here in Brooklyn? Have they a Brooklyn branch?
A. They have a Brooklyn agency, yes.

The Court: Sales?
Mr. Rosenblatt: Yes, sir.

Q. Who is the head of the company in the Brooklyn office?
A. The Brooklyn manager is Ranney.

By the Court:

Q. Is not Ed Schmidt the chief salesman?
A. Mr. T. L. Smith is the president.
Q. You are between Farragut and Glenwood?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. Do you belong to the South Midwood Residents Association?
A. No, sir.
Q. Any local association?
A. None at all.

[fol. 2390] By Mr. Turkus:

Q. (To Mr. Rosenblatt) Prior to your connection with Standard Brands, what line of business were you in?
A. Dress line.
Q. Manufacturer of dresses?
A. Selling for a manufacturer.
Q. You had an office in the garment district?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. Is the name of Lepke a familiar name to you?
A. It is.
Q. Gurrah?
A. Yes.
Q. Hyman Curly Holtz?
A. No.

Q. How many years were you in the dress business?

A. About six.

Q. And I take it then that would embrace up to about 1932?

A. Yes.

Q. You were there then when there was a general stoppage on truck deliveries?

A. I don't think so.

Q. Just got out prior to that?

A. I was out-of-town salesman. I do not know much that was going on in the city.

Q. You were six years in the garment district, but as the result of being there for six years, have you an impression about the name of Lepke or Gurrah?

A. Not from that industry.

Q. Have you some impression from some other?

A. Presently I have an impression.

Q. Does that impression go as far as an opinion?

A. No. I met the defendant about eight years ago.

Q. Which one?

A. Mr. Buchalter.

[fol. 2400] Q. In connection with business?

A. No, just casually; never saw him since.

Q. In the garment district?

A. No. My end of the business is catering to bakers.

Q. Then you know about flour truckmen?

A. Yes.

Q. The name of Max Silverman is familiar?

A. Yes.

Q. Wolfie Goldis?

A. Yes.

Q. And your livelihood is earned now in connection with Standard Brands?

A. Yes.

Q. That is the way you earn your livelihood? Without going into an extended voir dire, do you feel it would be more fitting that you be not a juror in the case?

Mr. Climenko: I object to the form of the question.

Mr. Turkus: The juror has pointed out that he met the defendant Lepke on an occasion; that through his present association with his employment he deals with bakers; that he knows the name of Wolfie Goldis, Max Silverman, the flour trucking; that he has been in the——

The Court: What was the question?

Mr. Turkus: The question is whether he feels it is not fitting for him to be a juror in the case.

The Court: Are you prejudiced?

The Talesman: No, sir.

Q. What firm did you represent, Mr. Rosenblatt?

A. In the dress business?

[fol. 2401] Q. Yes.

A. Kaylor, Jr. was the last.

Q. The circumstances that you met the man known as Lepke, were those social?

Mr. Climenko: If your Honor pleases, I object to that question upon the ground that the talesman, in referring to the incident, said that his name was Mr. Buchalter, and I know of no reason for the prosecutor at this point and in reference to that incident, to adopt that alleged alias.

The Court: It has already come in by common usage. Overruled.

Mr. Climenko: I except to the ruling, to your Honor's observation about common usage.

The Court: I have heard counsel for defense use it.

Mr. Climenko: I have not, your Honor.

The Court: I have.

Mr. Climenko: I except to your Honor's ruling, and I submit to your Honor that no counsel for defendants have used that name.

The Court: Take your exception.

Mr. Climenko: Exception.

Q. I take it, Mr. Rosenblatt, in the discussion you lost the question.

(Pending question read.)

A. Yes, in some extent. I happened to be at a place with some friends of mine. One person introduced me.

Q. Where was this place that you met? Was it a home?

A. No.

[fol. 2402] Q. Was it a social function?

A. No, a night club.

Q. Was this man in company with others when you met him, the man you call Buchalter?

A. He did not make that much impression.

By the Court:

Q. Not asking about impression. You met him in a night club. Did you drink with him?

A. No, sir.

Q. Did you eat with him?

A. No, sir.

Q. Members of the same party?

A. No, sir.

Q. To what extent did the meeting go?

A. Just was introduced to him and that was all.

Q. Just an introduction?

A. That was all.

Q. Six years ago?

A. No, about eight years ago.

Q. And for eight years you remember a simple introduction?

A. It is my business, sir, to remember those things.

Q. Everybody you meet?

A. Most everybody.

Q. Wasn't there something more than a single introduction?

A. No, sir.

The Court: Is there a challenge here?

Mr. Turkus: Implied bias.

The Court: Try it.

(HARRY ROSENBLATT, of 36 Kenilworth Place, was duly sworn.)

By Mr. Turkus:

Q. Mr. Rosenblatt, when you were seated in Chair 11, you very frankly told the prosecutor that you had met the de- [fol. 2403] fendant Buchalter in a night club; is that correct?

A. Yes.

Q. And that you were introduced to him there?

A. Yes.

Q. That was at a time when you were associated with merchants who dealt with flour, isn't that right?

A. That is true.

Q. Were you introduced to him by people in the flour trucking business?

A. No, sir.

Q. People in your line of business?
A. In the baking business.
Q. You are familiar with the names of Wolfie Goldis——
A. I am.
Q. —Max Silverman?
A. I am.
Q. And that familiarity comes through baking trucking unions, that is, flour truckmen unions?
A. Yes.
Q. You have an impression about the name of Lepke?

Mr. Rosenthal: Object to it. He said he had none.
The Court: Overruled.
Mr. Rosenthal: Exception.

Q. Didn't you tell me you had an impression about the name of Lepke?
A. No.
Q. Do you associate the name of Lepke with Buchalter?
A. Yes.
Q. You are familiar with the name Gurrah?
A. Yes.
Q. You earn your livelihood by dealing with people who buy flour?
A. I do.
Q. That is one of your commodities?
A. I do.

Mr. Turkus: Challenge for implied bias.
[fol. 2404] The Court: Any questions?
Mr. Rosenthal: No questions.
The Court: Sustained.
Mr. Cuff: Exception.
Mr. Climenko: Exception, if your Honor pleases.

By Mr. Turkus:

Q. Mr. Baker, are you related to a Mr. Baker who is connected with the Brooklyn Bar Association?
A. No.
Q. 2110 Westbury Court, is that Flatbush?
A. Right.
Q. You are listed as being in the millinery business.
A. Yes.
Q. Has that been your occupational endeavor all your adult life, or have you been in other business?
A. The last thirteen years.

Q. Where do you maintain your place of business?

A. Flatbush Avenue.

Q. Is your place of business next to Mr. Beldor, the jeweler?

A. It is within that vicinity.

Q. You are on the block between Church Avenue and Albemarle Road?

A. Parkside and Westbury Court.

Q. Is that a retail establishment where you sell ladies' hats?

A. That is right.

Q. Are you in business for yourself?

A. Yes.

Q. What business were you in before that?

A. An accountant.

Q. Did you have any connections of any kind, nature, or [fol. 2405] description, or do you have any now, with anybody in the garment or clothing districts in Manhattan?

A. No, sir.

Q. Or with clothing truckers?

A. No, sir.

Q. When you were an accountant did you have an office in Manhattan?

A. No, I was a free lance.

Q. What was the name of the firm that employed you?

A. Touche Niven & Company.

Q. Where was their office?

A. 42 Broadway.

Q. Do you know whether they had any accounts in the garment district in Manhattan, clothing trucking?

A. No, sir.

By the Court:

Q. What was the name of the concern?

A. Touche Niven, an English concern.

By Mr. Turkus:

Q. And other than the time that you lived in the Flatbush section of Brooklyn where did you live?

A. Previous to that I lived on Schenectady Avenue.

Q. That is in the Brownsville-East New York section, isn't it?

A. Right off East New York Avenue.

Q. How many years did you live there?
A. Two years.
Q. Do you have any friends who live in that Brownsville-East New York area now?
A. No, sir.
Q. Do you maintain any contacts there?
A. No, sir.
Q. Are all your accounts local accounts now of the Flatbush Avenue business?
A. They come from all over.

[fol. 2406] By the Court:

Q. Where is your millinery business?
A. On Flatbush Avenue between Parkside and Westbury Court. It is directly opposite Winthrop Street.

By Mr. Turkus:

Q. While you lived in the Brownsville-East New York area of Brooklyn, did you become familiar with any of the names that were here mentioned?
A. No, sir.
Q. Have you ever heard the name of Lepke?
A. I heard it.
Q. The name of Gurrah?
A. I read it.
Q. The name of Martin (Buggsy) Goldstein?
A. I read that.
Q. Pittsburgh Phil Strauss?
A. I read that.
Q. What papers do you customarily read?
A. New York Sun.
Q. Any morning paper?
A. Not particularly. Sometimes the Times.

By the Court:

Q. What is the name of your Millinery business?
A. May Millinery Shop.
Q. Is that near the Patio Theatre?
A. About two blocks.

By Mr. Turkus:

Q. Did you ever hear any of those names discussed by anyone?
A. No, sir.

Q. The reading, how recent was that?

A. What is that?

Q. How recent was it that you read of these names?

A. I probably read it a week ago, that there was a trial on, had been a trial.

[fol. 2407] Q. Had you done any reading prior to that?

A. Yes.

Q. Was that in connection with Judge O'Dwyer's investigations in Brooklyn?

A. I have read about his investigation.

Q. And in that reading matter, did you read of any of the names of these defendants?

A. Yes.

Q. As the result of anything that you have read, have you any impression in your mind?

A. No, sir.

Q. And so, as you sit in the jury box, your mind is free from impression regarding these defendants?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Since you received your jury notice, did anybody speak to you about the merits of the case?

A. No, sir.

Q. Have you any scruple, conscientious or otherwise, about capital punishment?

A. None.

Q. Have you served as a juror heretofore in any criminal case?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. In this court?

A. Yes.

Q. How long ago was that?

A. I think I served about two years ago before Judge Fitzgerald.

Q. Were any of the lawyers for the defendants in the court-room now in that case?

A. I think Mr. Fischbein was one of the attorneys.

Q. Do you remember who the Assistant District Attorney was?

A. McGuire? McCarthy?

Q. Do you know whether or not it was an indictment that was presented by Judge O'Dwyer?

A. I do not know.

[fol. 2408] Q. Could the lawyer have been Mr. McGough?

A. That is it.

Q. Did that case go to a conclusion?

A. It went to the jury.

Q. Is that the only experience you have had as a juror?

A. No, sir.

Q. Have you had other experience in a criminal case?

A. Yes.

Q. In the County Court?

A. County Court.

Q. How long ago was that?

A. I should judge about four or five years ago.

Q. Do you remember the name of the judge?

A. Judge Nova.

Q. And were any of the lawyers in this case associated with the defense of the case in which you sat as a juror?

A. I don't think so.

Q. There are nine lawyers here representing these three defendants. Representing the defendant Weiss we have a former judge of the Court of General Sessions in Manhattan, Judge Talley, and a former Assistant District Attorney of Brooklyn, James I. Cuff, and former Assistant United States Attorney. Do you know any of those three lawyers?

A. No, sir.

Q. Anyone connected in their law offices?

A. No, sir.

Q. With respect to the defendant Buchalter, we have here a former Assistant District Attorney from Brooklyn, Mr. Barshay. Do you know him?

A. I only know him from being called on a panel about four months ago.

[fol. 2409] Q. Was that a case that was being prosecuted by Mr. Rooney?

A. I do not know who was prosecuting it, but Mr. Fischbein and Mr. Barshay were defending three prisoners.

Q. In addition to Mr. Barshay, we have a former Assistant United States Attorney, Wegman, representing the defendant Buchalter. Do you know him?

A. No, sir.

Q. Or his partner, Mr. Jesse Climenko?

A. No, sir.

Q. With respect to Mr. Capone, we have Mr. Rosenthal, Mr. Fischbein, and Mr. Rosenberg as his counsel. Do you know them?

A. No, sir.

Q. Do you know any member of the bar who specializes in the defense of criminal cases?

A. No, sir.

Q. As you are sitting in the jury box, is your mind free and open to receive evidence in the case?

A. Yes, sir

Q. Have you heard the other discussions that we have had with prospective jurors in regard to the testimony which emanates from an accomplice?

A. I did.

Q. Do you have any fault to find with the prosecutor who breaks a case from the inside, solves a murder by the use of accomplice testimony?

Mr. Talley: Object to the question.

The Court: Overruled.

Mr. Talley: Exception.

Q. Do you find any fault with the employment or the use of accomplice testimony in a prosecution?

A. No, sir.

[fol. 2410] Q. I take it, Mr. Baker, you understand as I go along that anything that I say by way of questioning on the voir dire is not to be accepted as proof in the case in lieu of testimony; do you understand that? That goes too with all the speculations that defense counsel may imply in connection with what the proof will be in this case. Do you understand that?

A. Yes.

Q. Do you understand an accomplice is one who participated in the commission of the crime?

A. Yes.

Q. Will you follow the Judge's instruction of law with regard to the tests that you apply to accomplice testimony?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. In any of the cases in which you sat as a juror before was there accomplice testimony?

A. No, sir.

Q. Would you have any difficulty in following the instruction of law that there can be no conviction upon the unsupported testimony of an accomplice?

A. Yes.

Q. I think you meant by that no. Would you have any difficulty in following the Judge's instruction of law that there can be no verdict of guilt predicated upon the unsupported testimony of an accomplice? You will follow that?

A. Yes.

Q. Should the Judge tell you in words or substance that when you come to corroboration the jury cannot expect the prosecutor to establish, by independent proof, corroboration of every detail of the accomplice's testimony, will you [fol. 2411] follow that?

A. Yes.

Q. And if the Judge tells you that independent evidence, if believed by the jury, may be deemed to be sufficient support or sufficient corroboration of an accomplice if it tends to connect the defendants with the commission of the crime, will you accept that definition of law?

A. Yes.

Q. Will you endeavor to apply it to the facts in this case?

A. Yes.

Q. Since an accomplice is one who himself was engaged in the commission of the crime charged in the indictment, there is something right there that is against him, a black mark that can be used against him in weighing his believability. Do you appreciate that?

A. Yes.

Q. There may be other factors that may be brought out as tests to find out is the accomplice telling the truth. Will you bear in mind that no matter what tests you apply to the accomplice, whether it be if he has a motive or whether it be if he has a criminal background, or no matter what the test is that you apply to him, the common sense application of the test rule is, Does this accomplice tell the truth about them and their participation as a group in the commission of this murder? Do you follow that?

A. Yes.

Q. And if accepted as a juror, will you apply your talents and find that out?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, as I have told you, since there can be no convic- [fol. 2412] tion upon the unsupported testimony of an accomplice, even if you believe the accomplice you have got to look for more, that there be that evidence which tends to connect the defendants with the commission of the crime: do you understand me as we go along?

A. Yes.

Q. It may be after you hear an accomplice testify you may not like him; as a matter of fact, you may dislike him—I do not know what your feeling may be about the individual—but will you bear in mind that the question is not whether we like or dislike the individual who comes here, the thing is, does he speak the truth about their guilty participation as a combination in the killing of the victim in the indictment. Do you follow that?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And will that be the way you will devote your mental faculties in this case?

A. Yes.

Q. For example, you may be satisfied as to the guilt of these defendants beyond a reasonable doubt, the three of them as a combination, and their participation in this crime, you may be satisfied of that beyond a reasonable doubt, yet you may not like the accomplice, you may be angry with him, I may not know what your feeling is about it, but do you understand if you find these men guilty of murder in the first degree because of their combination participation in the crime, and you are satisfied of that beyond a reasonable doubt, whether you like or dislike the accomplice, whether [fol. 2413] he gets the kind of punishment that you think he ought to get or he does not, the test is, Are you satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt as to their guilt? Do you follow me on that?

A. Yes.

Q. In other words, you do not release three men whom you find guilty because you do not like the accomplice or you cannot punish him.

Mr. Barshay: I object to that question, especially that part of it which says, "because you cannot punish an accomplice."

The Court: Sustained.

Q. At any rate, if you find three guilty men at the bar of justice, if you find that beyond a reasonable doubt, you don't release them or find them not guilty because you do not like the accomplice; do you understand that?

A. Yes.

Q. Do you have any scruple, conscientious or otherwise, about capital punishment?

A. No.

Q. It has been brought out by one of the lawyers for the defendant Buchalter that he has been convicted of other crimes, serving a very long jail sentence, a number of years he has mentioned, I believe forty to seventy years, some such figure. Would you relax your duty as a juror to The People of the State of New York in this case because of conviction for other offenses and present incarceration, as penalty for those offenses?

A. No.

Q. Or would you deviate from a proper result in the case?

A. No.

[fol. 2414] Q. It has been brought out by one of the lawyers—it applies to all the defendants—it applies with equal force to the prosecution—that there is an indictment here setting forth a specific charge, that that is the charge the defendants meet, and, by the same token, that is the burden of the District Attorney, to establish guilt on that charge and that charge alone. Do you follow that?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. The District Attorney cannot go beyond that, cannot establish things not in the indictment, nor can he establish less than the indictment. His obligation is to establish the charge in the specific indictment beyond a reasonable doubt. Do you follow me on that?

A. Yes.

Q. It has been pointed out by another one of the lawyers for the defendant Buchalter that character does not become an issue in the case until and unless the defendant puts character in issue. That is the legal way of saying it. There is nothing complicated about it. The District Attorney cannot go into any defendant's character unless the defendant himself puts witnesses on the stand who purport to say he has got a good character, and if they do that, then the District Attorney can bring his witnesses about that defendant's character; otherwise the District Attorney can offer no evidence as to the bad character of a defendant. Do you understand that?

A. Yes.

Q. If accepted as a juror in this case, will you reason [fol. 2415] and use common sense?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. We are here now to decide under the laws of evidence as given to you by the Judge, has there been established in this court of justice the guilt of these defendants beyond a reasonable doubt on this murder charge, and if accepted will you devote every one of your mental faculties to find out have they been established guilty beyond a reasonable doubt or are they innocent?

A. Yes.

Q. Nobody expects any juror to be a rubber stamp or to substitute opinions of somebody else for his own. You have got a mind, and I take it if accepted as a juror you will use it; is that correct?

A. Yes.

Q. By the same token, we do not want to get anybody on the jury who will obstinately or arbitrarily prevent a verdict from coming about because he is opinionated. I do not mean to be offensive or embarrassing to anybody when I say it, but I want to know will you sit down and reason the thing out with common sense and understanding with the other jurors in the case?

A. Yes.

Q. And if I establish, that is, The People of the State of New York, either through Judge O'Dwyer or any Assistant he has got in the court-room, satisfies you from the evidence in the case that these three men are three of the killers of Rosen, and you are satisfied of that beyond a reasonable doubt, will you say it in your verdict?

A. Yes, sir.

[fol. 2416] Q. Is there anything in your past life or in your present business connections, any way in which you earn your livelihood now or have in the past, which would make you hesitant in finding such a verdict?

A. No, sir.

Q. Or afraid to do so?

A. No, sir.

By Mr. Barshay:

Q. Mr. Baker, from anything you read, from anything you heard, from anything you have seen, is there somewhere in the back of your head an impression adverse to any of the defendants?

A. No.

Q. Do they start off at scratch with you?

A. Yes.

Q. Are you actively engaged in any political organization?

A. Last Sunday night, Parkside Democratic Club, I became a member—I met——

Q. Before that you—(inaudible).

Q. Did you talk to him in any wise?

A. No, sir.

Mr. Turkus: Please the Court, to save time I am going to exercise a peremptory challenge.

(The following talesmen were called and took their places in the jury box: Roland M. Robert, of 106 Columbia Heights; Harry Marcus of 23 Brighton 8th Place.)

By Mr. Turkus:

Q. Mr. Robert, you live at 106 Columbia Heights?

A. At present 97 Columbia Heights.

Q. That is the downtown Heights section of Brooklyn. [fol. 2417] Have you lived there for a number of years?

A. In the section, yes, about six years.

Q. What is your business?

A. Life insurance.

Q. Are you in business for yourself, Mr. Robert?

A. No, I am with the New York Life Insurance Company.

Q. Is your work inside, or is it outside work?

A. Inside.

Q. And how many years have you been employed by the insurance company?

A. Eleven years.

By the Court:

Q. Main office?

A. Yes.

By Mr. Turkus:

Q. Is that at 346 Broadway, Manhattan?

A. That is at 51 Madison Avenue.

Q. I think I can go through some of these questions with rapidity with you, Mr. Robert. In your past business experience or presently do you have any contact with anyone engaged in the manufacture of clothing, be it men's or women's?

A. No, sir.

Q. Or with the trucking of clothing?

A. No, sir.

Q. Are you familiar with the names of any union officials in the Amalgamated Clothing Workers of America?

A. No, sir.

Q. Do you know any officials of any clothing trucking union?

A. No, sir.

Q. Or any teamsters' union?

A. No.

Q. Do you have any contacts by way of business or otherwise in the Brownsville-East New York area of Brooklyn?

A. No, sir.

[fol. 2418] By the Court:

Q. How old a man are you, Mr. Robert?

A. Thirty-four.

Q. And what is the nature of the work you do with the New York Life?

A. I am in the disbility benefits division, handling claims for disability benefits.

Q. You make the settlements?

A. We handle all the correspondence and make the investigations, and the medical examinations.

Q. Do you yourself do the investigating, or do you just do the clerical work?

A. No, sir, clerical work.

Q. Before you went with the New York Life where were you employed?

A. I was a student before that.

Q. What line?

A. Student at college.

Q. What line of studying?

A. A.B. degree.

Q. I thought you said you were thirty-four years old. How old did you say you were?

A. Thirty-four.

Q. Then you were studying for the A.B. degree up to the age of twenty-eight?

A. No, until twenty-two.

Q. In those six intervening years were you occupied?

A. I have been with the New York Life for eleven years.

Q. Then from the time you were twenty-five you have been with the New York Life?

A. No, since I was twenty-three.

Q. What college did you go to?
A. Amherst College.
Q. Are you a married man or single?
A. Single.
Q. Live with your family or alone?
[fol. 2419] A. Alone, with a room mate.
Q. Are you a native of Brooklyn?
A. No, sir.
Q. Where do you come from?
A. Massachusetts.
Q. Whereabouts?
A. Holyoke.
Q. And how long have you lived in Brooklyn?
A. Six years.
Q. And always on Columbia Heights?
A. Yes.
Q. Being a single man living on Columbia Heights, I assume you belong to some association where you go and meet people and become occupied off hours?
A. No, sir, I don't.
Q. No men's clubs?
A. No, sir.
Q. Not even the Presbyterian Church down on the Heights?
A. No, sir.
Q. You just sit in your room and go to movies?
A. A little more than that.

By Mr. Turkus:

Q. Is there anything about the names of any of these unions that I have spoken of with the other prospective jurors, anything with clothing or garments or Brownsville-East New York that I should know?
A. No, sir.
Q. I take it, sir, that you have no scruple, conscientious or otherwise, about capital punishment?
A. No, sir.
Q. It has been brought out by one of the lawyers that Buchalter has been convicted of other crimes and he has got a long jail term to serve because of those offenses that he has been convicted for. What I want to know is this: [fol. 2420] Would you be inclined to relax any idea that you have about capital punishment or relax your duty as a juror in this case because of his present incarceration?

A. No, sir.

Q. Would you permit that present incarceration to cause you to deviate from a proper result?

A. No, sir.

Q. Are you in sympathy with law enforcement?

A. Yes, sir.

By the Court:

Q. Have you pursued any line of study since leaving college?

A. Only in connection with life insurance.

Q. Have you taken any course in the N. Y. U. or elsewhere?

A. I have taken course with the Life Management Association.

Mr. Turkus: Your Honor, it may be necessary to take a recess at this time.

Mr. Rosenthal: May I address the Court?

Mr. Turkus: It is important that it be done.

The Court: We will have to take a recess for fifteen min- [fol. 2421] utes. First the defendants are remanded. The jury may retire to their room. Kindly do not discuss the case, gentlemen. All other talesmen may go until a quarter of four.

(A fifteen-minute recess was thereupon taken.)

(All talesmen were excluded from the court-room.)

Harold Edward Spille, attached to the Long Island College Hospital, Brooklyn, New York, being duly sworn, testified as follows:

By the Court:

Q. Are you the ambulance surgeon for the Long Island College Hospital?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And pursuant to a call sent about a half an hour ago, did you come with the ambulance and did you in this building, in the medical room, examine the defendant Capone?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you find him, upon such examination, to be normal or abnormal?

A. Normal.

Q. Did you find anything the matter with him?

A. No, sir. He had a mild hypertension, which would be not unusual for his age.

Q. That is a chronic condition?

A. Apparently, yes, sir.

Q. By "hypertension," you mean a mild arteriosclerosis?

A. Not necessarily.

Q. What do you mean?

A. Just that his systolic blood pressure seemed a little elevated.

[fol. 2422] Q. And is that reasonable for a person of his age?

A. Perfectly reasonable.

Q. Did you find him to be suffering from an angina attack?

A. Not at the time I saw him.

Q. Did you find any evidence observable that he had recently or immediately before you arrived been suffering from one?

A. There was no way that I could tell whether he had had one now or three days before.

Q. A few minutes before?

A. There was no evidence.

The Court: The Court will read from a communication from the Department of Correction dated October 12, 1941, re Louis Capone, addressed to the judge of this court, the following:

"Kindly be advised that we are still carrying out the same routine treatment in a modified form. Since the public press has seen fit to criticize the Tombs medical staff unkindly, unmercifully, and unjustly, the Acting Commissioner of Correction, Honorable Peter F. Amaroso, M. D., has ordered that the inmate be examined by a Tombs physician each morning before leaving for court, and that if the inmate needs medication, the physician is to administer it in person and said medication is to be swallowed in the presence of the physician; that the inmate is to receive no medication to take with him, and that we will resume the respons[fol. 2423] bility upon his return from court. This order went into effect October 10, 1941. Therefore, should any pills of whatever kind he found on the person of Louis Capone while in court, these pills were not given by the Tombs physician, but were obtained through other channels.

"Respectfully yours, "Andrew J. Torre, M. D., "Acting Chief, Medical Staff."

This is on the City Prison, Manhattan, letterhead of the Department of Correction.

Following receipt of this communication the Court phoned Dr. Torre to come over here, and during yesterday morning's session Dr. Torre sat on the bench and conference was held between him and me. I told him that I wanted him to request the Commissioner to modify the order so as to permit the defendant to be supplied each day, upon leaving for court, with sufficient medication for that day, to cover the contingency of a possible angina attack, that I regarded the order as too stringent, as it would leave the defendant, in event of an angina attack, without any discretionary medication.

Today, when the defendant appeared, he gave outward appearance of being ill and was led from the court-room. Dr. Nash's office was notified, but he was out, and immediately an ambulance was summoned from the Long Island [fol. 2424] College Hospital. The doctor on the stand made the examination.

The report from Dr. Nash concerning the quantity of drug found on the person of Capone when he was examined several days ago contains the following—this was October 10th, last Friday——

"He produced two cardboard boxes used in dispensing medicines, one labeled 'Nitroglycerin' and one without identification label, which Capone told me were one-half grain tablets of luminal. Each carton contained about twenty tablets. He, Capone, informed me that these tablets were given to him by Dr. Torre, Prison Physician, at the jail. In a phone conversation on Saturday, October 11, 1941, Dr. Torre informed me that he prescribed only the daily requirement necessary, which, in his opinion, was one or two of each tablet daily, that he must have accumulated the daily allowance if those in his possession were what has been prescribed at the Tombs. This leaves the inference open as to whether the excess quantity was obtained from outside source.

I think it is already on the record that during night session of last week when, following a request by defendants' counsel for an adjournment, this defendant requested water for the purpose of taking medicine, he was seen to take two tablets of the luminal. Half an hour later he [fol. 2425] developed symptoms which the Court, of course, was not competent to diagnose. Upon going up to the cell, to the pen, he took a nitroglycerin tablet. He apparently did not require or receive, nor did he request, any medical treatment on that occasion, and was transported back to the Tombs without any trouble at all, and apparently he had no trouble in walking upstairs to the mezzanine and walking all the way across the building to the pen that night, which would seem to the lay mind to be inconsistent with an angina attack.

The information orally given by Dr. Nash is that these luminal tablets are double-dose tablets, that is, the ordinary dose for the individual is one-quarter of a grain; enough for two tablets would be a quadruple dose and would account for that condition.

The Court is now writing a letter to Dr. Torre, so as to make a record of it, requesting that the oral instruction given to Dr. Torre yesterday when he was in court shall be followed so that the defendant Capone will be provided hereafter, if the Department permits it, with a discretionary dose of his required medication, to be taken to meet the needs of any real or imagined angina attack.

Mr. Rosenthal: I would like the privilege of asking the doctor a question, with your Honor's permission.

[fol. 2426] The Court: You have the permission.

By Mr. Rosenthal:

Q. Is it true, Doctor, that with an angina attack, that if you come a number of minutes later it would be impossible for you to determine it?

A. It depends on the length of time that you arrive.

Q. And is it true also that an angina attack can be fatal?

A. It is a hard question to answer.

Q. Let me ask you this, Doctor, and this is without any discourtesy to you —

The Court: The Court will take judicial notice that it is a common cause of death. The doctor was here about fifteen or twenty minutes after the recess.

Q. Have you had any experience, Doctor, at all, with angina attacks?

A. I have seen a few cases.

Q. You are not admitted yet? You are in training, is that it?

A. That is right.

Mr. Rosenthal: That is all.

The Court: Thank you, Doctor. Call back the jury.

Until and unless the Department of Correction permits a discretionary quantity to be carried each day upon leaving the Tombs prison, the Court will be prepared to summon the ambulance in any event of real or imaginary or feigned attack.

Mr. Rosenthal: Might I ask this, then, in view of what [fol. 2427] has occurred—I am not looking for any delay—if we adjourn now it will give me an opportunity to communicate with the Commissioner before they leave, so as to try to rectify this condition before the court session tomorrow, so that the condition then would be remedied rather than have a recurrence. I am not a physician, but as the defendant appears to me, he does not appear—and as I say, I say this only as a layman—to be in a physical condition to proceed at this time. It is now close to half past four, and by five o'clock these offices will be closed.

The Court: Dr. Nash is on his way down. Dr. Nash will have the required medication, and will sit here in court and administer it in event of any attack. The Court will resume.

In view of the history of the case, the Court does not feel justified in granting your request.

Mr. Rosenthal: I only did it for expediency. It does not make any difference to me. I can stay here all night.

Mr. Barshay: May we have some idea how late we work today?

The Court: You made no progress today.

Mr. Cuff: Couldn't you tell us how late we will be?

[fol. 2428] The Court: See what progress we make. The Court is kind hearted when the occasion justifies it.

Mr. Cuff: I am not finding fault with you, your Honor. I am just trying to find out how late we are going to work.

Mr. Talley: I join in the request that we suspend, if your Honor pleases.

The Court: One ruling is enough. Unless the purpose of it is to put the Court on the spot with the press in the event anything untoward happens. I think the situation is sufficiently clarified to stand truthful and fair publication.

Mr. Talley: Judge, there is a juryman here named John J. McNulty, who is a friend of mine, a college mate of my brother's.

The Court: Is he prejudiced?

Mr. Talley: I think he might be. I know he would not be accepted by the District Attorney, and I thought he might just as well be excused now.

The Court: In view of the time lost, supposing we proceed, and we will take this up some other time.

(The jurors and talesmen returned to the court-room.)

The Court: Proceed.

(Mr. Turkus resumed the questioning of the talesmen in the box).

[fol 2429] By Mr. Turkus:

Q. Mr. Robert, I think I got to the part where you told me that you were in sympathy with law enforcement, that you had no scruple, conscientious or otherwise, against capital punishment.

A. That is right.

Q. I take it that while you have been in this jury room here, you have heard other questions put to other prospective talesmen in regard to accomplice testimony. Have you heard that?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. I will try to make this very brief with you, Mr. Robert. You have had the intellectual background that you told the Judge and the business experience that you disclosed to him, eleven years in one company; is that right?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Will you use common sense and understanding in applying the rules of evidence and the tests that the Judge gives you in regard to accomplice testimony?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. As you are seated in the box now, have you any bias or prejudice or any fault to find either with the prosecutor of the county or with the prosecution of an indictment wherein accomplice testimony forms part of the evidence?

A. No, sir.

Q. As to these tests, will you keep uppermost in your mind that what you want to ascertain is, Does the accomplice tell the truth about a corrupt partnership of the defendants in the commission of the crime charged in the indictment?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. In other words, do you understand, sir, that there can [fol. 2430] be no conviction upon the unsupported testimony of an accomplice, and that the Judge will charge you on the law, and it is your duty to acquit if that is all there was in the case?

A. Yes, sir

Q. Of course, there is other evidence in the case. The Judge will talk to you about other evidence in the case. He will tell you in words or substance that it need not support or need not corroborate every detail of the accomplice's testimony. Is that clear to you?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. In other words, the Judge will very plainly indicate to you that the law is that there need not be corroboration of every meticulous, every detailed point of the testimony, but that the jury may find corroboration sufficient under the law if it believes the other evidence and it tends to connect the defendants with the commission of the crime. Is that clear to you?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. If accepted as a juror, will you apply that rule of law to the facts of this case?

A. I will.

Q. And will you keep uppermost in your mind that we want to find out does the accomplice speak the truth about the participation and the part that each of these defendants, Buchalter, Capone, and Weiss played in this murder, and is there other evidence in the case which you believe which tends to connect Weiss, Buchalter and Capone with this murder? Is that clear to you?

A. Yes.

[fol. 2431] Q. And will you devote your mental faculties to the ascertainment of those facts?

A. I will.

Q. Do you understand from the other questioning that character of defendants is not in issue in a criminal case, which means that a prosecutor may not offer evidence of a defendant's bad character unless the defendant first comes forward with evidence purporting to show he has a good character?

Mr. Talley: I object to that, if your Honor pleases. I think it is coming dangerously close to the prohibition against certain comments, against certain happenings in the trial, and I do not think that question should be asked.

Mr. Turkus: It has been asked by defense counsel of other talesmen who were accepted.

The Court: When the defense counsel asks it the next time, you object. Sustained.

Q. Another one of the defendants' lawyers has pointed out that the obligation of the defendant is that of meeting the specific charge in the indictment. Do you, Mr. Robert, understand that the burden of the District Attorney is no more and no less? I cannot go further; I can establish guilt beyond a reasonable doubt on this indictment and this indictment alone; do you understand that?

A. Yes.

Q. That is all I have to do as prosecutor here, establish guilt beyond a reasonable doubt on this charge here; do you understand that?

A. Yes, sir.

[fol. 2432] Q. Have you heretofore served as a juror in any type of case?

A. I have never served.

Q. Taking the law completely from the Judge in its every aspect——

By the Court:

Q. Any prejudice against capital punishment?

A. None, sir.

By Mr. Turkus:

Q. There is nothing mystifying about jury experience or jury service. You are here to find out, has The People of the State of New York established guilt of these defendants on this indictment beyond a reasonable doubt, and will you by your verdict endeavor to do justice in the case?

A. I will.

Q. And if you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that there are three guilty men in this court-room, Weiss,

Capone, and Buchalter, and that their guilt has been established to your satisfaction beyond a reasonable doubt, will you reflect that in your verdict?

A. Yes.

Q. Is there anything in your background, in your present business connection, or any experience that you have had which would cause you to hesitate or be fearful in pronouncing such a verdict?

A. No.

Q. Mr. Marcus, do you live at Brighton Beach?

A. That is right.

Q. Have you lived in that section of Brooklyn for a number of years?

A. I have.

[fol. 2433] Q. More than five? Have you lived in any other district of Brooklyn?

A. No.

Q. So that you have resided in the Brighton Beach section——

A. Eighteen years.

Q. Did you live in some other section of Brooklyn before that?

A. No, sir.

Q. Or some other section of the city?

A. No, sir.

By the Court:

Q. Where did you come from?

A. I originally came from the Bronx.

By Mr. Turkus:

Q. Are you an insurance broker by occupation?

A. That is right.

Q. Do you work for yourself?

A. That is right.

Q. And where is your office?

A. 170 Broadway, New York.

Q. Do you maintain a large office staff there?

A. No.

Q. Are you an individual broker?

A. That is right.

Q. Then you personally solicit your business in various parts of the city?

A. That is right.

Q. Does business bring you in contact with people in the garment district?

A. No, sir.

Q. Clothing district?

A. No, sir.

Q. Or clothing truckers?

A. No, sir.

Q. Were any of the names of the union officials that I mentioned familiar names?

A. No.

[fol. 2434] Q. Do you have any contacts, directly or indirectly, in the Brownsville-East New York section of Brooklyn?

A. No, sir.

Q. Were any of the names that I mentioned to the other prospective talesmen at all familiar to you?

A. No, sir.

Q. Is the name of Lepke a familiar name to you?

A. No.

Q. The name of Gurrah?

A. No, sir.

Q. The name of Weiss or Capone at all familiar?

A. No, sir.

Q. What kind of insurance do you handle?

A. I handle everything but life.

Q. Then you handle general insurance with the exclusion of life insurance?

A. That is right.

Q. Do you have any contacts on the Brooklyn waterfront?

A. No, sir.

Q. Where do you get the bulk of your business?

A. Around my neighborhood.

Q. Around Brighton Beach?

A. That is right.

Q. Have you read anything of the investigations of Judge O'Dwyer?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Have you retained the recollection of any of the reading matter?

A. Yes, some of it.

Q. Do you know whether you read of this particular case?

A. Yes, I did.

Q. Do you have any impression from the reading matter?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. Is the impression strong enough to be an opinion?
[fol. 2435] A. Well, I imagine it would be.
Q. Is it an opinion that goes to guilt or innocence?
A. Yes.
Q. Is it detrimental to the defendants?
A. It is.

Mr. Barshay: Challenge for cause.
The Court: Try the challenge.

HARRY MARCUS, residing at 23 Brighton 8th Place, Brooklyn, New York, being duly sworn, testified as follows:

By Mr. Barshay:

Q. Mr. Marcus, if asked the same questions now under oath as you were asked before, would you answer the same way?
A. I would.

Mr. Barshay: That is all.
The Court: Any questions?

(No questions.)

The Court: Sustained.

By Mr. Talley:

Q. Mr. Robert, will you be good enough to tell me again what your line of business is?
A. Life insurance.
Q. With the New York Life, did you say?
A. That is right.
Q. What particular work do you do there?
A. Handling of correspondence in connection with disability claims.
Q. You do not make the investigation yourself, do you?
A. No, I do not.
[fol. 2436] Q. That is done by other employees who bring in their reports to you?
A. That is correct.
Q. Upon which your correspondence is based; is that it?

By the Court:

Q. Do you dictate the correspondence?
A. Yes, sir.

By Mr. Talley:

Q. Mr. Roberts, have you read anything about this case or any of the defendants in it?
A. I have.
Q. Might I ask in what papers you read anything about them?
A. The Tribune, possibly, and the World-Telegram.
Q. Did you read any articles that ran in the Mirror, a series of days?
A. No, sir.
Q. Did you read in the New York Journal the serials they had about the life of Judge O'Dwyer?
A. No, sir.
Q. From anything that you read, did you form any impression or any opinion about this case or these defendants?
A. No, I have not.
Q. Neither an impression nor an opinion?
A. No.
Q. Are you acquainted with the District Attorney or any members of his staff?
A. No, sir.
Q. Have you ever been the victim of a crime yourself?
A. Never.
Q. You never served on a jury, either criminal or civil?
A. Never. I have been called.
Q. Were you called in any criminal case?
A. Yes.
[fol. 2437] Q. Were you excused from service after being examined as you are being examined now?
A. That is right.
Q. How long ago were you called?
A. Approximately eight or nine months ago.
Q. And how often have you been called?
A. This is the third time.
Q. The Court will charge you that the burden of proving the guilt of these defendants is always on the District Attorney and that every defendant in our courts comes into court with a presumption of innocence in his favor. If you are so charged, as you will be by this Court, will you follow those directions implicitly?

A. I will.

Q. The Court will charge you that under our forms of law the burden never shifts from The People in a criminal case to the defendants, and they are required to explain nothing. The burden of proving their guilt is always on The People. If it should develop that these defendants or any of them do not take the stand and you are charged that you are not to indulge in any unfavorable inference against them because of their failure to take the stand, will you follow that direction?

A. I will.

Q. From the questions of the District Attorney, we, representing defendants, are led to believe that the case will depend primarily upon the testimony of accomplices, that is, persons who admit their complicity in this crime and [fol. 2438] will testify against these defendants. Will you scrutinize with care and suspicion the testimony of men who admit that they are accomplices?

Mr. Turkus: Objected to as to the preamble.

The Court: Overruled.

Mr. Turkus: Did your Honor hear the word "primarily"?

The Court: Yes, it does not amount to anything.

Mr. Talley: Isn't it so?

Mr. Turkus: It is not.

Q. What is your answer?

A. I lost the last part of the question.

By the Court:

Q. Will you scrutinize with care the testimony of an accomplice, view it with suspicion and accept it with caution?

A. Yes.

By Mr. Talley:

Q. And if these so-called accomplices admit upon the stand that they have been guilty of crimes other than their admission in connection with this crime, will you take into consideration the fact that they are confessed murderers, confessed perjurers, confessed criminals, in weighing the value of their testimony?

A. Yes.

Q. You don't think you will have any difficulty in doing that?

A. No, sir.

Q. The Court will charge you that you cannot bring in a [fol. 2439] verdict of conviction, or guilty, unless you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt as to their guilt. If you have a reasonable doubt in your mind as to their guilt, that is, a doubt for which a reason could be given, a doubt founded upon reason, a doubt such as a man may have about the ordinary affairs of life, if you have such a doubt, will you give the benefit of that doubt to these defendants?

A. Yes.

Q. And you will have no fear or reluctance or hesitancy in bringing in a verdict of Not Guilty against all or any of these defendants after you hear all the testimony, if you have a reasonable doubt in your mind as to their guilt; is that correct?

A. That is correct.

Q. You know nobody connected with this case, do you?

A. No one.

Q. Are you taking any part in the campaign that is being waged for the District Attorney for Mayor?

A. No, sir.

Q. Do you contemplate taking any part in the campaign between now and November?

A. No, sir.

Q. Do you know of any reason that has not been adverted to here by the District Attorney or myself, why you could not sit as a fair and impartial juror in the trial of this case?

A. No, sir.

Q. Will you try and do exact justice between The People on the one hand and the defendants upon the other?

A. I will.

By Mr. Rosenthal:

[fol. 2440] Q. Mr. Robert, you say you were called eight or nine months ago for jury service?

A. That is right.

Q. Was that on a special panel?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Before what judge?

A. Before Judge Taylor.

Q. And was Mr. Turkus the Assistant District Attorney?
A. He was.
Q. Were you examined in the box on that occasion?
A. Yes.
Q. Was I one of the attorneys in the case?
A. You were.
Q. Were you excused at that time?
A. I was.
Q. You were in the court throughout that particular trial, that is, throughout the examination of the jurors?
A. Until the time I was excused.
Q. Since that time have you read any articles in any of the papers either concerning that case or this case?
A. Yes.
Q. As the result of what you may have read in the newspapers have you formed any impression at all as to the guilt or innocence of these defendants?
A. No, I have not.
Q. Do you hold any resentment by reason of the fact that you were excused from service in the particular case that you were called before that?
A. No, I do not.
Q. How long before that particular case were you called on a special panel?
A. That was the only special panel I was called on.
Q. You have not been called again in between that time and this time?
A. No.
[fol. 2441] Q. When prior to that time were you called?
A. I believe it was the winter of 1940.
Q. Was that a capital case?
A. No.
Q. Who was the judge?
A. Judge Brancato.
Q. Were any of the attorneys in court here now attorneys in that case?
A. No.
Q. Did you actually serve in that case?
A. No, I did not.
Q. Were you called to serve in that case?
A. Yes.
Q. Were you excused at that time also?
A. Yes.

Q. The fact of your having been excused then, has that left any impression upon you that would be adverse to any defendant?

A. No.

Q. Have you read a great many articles since the time that you were called for service as a special juror in respect to the so-called investigation of Judge O'Dwyer?

A. No, I have not.

Q. You said you had read some articles, did you not?

A. Yes.

Q. Were the articles that you read confined to those two papers, the Tribune and World-Telegram?

A. That is right.

Q. At any time did you read any articles at all in the Mirror?

A. No.

Q. Did you ever discuss with any person any of the defendants on trial here?

A. No.

Q. Did you ever discuss, after your being excused from jury service, the fact of your being excused?

A. No, I did not.

[fol. 2442] Mr. Rosenthal: I have no further questions.

Mr. Barshay: No questions, your Honor.

Mr. Turkus: Mr. Robert is satisfactory to The People of the State.

Mr. Rosenthal: Peremptory.

(Sidney Berman, No. 3090, and Hans Hinze, No. 3089, were called and took their seats in the jury box. The talesmen were then questioned.)

Mr. Turkus: It is four hours since lunch, Judge. May I know how long you intend to go on?

The Court: I think we will get along much nicer if we remember the way we used to practice when I tried cases. Don't watch the clock; keep it behind you.

Mr. Turkus: If you only eat a sandwich, you get hungry.

The Court: I summed up a case at eight o'clock in the evening without a sandwich.

Mr. Turkus: I summed up a case before you and I almost collapsed before I finished it.

The Court: Take care of all collapses as they come.

Mr. Turkus: That is not a plea for any sympathy.

By Mr. Turkus:

Q. Mr. Berman, do you reside at 36 Plaza Street, and you are an insurance broker?

A. That is right.

Q. Plaza Street is up near Prospect Park, isn't it? Do you know a member of the bar by the name of David Price? [fol. 2443] A. He lives in my building.

Q. Do you know him?

A. I have met him in the court the last time I was called.

Q. Was that a case when I was prosecuting?

A. I don't think so.

Q. Do you meet Mr. Price occasionally?

A. I see him in the building, in the elevator.

By the Court:

Q. Have you ever been on the Grand Jury?

A. No.

Q. Or on a Grand Jury panel?

A. No.

Q. Has any relative of yours by the name of Berman?

A. My brother Hyman might have been; I would not know.

Q. On one of the Grand Jury panels?

A. I would not know.

Q. I am going to ask you a question, but I cannot avoid it. Was there a little difficulty connected with that?

A. No. My brother is president of the Brooklyn Society for Ethical Culture.

Q. That is all right, but there was a man by the name of Berman who was linked up with some incident which could have a bearing on your qualification. I will ask this, and it won't mean anything to you, but it will to me. Has at any time your insurance license been held up?

A. Never.

Q. Or your brother's?

A. Never.

By Mr. Turkus:

Q. What I want to know is this: Since you met Mr. Price [fol. 2444] in court have you met him in the house?

A. No.

Q. At any time since you know him have you discussed any criminal case with him?

A. I met him one day and asked him the outcome of the case that he had been trying. He told me and that was the end of that.

Q. Was that one of the O'Dwyer cases?

A. No, it was a case involving fraud against an insurance company.

Q. Being in the insurance business, naturally you were curious?

A. That is right.

Q. Did you ever meet Mr. Price in court at any time where I was the prosecutor?

A. I don't think you were the prosecutor on this case.

Q. No, I have only been handling a certain type of case.

A. Then I never met you.

Q. Have you served as a juror in any type of case?

A. No.

Q. This would be your initial experience?

A. That is right.

Q. Have you been on this special panel for some time?

A. I was called once, but earlier this year.

Q. And did you get as far as where you are now?

A. Yes, except it was in the witness chair.

Q. They were examining the jurors individually?

A. That is right.

Q. Who was the judge in that case, do you recall?

A. Yes, Judge Fitzgerald.

[fol. 2445] Q. And Mr. Price was one of the defense lawyers?

A. That is right.

Q. Do you remember who the prosecutor was? Was it Mr. Rooney?

A. A good-looking fellow.

Q. If you are taken as a juror, you don't want to know whether I am good looking; you want to know if this case is good looking.

The Court: In view of the lateness and the anxiety of counsel to watch the clock, economize. Maybe the Court will be good-natured in a few hours.

Q. Have you lived in any other district of Brooklyn beside that Prospect Park section?

A. In that vicinity for the last seventeen years.

Q. Where do you maintain your office?

A. 16 Court Street, Brooklyn.

Q. And are you in business yourself?

A. With my brother, under the name of Hyman Berman & Brother.

Q. Is that the brother you mentioned?

A. He is the president of the Brooklyn Society of Ethical Culture.

By the Court:

Q. That is on Prospect Park West?

A. That is right. That is where the school is too.

By Mr. Turkus:

Q. That is in the vicinity of that 8th Avenue Temple?

A. The Society?

Q. Yes.

A. The Society House is 500 First Street.

[fol. 2446] Q. Does your business, Mr. Berman, bring you in contact with various lawyers?

A. No, not my business. I know various lawyers.

Q. Is Mr. Price's former partner, William W. Kleinman, who is now in the United States Army,—is that a familiar name?

A. Yes, I have heard the name.

Q. Do you know William Kleinman personally?

A. No.

Q. There are nine lawyers in this case. I don't stress the nine.

A. I recognize one name. Bertram Wegman I recall, was in a high school fraternity of mine. We both went to Manual and were in the same fraternity.

Q. You got out of Manual in '20 or '21?

A. No, I am only thirty years old. He was away before me.

Q. Is he a friend of yours?

A. No.

Q. Did you meet him in the fraternity?

A. The fraternity is out of existence, I would say.

Q. Any of these other lawyers, do you know any of them?

A. Mr. Barshay, I think, lives in the neighborhood, and I have seen him occasionally in the neighborhood drug store on Underhill Avenue.

Q. Any of these other lawyers?

A. No. I do not know whether Mr. Rosenthal was with Price that day. I do not remember seeing his face, but there was someone looked like him. Might have been Sidney Gottesman.

By the Court:

[fol. 2447] Q. You are right at the Union Temple?

A. I beg pardon?

Q. You live right by Union Temple?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And I assume you go to the men's club meetings there?

A. I am a member of the men's club.

Q. You had lectures there on crime?

A. No, I have never heard one.

Q. Nothing on this subject?

A. Nothing.

Q. In connection with the O'Dwyer work?

A. No. I have only been to several meetings, and they never had lectures when I was there.

By Mr. Turkus:

Q. Is your acquaintanceship with Mr. Barshay limited to meeting him in the drug store on occasion in the neighborhood?

A. I don't think I have ever been introduced to him, but I have seen him.

Q. Do you come in contact with other lawyers?

A. Yes.

Q. Other lawyers that you know?

A. Yes.

Q. Do you know whether they specialize in the defense of criminal cases?

A. I don't think they do.

Q. Would you describe them as general practitioners?

A. That is all.

Q. Do you know Mr. Gittelson, who is associated with Mr. Barshay?

A. No.

Q. Do you know where Mr. Barshay's law office is located?

A. No.

[fol. 2448] Q. Do you know where Mr. Wegman's law office is located?

A. No.

Q. Or Mr. Price's law office?

A. I think it is 66 Court Street.

Q. Do you deal with any members of the bar in insurance matters? In other words, do you solicit any of their business?

A. No. Occasionally a bond will be written, and our name will be put on as broker by some of my lawyer friends.

By the Court:

Q. A bail bond?

A. No, administration bond.

By Mr. Turkus:

Q. The type of insurance that you are engaged in excludes bail bonds?

A. Absolutely.

Q. There is nothing wrong about bail bonds. Bail is something that is allowed in certain cases, and everybody should have it. What I was trying to find out, Mr. Berman, was this: Whether you had contact with a certain group of lawyers that I ought to know about.

A. I understand.

Q. I am not trying to be offensive or embarrassing to you. Have you been in the insurance business for a number of years?

A. Yes, twelve years.

Q. So that would bring you on up to when you left school?

A. That is right. I went with my brother. He has been over thirty.

Q. Do you know the District Attorney of the county, [fol. 2449] Judge O'Dwyer, personally?

A. No.

Q. Or any Assistant on his staff?

A. No.

Q. Is there anything about that casual acquaintanceship that you have had with Mr. Barshay and Mr. Wegman and Mr. Price that would in any wise embarrass you in rendering jury service in this case?

A. Not at all.

Q. Do you realize, sir, this is an important issue, important to The People of the State of New York and important to the defendants as well?

A. Yes.

Q. Would you be embarrassed if you met Mr. Barshay in the future if your findings were against his client or the other defendants?

A. No.

By the Court:

Q. I take it your membership in Union Temple includes gymnasium and swimming pool contacts?

A. No, I am not a member of the Temple. I am just a member of the men's club.

Q. Just when they meet and have discussion?

A. Yes.

Q. That is Rabbi Tedestes(?)?

A. A very good friend of mine.

By Mr. Turkus:

Q. There is this point of capital punishment that the District Attorney is obliged to go into. Have you any scruple, conscientious or otherwise, against capital punishment?

A. No.

Q. In this particular case it has been pointed out, and the attention of the jury has been directed, each one of [fol. 2450] them, by defendants' counsel, one way or the other, that the defendant Buchalter serves a long jail term presently, having been convicted of other offenses. Would you be inclined to relax your thoughts in connection with capital punishment because he is serving a long jail term?

A. No.

Q. Or would you be inclined to relax from a proper jury verdict in this case because of that long jail term?

A. No.

Q. Or deviate from a proper result?

A. No.

Q. Your insurance business, is that gathered from any particular location or any particular industry, or is it general in its nature?

A. General.

By the Court:

Q. Who tends to it when you are away.

A. My brother.

By Mr. Turkus:

Q. Does your business bring you in contact with anyone engaged in the manufacture of clothes?

A. We have one account, ladies' coats and suits, my brother-in-law.

Q. Your brother-in-law is in that business?

A. That is right.

Q. What is his name?

A. Sam Dick.

Q. Do you know the trade name?

A. Samuel H. Dick, Incorporated.

Q. Sometimes his clothes have a name?

A. Not that type of business. I know what you mean.

Q. He manufactures ladies' garments?

A. Yes.

[fol. 2451] Q. And he manufactures those garments in the garment or clothing district of Manhattan?

A. 37th Street, 38th.

Q. Off Broadway?

A. Off 7th Avenue, 246 West 38th.

Q. How many years has he been in that bu-iness?

A. Well, he has been under different names from time to time.

Q. The manufacture of clothing.

A. I would say ten years.

Q. Do you have any contacts in the garment or clothing district?

A. No.

Q. Is the name of Lepke a familiar name to you?

A. Yes.

Q. The name of Gurrah?

A. Yes.

Q. Shapiro, Gurrah? The same individual, you know that?

A. Yes.

Q. From anything that you have heard from your brother-in-law, if you have heard anything, or anything that you have read, have you an impression about those names?

A. No.

Q. Is the name of Hyman (Curley) Holtz a familiar name?

A. No.

Q. Is your brother-in-law the one chiefly interested in this manufacture of ladies' clothes?

A. Yes.

Q. I take it it is really a one-man business that has been incorporated?

A. That is right.

Q. You supply insurance to him in the conduct of his business?

A. Yes.

Q. I take it that would be compensation, fire, and theft?

A. Burglary, and so forth.

[fol. 2452] Q. When you say your brother-in-law, is he married to your sister?

A. That is right.

Q. In what manner did the names of Lepke and Gurrah become familiar to you?

A. I read it in the newspaper.

Q. Did you ever hear anything said by your brother-in-law?

A. Never.

Q. Are you on good terms with him?

A. Very good.

Q. Did you follow either the Dewey or the O'Dwyer investigations with any degree of interest, in the newspapers?

A. Neither of them.

Q. I take it that your brother-in-law handles the product from the raw state, that is, taking the goods, having it designed into garments, manufacturing the garment, and then distributing it through the truckers?

A. Except that the garment is manufactured by contractors and brought into his place and then distributed, and not as a rule by trucking, because his customers would be out of town mostly, and the larger departments stores in New York. I think a lot of it goes railway express.

Q. Do you know whether he has any Pennsylvania accounts?

A. I don't, no.

Q. In connection with the members of the bar that you know, Mr. Berman, did any of them speak to you about any of the individuals now in the court-room?

A. No.

Q. Did you ever hear any discussions about any of these [fol. 2453] three defendants?

A. No.

Q. Capone, Weiss, or Buchalter? Do you have any other connection, clothing trucking, clothing of any kind, nature or description that we have not discussed?

A. No.

Q. Do you have any accounts in the Brownsville-East New York section?

A. No.

Q. Would you say your business is confined chiefly to Manhattan or to Brooklyn?

A. Manhattan.

Q. Were any of the names of union officials at all familiar to you?

A. No.

Q. Weinstein, Katz?

A. No.

Q. Any familiarity about the name of Bellanca or Belia?

A. No.

Q. Or Tosca?

A. No.

Q. Or Hyman (Curley) Holtz, Whitey Deutch?

A. No.

Q. When is the last time that you have seen your brother-in-law?

A. Sunday.

Q. Was that after you received your notice?

A. Yes.

Q. Did you have any reading knowledge of any of the names of individuals in Brownsville, East New York, like Harry (Pittsburgh Phil) Strauss, Martin (Buggsy) Goldstein?

A. I have seen the names in the paper.

Q. Did you ever hear their names discussed by anyone?

A. No.

Q. Did you live in any section of Brooklyn other than the [fol. 2454] Hill section?

A. Schenectady Avenue.

Q. That is East New York?

A. Eastern Parkway. I would not call it East New York.

Q. That would be in the vicinity of Dubrow's, the Famous Restaurant?

A. It would be up even higher than that, but that goes back many, many years.

Q. Do you travel through the borough in the discharge of your duties?

A. Yes.

Q. Have you been to the Famous Restaurant, Dubrow's Restaurant?

A. No.

Q. Does business bring you into the garment or clothing district?

A. Other than my brother-in-law's place, no others.

Q. Any business bring you into contact with the Brooklyn waterfront?

A. No.

Q. Do you know the District Attorney of the county or any member of his staff?

A. No.

Q. And I believe you told Judge Taylor that you attended no discourses or lectures upon the apprehension of criminals and their prosecution?

A. No.

Q. Not having served as a juror before, will you take the law implicitly from the Judge if accepted in this case?

A. Yes.

Q. Did you hear the discussion I had about accomplice testimony?

A. Yes.

Q. Would you have made different response?

A. No.

Q. Were the matters that I discussed, were they clear and [fol. 2455] understandable to you?

A. Yes.

Q. Is there any reason, by way of business or something that I failed to elicit by any response, that would go to your qualification to sit as a juror in this case?

A. No.

Q. If I satisfied you from the believable evidence in the case that the guilt of these defendants has been established beyond a reasonable doubt, would you hesitate to reflect that in your verdict?

A. No.

Q. Would you do so fearlessly?

A. Yes.

Q. There is nothing that I failed to bring out by questioning that would go to your ability to be a fair and honest and conscientious juror and discharge your duties to the People of the State of New York and all of them: is that correct?

A. That is correct.

Q. Mr. Hinze, were you a juror in any case that I tried as a prosecutor?

A. Yes, two.

Q. And you sat through both cases?

A. No, I was called and examined by you this year.

Q. Do you remember whether I said "Satisfactory" when I examined you?

Mr. Barshay: That is objected to.

Mr. Turkus: I want to save time. If I did I am going to say "Satisfactory" now.

A. You accepted me.

Mr. Turkus: All right, then. That settles it. I do [fol. 2456] not have to go into any discussions.

Mr. Fischbein: He was challenged for cause.

Mr. Turkus: By me?

Mr. Fischbein: No.

Mr. Turkus: If he was satisfactory to me once, he is satisfactory forever. That is the end of it.

By Mr. Barshay:

Q. You were satisfactory, Mr. Turkus says, to him on two other occasions?

A. Yes.

Q. Did that find favor with him in your eyes to the point where you may be influenced in this case?

A. No.

Q. Of course, Mr. Fischbein said that someone challenged you for cause in the other case.

A. Mr. Rosenthal.

By the Court:

Q. Were you an importer?

A. No more. I used to import machinery. Now I am a machine dealer, domestic machines.

Q. What kind of machines?

A. Printers' machines.

By Mr. Barshay:

Q. You were called only a short time ago as a blue ribbon juror?

A. Yes.

Q. How long ago?
A. In May.
Q. Of this year?
A. Yes, those two young fellows.
Q. And before that?
A. Silverman case.
Q. That was a special jury and you were satisfactory to Mr. Turkus when he was the attorney in that case?
A. Yes.
[fol. 2457] Q. No matter which side you are on, you are satisfactory to Turkus.
Mr. Turkus: He must be a good juror.
Q. Did you sit in the Silverman case as a juror?
A. I was called.

By the Court:

Q. Did you act as a juryman?
A. No, I did not. I have been called on the jury for eight years on the average of twice a year.

By Mr. Barshay:

Q. Were you examined by Mr. Turkus in the Silverman case?
A. Yes.
Q. Were you examined by Mr. Turkus in the last case?
A. Yes.
Q. And before that were you on any other jury?
A. Yes.
Q. May I know?
A. I was not examined.
Q. How many times did you serve as a juror?
A. Eight years ago.
Q. The name of Max Silverman, according to Mr. Turkus's questioning, may be prominent—I do not know—in this case. He was a defendant in a case where you were called and examined as a juror. Would that affect your judgment here?
A. No.
Q. Is there something that you have heard or read when Mr. Silverman was in the court-room which would influence you in any direction in this case?
A. No.

Q. Would you be more likely to believe him or less likely [fol. 2458] to believe him if he should be a witness in this case, by virtue of the experience you had?

Mr. Turkus: I object to that. That is speculation.
The Court: Sustained.
Mr. Barshay: Respectfully except.

Q. You formed some idea because of what you read?
A. Never read this case.
Q. You said you read——
A. The headlines.
Q. What paper, please?
A. Evening Sun.
Q. Any other paper?
A. Times.
Q. Read them more than once?
A. Times in the morning.
Q. I mean did you read about this case more than once?
A. On occasion.
Q. On occasions you saw the name Lepke?
A. Headlines.
Q. On many occasions?
A. No. I saw his picture in the paper.
Q. Did you see it in P. M.?
A. No, I never read it.
Q. Did you see it in some other newspaper? More than once?
A. No.
Q. Over a period of time? Over a long period of time?
A. Say two months.
Q. And as you saw it from time to time and saw headlines with respect to it, did you get some idea with respect to him?
A. Well, yes.
Q. Be fair with me.
A. Yes.
[fol. 2459] Q. And that idea was unfavorable too?
A. Yes.
Q. It was? And it still is unfavorable?
A. At the present time, yes.
Q. Nothing has happened which would remove that unfavorable thought that you had concerning him?
A. No.

Q. And you would expect, consequently, that something should happen in the course of the trial by way of testimony which would remove that unfavorable idea that you have?

A. Yes.

Q. And I take it you would expect someone on behalf of defendant to offer that kind of testimony?

A. Yes.

Q. And if not you will still remain with that unfavorable impression?

A. Yes.

Q. And I take it that goes to the guilt or innocence of the man.

Mr. Barshay: I challenge him.

The Court: Try the challenge.

HANS HINZE, of 902 Ditmas Avenue, Brooklyn, New York, being duly sworn, testified as follows:

By Mr. Barshay:

Q. Now, under oath, if asked the same questions, would you make the same answers?

A. Yes, sir.

By Mr. Furkus:

Q. Would you, sir, if you were instructed by the Court that a defendant need offer no proof in a criminal case, would you accept that instruction of law?

A. Yes.

[fol. 2460] Q. And if you were told by the Judge in a criminal case that it is the duty of the District Attorney to establish guilt beyond a reasonable doubt, and his obligation and burden alone, would you follow that instruction of law?

A. Yes.

Q. And if the Judge were to tell you that a defendant may seat himself at a counsel table and remain mute—by remaining mute, I mean by saying nothing, offering no evidence and sitting still, and that no inference unfavorable to him could be drawn against him from the fact that he remained mute, would you follow that instruction of law?

A. Yes.

Q. Now, understanding that a defendant has no burden or obligation, is your impression that you have gathered one that you can put aside and decide this case on the evidence?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And have you got the mental willpower and the understanding where you can lay aside some impression you have gathered from a newspaper and decide the case on the evidence?

A. Oh, yes.

Q. And if accepted as a juror, will you decide this case on the evidence?

A. Oh, yes.

By the Court:

Q. Are you sure you can completely disregard it and decide the case upon the evidence?

A. Yes.

Q. Will you promise that you will?

A. Oh, yes.

Mr. Rosenthal: May I ask a couple of questions?

[fol. 2461] The Court: Yes.

Q. You recall me, sir?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. You were called as a juryman on a special panel about nine months ago?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. At that time you were challenged for cause, were you not?

A. I don't remember.

Q. The same way as now?

A. Yes.

Q. And the judge excused you and sustained the cause, is that correct, sir?

A. I presume so; I don't remember.

Q. Don't you recall whether or not at that time you were excused by the Court because of the fact that you had gained an opinion which was adverse at that time to those defendants?

A. No, not at all. At that time I had just started a new business after losing my import business, and I was needed in the business—it is a one-man business—and I asked the Judge to excuse me because I had to go West the following week on very important appointments to gain some agencies. Now I recall that.

Q. You were called on the stand, weren't you?

A. Yes, sir. Each juror was called on the stand.

Q. And you were sworn on the stand?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And do you recall whether or not counsel did not at that time say that he challenged you for cause?

A. I don't remember.

Q. Do you recall whether or not the Judge did not sustain at that time the cause?

[fol. 2462] A. I remember the Judge said, "You are excused."

Q. In this case you have an opinion that goes to the guilt or innocence of these defendants, have you not?

A. Formed an opinion?

Q. Yes.

A. Yes, as I testified.

By the Court:

Q. Do you understand the question? Have you formed an opinion—You are not listening.

A. Yes.

Q. Have you formed an opinion as to whether or not these defendants are guilty of this charge?

A. Of this charge?

Q. Yes, exactly.

A. No, I have not.

Q. Do you know anything about this charge?

A. Yes.

Q. Have you read about this charge?

A. No.

Q. You have not read about this charge?

A. I read about it four or five months ago.

Q. Did you read headlines?

A. Those two papers that I read.

Q. Did you read headlines about the alleged murder of Joseph Rosen?

A. No, sir.

Q. Did you read anything about the alleged connection of these defendants with that murder?

A. No.

By Mr. Rosenthal:

Q. Do you understand English well, Mr. Hinze?

A. Yes.

Q. Did you understand me when I asked you the question whether you had formed an opinion as to the guilt or in[fol. 2463] nocence of these defendants——

A. From what I had read?

Q. Yes.

A. Months ago.

Q. Certainly from what you had read.

A. Yes.

Q. And when you told me that you had formed an opinion concerning these defendants——

A. Only one, because I only read about one.

Q. As to one of the defendants. All right, put it that way. When you told me that you had formed an opinion as to one of these defendants on trial on this charge, did you mean it when you said yes?

A. No, I answered the Judge no, afterwards, because the Judge put it in a different way and I understood it better.

Q. You have a fixed opinion now as to the guilt or innocence of one defendant on trial here, haven't you?

A. No.

Q. Have you an opinion at all as to the guilt or innocence?

A. No.

Q. Of one of the defendants on trial?

A. No.

Q. When you answered Mr. Barshay, also, you said you had an opinion as to the guilt or innocence—just a minute—as to the guilt of one of the men on trial here. Didn't you say that?

A. Yes, as to the general—what would we call it—behavior, what kind of a man he is in general, not upon the guilt of a man.

Q. Then you have an opinion—let us put it this way—as to the character of one of the men on trial?

A. That is it.

[fol. 2464] Q. And that opinion——

A. Is not favorable.

Q. Is unfavorable?

A. Unfavorable.

Q. You are prejudiced against that particular individual, are you not?

A. Yes.

Q. And as you sit here now you are prejudiced as against that particular individual, aren't you?

A. Yes.

Q. It would take some evidence on his part to remove that prejudice from your mind, wouldn't it?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. You told me a few minutes ago that you would lay that completely aside and disregard it. Now you tell counsel that you would not, it would require evidence to remove it. You do not seem to know what you are talking about. Challenge is sustained.

By Mr. Barshay:

Q. Now, Mr. Berman, I have been going to that Sam's drug store for upwards of eleven years. Nine of those years I was Assistant District Attorney. Did you see me there during those years?

A. I don't think so.

Q. Did you ever speak to me in your life?

A. No.

Q. Do you ever remember me addressing you or speaking to you?

A. No, you addressed my wife, but not me.

Q. To your knowledge, do I know your wife?

A. At a Giant's baseball game, you sat in the box.

Q. But before that I did not know your wife?

A. I was not to that game.

[fol. 2465] Q. That was the last game of the Giants and Brooklyn Dodgers in Ebbets Field?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. We happened to have the same box?

A. Yes.

Q. And are you the man who- I later met in that drug store?

A. You saw.

Q. That is what I mean. Were we introduced at all?

A. No.

Mr. Barshay: I just want to state for the record that I have never seen or spoken to this man to my knowledge other than what he just stated, and I never met his wife before, and I did not know she was his wife.

Q. You won't hold that against my client, will you?

A. No.

Q. You belong to the Union Temple men's club, I think, with Assistant District Attorney Charles M. Cohen. Do you know him?

A. I do not know him.

Q. Do you know he belongs to that?

A. No, I do not.

Q. You live in the same house as candidate for County Judge Goldstein?

A. No, he lives 50 Plaza Street.

Q. Do you know of him?

A. Yes, I know of him from a business standpoint, not socially.

Q. Did you ever discuss, while discussing business, any of his work?

A. Only life insurance.

Q. And while he was an Assistant District Attorney, did you know him?

A. This all happened this year, the last six months.

Q. From your knowledge of any of the names mentioned, [fol. 2466] myself, Price, Charles M. Cohen, Assistant District Attorney, City Court Judge Goldstein, would that influence you with respect to the guilt or innocence of these defendants?

A. No.

Q. You said you read about the names.

A. Yes.

Q. Often?

A. No.

Q. By virtue of reading, did you form any opinion with respect to them?

A. No, my reading would go back to the original investigation, you might say in the beginning of '40, perhaps, and since then I have read nothing about it.

Q. Do you retain any of the facts that you read about it in '40?

A. Not at all.

Q. Then did you form any impression with respect to the defendants?

A. At that time?

Q. Yes.

A. I might have had an opinion at that time, but it has been since banished from my mind.

Q. And presently are you free of any prejudice?

A. Yes.

Q. Bias, or sympathy in this case?

A. Absolutely.

Q. Have you ever served as a juror?

A. Never.

Q. You said that your brother might have been a Grand Juror. Is that what you said?

A. I said that, but now that I think about it I don't think he was.

Q. Were you personally the victim of any crime?

A. No.

Q. Do you know any intimates in the Police Department?

A. No.

Q. Do you know anyone at all connected with Judge [fol. 2467] O'Dwyer's office?

A. I might say a friend of mine is a police captain.

Q. May I know his name?

A. Henley (?), two brothers.

Q. I know they have nothing to do with this case. One is in the Telegraph Bureau.

A. That is the answer.

Q. As you sat here and heard the other jurors being questioned, Mr. Berman, were you influenced in any direction whatever?

A. No.

Q. So, knowing none of the people involved and none of the facts in this case, as you say, may I ask you whether or not you are in accord with the principle of law which gives to a defendant a very substantial right known as the presumption of innocence.

A. Yes.

Q. And do you believe that the defendants sitting here now just as innocent under the law, presumed innocent under the law, as any person in this court-room?

A. That is right.

Q. And when they said, "Not guilty," it meant they denied anybody's accusation against them?

A. That is right.

Q. That is, they denied—speaking for my client—denied that he is anybody's accomplice and denied that he participated in the commission of the crime in any way whatever?

A. Yes.

Q. And you will use that presumption as evidence in this case?

A. Yes.

Q. And do you know further that when he said that, by his plea of Not Guilty in reality he said to the District At-[fol. 2468] torney, "Now, with competent and believable evidence, quality evidence, you go ahead and prove what you said in the indictment."

A. That is right.

Mr. Turkus: Both of those are bad instructions of law.

Q. Well, I am not giving you instructions of law.

Mr. Turkus: That is what they amounted to.

Q. You take them from the Court.

Mr. Turkus: Just a minute. I object to it.

The Court: Sustained.

Q. Mind you, Mr. Berman, at no time am I instructing you with respect to law. You take that from his Honor.

The Court: Every lawyer in the case has done a great deal of instructing as to the law. That is the reason the case has not been completed by this time.

Q. While I am trying to qualify you to find whether you will follow the law as his Honor shall give it to you, I may use different language, but you understand it now, that the burden of proof is with him. Maybe that will meet Mr. Turkus's objection. The burden of proof, when he assumes it, when the trial starts, is something that he assumes for all purposes and for all times, and never shifts to the defendant. You understand that?

A. That is right.

Q. In other words, the defendant need not explain any charge or accusation or piece of evidence against him. Do you believe he can sit there silently and from his silence [fol. 2469] you may draw no unfavorable inference; is that correct?

A. That is correct.

Q. And if, perchance, some juror may say, "Well, why did the others take the stand and explain? Mr. Buchalter didn't," you kindly call to their attention reasonably the instructions of the Court. Each counsel can plan his defense in a manner he sees fit. And don't take this on my part as a promise that Mr. Buchalter will not take the stand, but if he does, you will treat him like every other witness, won't you?

A. Yes.

Mr. Turkus: Just a minute. That is bad instruction.

Mr Barshay: I am not giving him instruction.

Mr. Turkus: I do not care what you call it. He is getting the juror to promise that if Mr. Buchalter takes the stand he will be treated like any witness. He is not entitled to be treated like any other witness.

Mr. Barshay: I object to that remark.

Mr. Turkus: No, you are forgetting something very important.

The Court: Regardless of the remark, the Court sustains the objection.

Mr. Barshay: My objection?

The Court: I think it is beyond the scope.

Mr. Barshay: You sustain my objection, sir? There are two objections at the same time.

The Court: Only one.

[fol. 2470] Mr. Barshay: I have an objection to Mr. Turkus's statement.

The Court: You cannot object to the statement.

Q. There are rules which govern a man's taking the stand as a witness in his own behalf. His Honor shall outline them. You will follow them?

A. Yes.

Q. One of them shall be that you may take into consideration the fact that on a previous occasion, only for the purpose of testing his credibility and for no other purpose, his past conviction; will you do that? He may even say to you, and I think he will, that the defendant is an interested witness as a matter of law. You will follow that instruction?

A. Yes.

Q. In all other respects, you will give him the same test as any other witness, won't you?

A. Yes.

Q. Are we clear on that point?

A. Yes.

Q. That is what I meant from the very beginning. You won't be prejudiced against him by virtue—You won't believe him less by virtue of those two convictions, if you find from all the evidence that you can believe the testimony that he gives?

The Court: Do I understand you are asking—What is that question?

(Pending question read.)

The Court: You mean if the witness takes the stand and shows he has criminal convictions, that the juryman may not consider it?

[fol. 2471] Mr. Barshay: I do not say that. Just the opposite. I say he may consider it and still believe he is telling the truth.

The Court: Of course, he may believe it.

Mr. Barshay: There is no quarrel.

The Court: Otherwise there may be no issue to submit to the jury.

Mr. Barshay: Exactly what I urge.

By the Court:

Q. You understand, Mr. Juryman, in view of what has been asked—and it is quite far afield of what is proper in examination of a talesman—when a man takes the stand you are entitled to know if he is a convict and you are entitled to consider that in determining whether or not he is worthy of belief. If the Court so charges you, will you follow it?

A. Yes, sir.

By Mr. Barshay:

Q. You heard that very often throughout the days that you have been here, isn't that so?

A. Yes.

The Court: No further on questions of law. You will only work longer.

Q. Now with respect to the person who claims he is an accomplice, his Honor will charge you quite differently, and without taking the province of the Court, briefly I may say to you you must look with suspicion and caution and care [fol. 2972] with respect to him. He has a special way of being tested. Will you do that?

A Yes.

Q. First you will want to know whether he is an accomplice, won't you?

A. Yes.

Q. Then you will want to know why he is giving his testimony, won't you?

A. Yes.

Q. Then you will want to know whether he has a motive to give the testimony, won't you?

A. Yes.

Q. Then you will want to know whether or not he expects any reward for giving such testimony, won't you?

A. Yes.

The Court: I wish some objections would be made. We would have had this jury selected two or three weeks ago if there had been more objections.

By the Court:

Q. Will you follow all instructions of the Court?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. On questions of law?

A. Absolutely.

Q. Strictly?

A. Definitely.

The Court: You cannot try the case on every point of law that may come up.

Mr. Barshay: I cannot understand. All along we have questioned the prospective jurors along this line.

The Court: It has made a farce in the selection of the [fol. 2473] jury, a public scandal.

Mr. Barshay: I object to your Honor addressing that to the defense.

The Court: I have said all I am going to say.

Mr. Barshay: And I take an exception to it.

The Court: Very well, make it double-barreled. Now go ahead.

I tell you right now, when you get through those seats are going to be filled again. The examination is going to continue. There has been no juryman selected today, and the Court is not going to be influenced in the matter of time.

Mr. Barshay: Just a second. I take an exception to that remark. It seems to me that every time, at the close of the day, when I continue to question a juror——

The Court: Never mind what it seems to you. Will you kindly proceed with the case?

Mr. Barshay: I am trying to.

The Court: And stop trying to goad the Court into reversible error, because the Court will not be goaded. You will be the loser in the long run of any altercation in which you involve the Court.

Mr. Barshay: It seems sometimes the Court tries to involve me in an argument.

The Court: The Court has its wits, is not angry, is not [fol. 2474] provoked, and is not losing its head. Now please proceed.

Mr. Barshay: I just want it known, your Honor, that I questioned a juror the same way only two hours ago, and there was not a single word either from the District Attorney or Your Honor.

The Court: You will please proceed. You are out of order.

Mr. Barshay: Respectfully except.

By Mr. Barshay:

Q. I take it this argument on my part won't influence you one way or the other in this case?

A. No.

Q. I am sure you feel, as a juror, that counsel can make a reasonable effort in qualifying prospective jurors; correct?

A. Yes.

Q. From all the evidence in the case, taking into consideration the background of the person who claims to be an accomplice and all other things with respect to him, let us say for the sake of argument you do believe, if the Court shall tell you that you cannot convict upon the uncorroborated testimony of that person, assuming you do believe him, will you follow that?

A. Yes.

Q. And you will want independent proof, independent of this alleged accomplice's testimony, to find out whether or not he is corroborated? Won't you expect that?

A. Yes, sir.

[fol. 2475] Q. And if it comes from a source no better than that of the accomplice, you will consider that, won't you?

A. Yes.

Q. And you will weigh it carefully. And the same rule will apply as to the defendant, if they have prior convictions or prior admissions of commissions of murders and other crimes, you will weigh carefully their testimony before you say, "I believe such independent evidence," and call it corroboration; will you do that?

A. Yes.

Q. And if you find that they have a motive for giving such testimony, you will use that as a rule in measuring whether you accept it or not?

A. Yes.

Q. And if you find that their testimony has been given because of some inducement, admittedly or not, held out to them, if you believe it, you will weigh that, too?

A. Yes.

Mr. Turkus: I object to that. That question is ambiguous. I do not know whether it is if you believe the accomplice or you believe the inducement.

Mr. Barshay: I am past the accomplice stage, Mr. Turkus.

The Court: Sustained.

Mr. Turkus: It has been sustained, so pass it some more.

Q. If you believe that a person who offers testimony tending to corroborate an alleged accomplice gives such testimony because he expects something for it, if you believe it, will you consider it?

Mr. Turkus: I object to the form of the question.

The Court: Overruled.

[fol. 2476] Q. Will you do that?

A. I will consider it.

Q. Now, Mr. Turkus has said something about finding fault with the District Attorney who solves a case from the inside. I take it you understand that your job as a juror is not to find fault with any individual in the case, merely decide on the evidence. And I take it that because the District Attorney or some Assistant accepts the testimony of an accomplice, you are not to be influenced by that?

A. No.

Q. You will be the one to decide whether you shall, isn't that so?

A. Yes.

Q. Each defendant here is entitled to a separate trial.

even though they are being tried together. Can I have your promise that you will consider the evidence given with respect to one defendant only against the defendant whom it applies to unless the Court shall charge you otherwise?

A. Yes.

Q. And no matter how long the trial takes, you will keep that principle in mind?

A. Yes.

Q. The fact that the District Attorney opens to the jury first—we don't have to if we don't want to—will not influence you in believing what he says to be evidence in the case unless later it becomes evidence from the witness stand?

A. Yes.

Q. In other words, remarks from here are not evidence. Mr. Turkus has also said to some jurors, because three lawyers may use the same argument on you you should [fol. 2477] not think that the argument is stronger. By the same quality of reasoning, Mr. Berman, sometimes when an argument is repeated it loses its weight. You understand that?

A. Yes.

Q. But you also understand that each counsel has a right to urge his argument in the light in which he sees it, irrespective of any other; is that so?

A. Yes.

Q. And I shall take it you won't allow it to lose weight because it is repeated by other counsel?

A. That is right.

Q. And if it aids you and coincides with your interpretation of the evidence, you will so regard it. So, Mr. Berman, you promise to listen to whatever law the Court shall give, but after reasoning with your fellow jurors as to the facts, listening to their explanations, having formed your own opinion, will you be the exclusive judge of the facts and of the believability of every witness yourself?

A. Yes.

Q. And can Mr. Buchalter entrust to you the preservation of his legal rights?

A. Yes.

Q. And if you fail to be convinced beyond a reasonable doubt, I take it you would not hesitate to say so?

A. Yes.

By Mr. Rosenthal:

Q. Mr. Berman, I do not know whether you were asked whether you know Mr. Turkus or Mr. Sol Klein, who is now an Assistant District Attorney and who was formerly with David Price.

Mr. Turkus: He was not. He has handled some appeals for Price, but he never was in his office.

[fol. 2478] Q. Did you say that you knew Mr. Kleinman?

A. I do not know Mr. Kleinman nor Mr. Klein nor Mr. Turkus.

Q. Have you ever at any time heard any speeches, either over the radio or in any men's club or association with respect to crime?

A. No.

Q. I take it that this inspector that you know, or captain, is his son a lawyer?

A. His son is a lawyer out in Queens. I do not know him very well.

Q. You have never discussed any police matter?

A. No.

Q. Have you ever sat on a criminal case to conclusion?

A. No.

Q. When the Judge charged the jury on the law? You realize, or do you realize, that the fact that the defendants have been indicted raises or should raise no presumption in your mind of their guilt? As you sit in the jury box now is your mind such that you would start off at scratch, and is your mind further such that you will compel the District Attorney, through witnesses whom you believe, to prove to your satisfaction beyond a reasonable doubt the guilt of each of these defendants?

A. That is right.

Q. You understand that the Judge, whether you like it or not, will tell you the law, which is binding in this case. And you understand, whether anybody else likes it or not, that your duty is to determine the facts, irrespective of what anyone may say, and I include in that all lawyers for [fol. 2479] The People and defense, and include the Judge also. You understand that?

A. Yes.

Q. In so far as the defendant—I do not know whether you were present in court when I explained that the defendant represented by myself and associates is the defendant Capone. So far as the evidence, or my examination of any witnesses is concerned, or my placing in evidence any proof, it is on behalf of that defendant. Is that clear?

A. Yes.

Q. You do not feel, sir, that merely because three men are seated together here on trial, that necessarily that means that these three men are involved in the crime charged, do you?

A. No.

Q. The time may come when the Court will charge you that certain evidence adduced by witnesses is applicable to one or more defendants, or to all, and do you understand that then your job will be to see to it in the jury room that you only permit discussion as to any particular defendant in accordance with the instructions of the law given by the Court as far as the particular testimony applicable to him?

A. Yes.

Q. You find no fault with that?

A. No.

Q. The bringing of men together and trying them as one has not got the effect upon you that you feel that necessarily—I don't try to infer that anyone is guilty here—each attorney takes care of his own client and knows the facts in so far as his client is concerned, you understand, and so by making a statement, which I intend to make, it [fol. 2480] is no reflection upon any of the other defendants or what their defense may be, which is known to them exclusively. That is clear?

A. That is right.

Q. You don't feel that because one of a group may be guilty that necessarily because three are on trial that the three must be guilty?

A. No.

Q. And you, if you are called or accepted as a juryman, will see to it that in so far as the proof against my client is concerned, that it convinces you beyond a reasonable doubt as to his guilt before you convict him?

A. Yes.

Q. Any statement that I may make in the short examination that I will give you as to law, is with no intent on my part to invade the province of the Judge; is that clear?

A. Yes.

Q. The only purpose that I may have in mind in even talking about the law is to ascertain whether you as a citizen, with a perfect right to have an opinion of your own, have a different idea as to the law, which would suborn the idea or the law as charged by the Court. That is the only reason, is that clear?

A. Yes.

Q. In accordance with our law, no man can be convicted of a crime on the uncorroborated testimony of an accomplice, even though you do believe that the accomplice is telling the truth. Is that clear to you?

A. Yes.

Q. Now, then, assuming that after listening to the charge of the Court, that the Court instructs you that that is the [fol. 2481] law, and in looking through the evidence and sifting it you were unable to find other evidence of a nature which tends to connect the defendant with the crime, would you hesitate to acquit the defendant?

A. No.

Q. The Court will further charge you that corroboration does not consist of one or more accomplices saying the same thing. One accomplice is no better than a hundred accomplices; is that clear to you?

A. Yes.

Q. So that in searching the evidence, if the Court were to charge you that that is the law, you would not feel that because more than one accomplice has told you the same story, that that is the evidence which is required by law, if you were instructed by the Court that the evidence must be independent of that given by accomplices, no matter how many they are—would you, sir?

Mr. Turkus: It is not a complete definition of the law. It is not adequate.

The Court: Hearing the question, I do not know what it means. Sustained.

Mr. Rosenthal: I respectfully except. If your Honor had heard the question before, then the meaning would be clear to your Honor as to what——

[fol. 2482] The Court: Please do not argue.

Mr. Rosenthal: I respectfully except.

Q. If you were charged by the Court that independent evidence must be of a nature that comes from a source other than that of accomplices, no matter how many, would you follow that instruction, sir?

Mr. Turkus: I object to it. It is not an adequate definition.

The Court: Sustained.

Mr. Rosenthal: Respectfully except.

Q. Do you find any fault——

The Court: I do not know, gentlemen, if you understand the Court's viewpoint. There are so many things that, as points of law, may or may not be embraced in the Court's charge, it is not permissible in examining talesmen to take any and every question of law that the human mind can think of and ask a juryman as to whether he will follow it in the event the Court so charges. I cannot believe that law in this state permits the examination of talesmen to go so far afield. It wears out those who are in the box, makes them wish that they had not been accepted, before the taking of testimony begins. If you can reasonably get this jury assembled and start the testimony rolling, the case won't take long. The Court has to sit here and watch and count [fol. 2483] peremptory challenges, knowing that once the peremptory challenges, on either side, are exhausted, the jury will be very quickly assembled. Up to date, including those who have been accepted tentatively, adding to that the peremptory challenges on both sides, we have had enough to fill this box four times over.

Now, please proceed, and now that you know the Court's point of view, it may possibly expedite. If it does not, the Court will still be patient and see to it that no reversible error is recorded by due exception on the record.

Mr. Rosenthal: May I respectfully except to your Honor directing your remarks to defense counsel, when the District Attorney has taken as much time as all defense counsel put together?

The Court: I said "gentlemen." That includes the District Attorney.

Mr. Turkus: I did not take as much time as the nine of them at all.

The Court: That was plural. I want no argument about it. Please proceed. You are just going to use more time, and you are not going to let the Court lose its head. It won't do it in this case.

By Mr. Rosenthal:

Q. In the event, sir, that it appears that the prosecution offers evidence—I am asking you this because there has been [fol. 2484] brought out by the District Attorney—in the form of an accomplice, and you are instructed by the Court that no man could be convicted on the uncorroborated testimony of an accomplice, even if you believe the accomplice, and that he could not be convicted unless there were other evidence independent in its source tending to connect the defendant with the crime, would you follow that instruction of law?

A. Yes.

Q. And if you were unable, after looking through the evidence, to find evidence of a character that satisfied you that it was independent in its nature, would you hesitate to acquit the defendant?

A. No.

Q. It may appear that in the wisdom of counsel, myself as attorney for Capone, that the defendant will take the stand. Have you any feeling that because a man is charged with crime that he, the defendant, necessarily would tell you an untruth? Have you any such innate feeling? Do you feel, sir, that the truth from the defendant is just as valuable as the truth from any other source?

A. Yes.

Q. And if the defendant were to take the stand—let me withdraw that and put it this way: You have heard from Mr. Turkus and others the fact explained that at no time does the defendant have to prove his innocence. At all times the People must establish the guilt. With that knowledge and that thought in mind, have you any opinion, sir, that because the defendant takes the stand that the burden would [fol. 2485] shift over to him to prove his innocence?

A. No.

Q. The defendant may also offer proof that at the time this crime is alleged to have been committed, that he was elsewhere, in the form of other witnesses. That is what we call in law an alibi. If such proof were offered, and the Court were to instruct you that under such circumstances, if the alibi witnesses raised a doubt in your mind as to the guilt of the defendant, a reasonable doubt, I should say, in your mind as to the guilt of this defendant, that that reasonable doubt, the same as any other reasonable doubt, must be resolved in his favor and you must acquit, would you follow that law?

A. Yes.

Q. Do I make clear to you the statement that I made?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. The fact that any defendant may know or have met or even been out with some of The People's witnesses, the mere association, without your belief in the fact that the particular defendant participated in the crime, would that prejudice you against him?

A. No.

Q. There are certain police officers, Lieutenant Osnato, Captain Bals, Detective Paddy Meehan, McCarthy, Swift, who may have some association with this case. Do any of those names strike a responsive chord?

A. (No answer.)

Q. The District Attorney has asked you about whether you find fault with the District Attorney who solves the case [fol. 2486] from the inside by using an accomplice. Do you remember that?

A. Yes.

Q. That does not raise the inference in your mind that this particular case has been solved, because some person who calls himself an accomplice has told the District Attorney that these defendants are involved?

A. Only the method.

Q. In other words, the question as to whether or not, in so far as these defendants are concerned, the case has been solved, is one for you to determine; isn't that right? It is for you to determine what force or weight you will give to this man who now calls himself an accomplice of the defendant, testimony, is that right? In doing that, if you are told by the Court that in all cases where accomplice testimony is used that you must, whether you like it or not, view the testimony of that accomplice with suspicion, caution, and wariness before you accept it as true, will you do that?

A. Yes.

Q. And if you are further told by the Court that in viewing the testimony of any witness, whether it be an accomplice or one who allegedly is supplying the independent evidence, that you have a right to take into consideration, among other things, the motive, if any, that the person has in making the statement that he does, what promise has been made to him, for instance, for any crimes that he may have committed for which he does not expect to receive any punishment, and any other fact which will enable you to determine whether or not that person is likely to be tell[fol. 2487] ing the truth about the defendants when he testifies, will you do that?

A. Yes.

Q. It is not your impression, sir, or is it your impression, that because a so-called accomplice takes the stand and tells you that he, the accomplice, shot somebody and killed him, and because some policeman goes on the stand and shows that he found the body of that man, and somebody shows that he was shot, that necessarily that particular individual is telling the truth about the defendants? Is that your impression?

Mr. Turkus: Objected to.

The Court: Sustained.

Mr. Rosenthal: I respectfully except.

Q. Do you understand, sir, that whereas the accomplice may be telling the truth about himself, he may be lying as far as other people are concerned?

A. Yes.

Q. Never having sat on a jury before, do you understand that you are entitled to form your own opinion as to what the evidence is? Is that correct?

A. Yes.

Q. Having formed an opinion, it is your duty to listen to others as to their opinion. You understand that also?

A. Yes.

Q. Having reasoned with your fellow jurymen, if you come to the conclusion that the opinion which you have formed is the correct opinion, and they are unable to reason logically that you are wrong, would you, because of [fol. 2488] your inexperience as a juryman, lateness of hour, or any other reason, suborn your opinion to those of the others?

Having been asked whether you have any fear or hesitation in coming in with a verdict of Guilty if you were convinced beyond a reasonable doubt of the guilt of the defendant, let me ask you whether or not, in view of the publicity that may have been given to this case, you have the courage and fortitude to come in with a verdict of Not Guilty if you are not convinced beyond a reasonable doubt of the guilt of these defendants. Have you that courage?

A. Yes.

By the Court:

Q. May I ask, was your father in the insurance business?
A. No.
Q. Did you know David Berman?
A. No. We have no relation by the name of Berman.
Q. This man would be about seventy-six.
A. No.
Q. He was in your line of business. Do you know who I mean?
A. No.

Mr. Turkus: Peremptory.

The Court: Why didn't you say that an hour ago? I knew you were going to say it. Call two gentlemen.

(The following talesmen were called and took their places in the jury box: Joseph J. Slonim, 74 Beaumont Street; John J. Dempsey, 2144 East 13th Street.)

Mr. Turkus: I ask the Court to recess for the supper hour.

[fol. 2489] The Court: No. You brought this on yourself. You should have exercised your challenge at the time you decided you were going to. Get a glass of Coca-Cola for Mr. Turkus.

Mr. Turkus: Never mind.

The Court: Get a cup of water.

Mr. Turkus: It is four hours since we have had lunch.

The Court: All right. Take it on tae chin.

By Mr. Turkus:

Q. Mr. Slonim, I take it that you have heard a lot of questions here?
A. Right.
Q. Have you heretofore served as a juror in a criminal case?
A. I did.
Q. More than once?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. Was any of the cases recent?
A. I served the early part of this year.
Q. What judge was that?
A. Brancato.
Q. Were any of the lawyers in this case defense lawyers in that case?
A. No, sir.

Q. Do you recall the name of the Assistant District Attorney who prosecuted?

A. No.

Q. Was it a murder case?

A. Yes.

Q. Did the case go to a conclusion?

A. The defendant took the plea before it went to the jury.

Q. You sat in other criminal cases?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. More than two?

A. In every court with the exception of Judge Leibowitz.

[fol. 2490] Q. Then you know what it is all about?

A. I do.

Q. You are listed here as an Assistant Vice-President. Is that a corporation?

A. Trust Company.

Q. You have been in the banking business long?

A. Thirty-six years.

Q. It should not be too difficult for you to get over this thing with me very quickly. Does business bring you into contact with firms or individuals in the garment and clothing business?

A. It does.

Q. Does your livelihood as an Assistant Vice-President depend upon the good will of any of those manufacturers?

A. Of all customers.

Q. One of the defense lawyers wants to know if you know Judge Liebowitz.

A. Very well, personal friend.

By the Court:

Q. You are a neighbor?

A. Right.

Q. Down at Manhattan Beach?

A. Manhattan Beach.

Q. You visit at one another's homes?

A. Right.

By Mr. Turkus:

Q. Getting back to this clothing and garment district business, do you know any officials of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers of America?

A. No, sir.

Q. I take it, then, that you have some customers who deposit money with the Manufacturers and manufacture clothing?

[fol. 2491] A. Other wearing apparel.

By the Court:

Q. Mr. Dempsey, I am trying to place you. You know me, don't you?

A. Well, I have seen you before.

Q. Sheepshead Bay?

A. Right.

Q. You were a new man. What business were you in?

A. Lawyers Mortgage Company.

Q. What position did you hold there?

A. Inspector.

Q. That was for Mr. Fair over on——

A. Madison Avenue.

Q. When I knew you, that was downtown?

A. Montague Street.

Q You were an inspector of buildings for the purpose of appraisals?

A. That is right.

Q. On applications for mortgage loans. When did you retire?

A. About three years.

Q. What section did you cover on your inspections?

A. Brooklyn, Kings only.

Q. All over?

A. And then later on The Bronx and Manhattan.

Q. Did you inspect as to the condition of the premises or as to the appraisal value?

A. Both.

Mr. Barshay: May we take a minute of the Court's time at the bench, Mr. Turkus and myself? We may save a lot of time.

The Court: Come right up.

(Mr. Turkus and Mr. Barshay conferred with the Court at the bench.)

The Court: This is strictly one exception to the rule of [fol. 2492] challenge by consent, but it is to save time. Mr. Slonim is excused by consent of both sides. Right?

Mr. Climenko: That is correct.

Mr. Talley: Yes.

The Court: Call another gentleman to take his seat.

(Henry Gierie, No. 3083, was called and took Seat No. 12 in the jury box.)

Mr. Turkus: (to Mr. Joseph) Send for Mr. Klein to take over.

The Court: Are you actually too tired?

Mr. Turkus: You don't think I am playing a game with you. You know I am under a doctor's care.

The Court: Please, we will have dignity.

Mr. Turkus: Yes, your Honor.

The Court: The Court is displeased at the way the three last examinations were prolonged unnecessarily when the Court was persuaded of what you intended to do, but I will, nevertheless, forgive you for it.

All counsel, everybody, wants an adjournment. But the defendants will remain seated and counsel remain here a few minutes longer.

(To jurors) Gentlemen, kindly be in your place at ten o'clock. Do not discuss the case, let nobody talk to you about it. Keep your minds open. Read nothing. Do not listen to the radio about it.

[fol. 2493] (The jury left the court-room.)

The Court: All other talesmen may go until ten o'clock tomorrow morning.

Philip I. Nash, M. D., of 3100 Ocean Parkway, Brooklyn, New York, being duly sworn, testified as follows:

By the Court:

Q. You are the former president of the Kings County Medical Society?

A. I am, your Honor.

Q. And have been for many years the medical head of the Coney Island Hospital?

A. Thirty years.

Y. Have been practicing how many years?

A. Going on forty years, seven years professor of clinical medicine, Long Island College of Medicine.

Q. And are you Medical Assistant to the District Attorney?

A. I am, your Honor.

Q. This afternoon the defendant Capone exhibited what might or might not be interpreted as symptoms of angina, whereupon the court recessed and an ambulance was summoned from the Long Island College Hospital, the surgeon arriving about fifteen minutes later and making his examination. The surgeon has testified that he found the defendant to be normal at the time of his examination in all respects except that he found a certain amount of hyperten- [fol. 2494] sion, which is not unusual in people of his age. Can you state with reasonable certainty whether the defendant under those conditions would or would not at the time of such examination show symptoms of having had an angina attack within the preceding fifteen or twenty minutes?

A. He would, your Honor.

Q. Will you state what those symptoms would be?

A. If his pain was relieved, he would be in the state of collapse. His blood pressure would have dropped from hypertension to hypotension.

Q. That means it would have gone down instead of up?

A. Gone down instead of up, and his heart rate would not necessarily be slower. It may be a little rapid, but the rythm would be irregular

Q. Would he be able to appear normal upon examination and to return to court, walk down a flight of stairs and resume the trial?

A. Not after a coronary thrombosis or an angina attack.

Q. How long would the collapsed condition continue?

A. For hours.

Q. For several hours?

A. For several hours.

Q. Dr. Torre was here yesterday following a letter received by him concerning instructions from the Department of Correction. Those instructions were, briefly, that medication was to be given as indicated upon the defendant Capone leaving for the court every morning, but he was not [fol. 2495] permitted to carry any on his person for discretionary use in court. When Dr. Torre was here I requested him to get in touch with Commissioner Goldman and ask for the authority to provide sensibly against any contingency by providing the defendant Capone each morning with a sufficient quantity of medication to be used in the defendant's discretion in event of any real or imagined attack. I ask you now if you will be so good as to get in touch with Dr. Torre at once and urge him to press the Commissioner for favorable action upon that request, so that a reasonable amount of medication may be provided to the defendant to carry on his person tomorrow morning and thereafter each morning. Will you do that, Doctor?

A. I will, your Honor.

The Court: Thank you.

Mr. Rosenthal: May I ask the doctor a question?

The Court: Yes.

By Mr. Rosenthal:

Q. Would you take the responsibility that this man does not need medication, Doctor?

A. That he does not need medication?

Q. Yes.

A. I did not say——

Q. I am asking you will you accept the responsibility that he does not need medication? That is the only question I want to ask you.

A. I would not say that you did not or I did not or any-[fol. 2496] body else. No, I would not say that of anyone in the court-room.

Mr. Rosenthal: That is all I want to ask you, Doctor.

By the Court:

Q. Did you, upon your examination of the defendant last week—I think it was Thursday, when you had him in the medical room and gave him a heart and coronary examination, did you find any evidence whatever of angina pectoris or coronary disease?

A. I did not.

Mr. Rosenthal: May I ask him a question?

By Mr. Rosenthal:

Q. Did you advise the Court that the Court better not sit late hours with this defendant, that it would be better that this man was not put under a strain of late hours?

The Court: He based that upon the hospital report.

Mr. Rosenthal: I ask the doctor——

The Court: I am telling you.

Mr. Rosenthal: If I have no right, I won't ask any questions.

The Court: The doctor gave such advice to the Court in chambers, in chambers, in the absence of the press.

Mr. Rosenthal: I am asking now that the Court has made it public.

[fol. 2497] The Court: Don't interrupt the Court. And you know as well as the Court what was said, and you are not going to put the Court on the spot. Will you please remain silent while the Court is addressing you? The doctor gave that advice upon your calling his attention to your information that upon an electrocardiogram there was a report of coronary trouble, and you know that as well as I do, and the Court——

Mr. Rosenthal: In view of the fact that we have——

The Court: The Court has done its best to be conscientious in this decision, but will not be fooled by any apparently sham attacks, particularly in view of the sham that was pulled before the Court with tablets which were counted by the clerk one night last week, which was a quadruple dose of luminal producing a luminal toxic effect, which was pronounced in the press as being a cardiac attack.

The Court now recesses.

Mr. Rosenthal: Whatever this man took, he took under the instruction of physicians over whom he has no control.

The Court: I won't quarrel with you. I strongly suspect that he was handed the medication.

Mr. Rosenthal: There is no basis for that.

The Court: Because it is denied at the jail that it was given by the physicians. They strongly deny——

[fol. 2498] Mr. Rosenthal: May I ask——

The Court: You will be silent. He had enough of the medication to kill several persons.

Mr. Rosenthal: May I ask the doctor——

The Court: You may not ask anything now. You will come to order, because I strongly suspect a trick, and all the Court wants to do here is to see that the Court is not put on the spot with false reports and misleading reports in the press as to the Court's sincerity and desire to act as an impartial judge, but not be fooled.

Mr. Rosenthal: There is no basis——
The Court: The Court has recessed.
The defendants are remanded.
Mr. Rosenthal: And I except to it.

(An adjournment was thereupon taken to Thursday, October 16, 1941, at 10:00 A. M.)

[fol. 2499] Brooklyn, N. Y., October 16, 1941.

Trial Resumed

By Mr. Turkus:

Q. Mr. Gierie, is that the pronunciation?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. Do you reside at 3717 Avenue R?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. You are listed as an assistant superintendent. Is that with the City of New York?
A. The Guaranty Trust Company of New York.
Q. Has that been your business for a number of years?
A. All my life.
Q. I take it while you were seated with the other prospective jurymen you heard me address certain questions about the Brownsville and the East New York sections and the garment and the clothing industries?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. And the clothing truckers?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. Is there anything about those items that the District Attorney should know?
A. No—I know someone in East New York, a policeman: at the present time he is out on Empire Boulevard.
Q. He is a detective or a patrolman?
A. Patrolman, Gierie. He does not figure in the case at all.
Q. Have you heretofore served as a juror at any time?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. In the Supreme Court?
A. In the County Court.
Q. On criminal cases?
A. Yes, sir.

[fol. 2500] Q. Was it since January 1, 1940?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. Do you remember the name of the Judge?
A. Judge Taylor.
Q. Were any lawyers in the case present who are now in court?
A. No, sir.
Q. Did you actually serve on the jury?
A. No, sir.
Q. Were you examined by me?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. Did I say you were satisfactory?
A. Yes, sir.

By Mr. Turkus:

Q. Mr. Dempsey, what is your business?
A. Retired.
Q. What was your business?
A. Lawyers Mortgage Company, inspector.
Q. You must speak up loudly, so we can get it on the record. Do you live in East 13th Street?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. Is that in Flatbush?
A. They call it Sheepshead Bay.
Q. Have you lived there for a number of years?
A. In that section about fifteen years.
Q. Have you beea retired a number of years?
A. About three.
Q. Are you engaged in any occupation whatever?
A. No, sir.
Q. How long were you with the Mortgage Company?
A. Thirty-two years.
Q. While with the Mortgage Company, what work did you do? Was it appraisal?
A. Inspecting buildings, investigating.
Q. Did your business bring you in contact with the Brownville or East New York section?
A. All over the city.
Q. Is there anything that has come to your attention [fol. 2501] while you had business for the Title Company that either by way of hearsay or information you heard anything about the defendants?
A. No, sir.

Q. Or about any of the names I mentioned?

A. No, sir.

Q. Did you hear the examination with regard to accomplice testimony?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you have any different feeling than any other juror?

A. No, sir.

Q. Will you if accepted as a juror devote your mental faculties to finding out does the accomplice speak the truth about the defendants at the bar and is there other evidence tending to connect them with the commission of the crime?

A. I don't get that.

Q. Part of the testimony in this case will come from one who is known in law as an accomplice.

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you understand an accomplice is one who is himself implicated in the commission of the crime?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. I say to you that part of the testimony in the State's case will emanate from such source, will come from one of the men who was in on the commission of this crime.

A. Yes, sir.

Q. I want to know whether you have any bias or prejudice either against the prosecutor of the county, Judge O'Dwyer, or against the prosecution of an indictment wherein the testimony of one who himself worked in a group or combination to kill the victim named in the indictment, if you have any fault to find or any prejudice against that kind of a prosecution.

[fol. 2502] A. No, sir.

Q. Don't take my word for it that the case was broken from the inside. That will be your job to find out, if that is not so when you hear the evidence. Let me tell you this: Are you prepared to give these defendants everything the law of the land says they shall have, no more and no less?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. That is our job. Our job is prosecutor, your job is to determine the question of guilt, giving the defendants everything they are entitled to, certainly not less, obviously not more?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. After hearing all of the evidence in the case, if you have a reasonable doubt, you will say it, I am sure?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. But if you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt, when you hear the evidence, that Judge O'Dwyer will present in this court, will you have any fear or will you hesitate to render that kind of a verdict which reflects the finding of guilt?

A. No, sir.

Q. Is there anything I should know about your qualifications to sit on this jury?

A. Well, I would like to have you ask me questions personally if I am not prejudiced.

Q. Have you a prejudice against the defendants?

A. I have no prejudice against them; I think I can give them a square deal, as far as the man in jail is concerned, but I cannot get out of my mind that it will only end one way, the case.

[fol. 2503] Mr. Barshay: I will challenge him without question.

The Court: Try the challenge.

JOHN J. DEMPSEY, residing at 2144 East 13th Street, Brooklyn, New York, sworn on the challenge.

By Mr. Turkus:

Q. When you were seated in Seat No. 12 in the jury box you made certain responses, when I asked you whether there was anything I should know, and you told me something about prejudice.

A. Yes, sir.

Q. I do not want to repeat my questions, nor do I want to repeat your answer, but would you say the same thing now that you are under oath?

A. Yes, sir.

Mr. Climenko: No questions, your Honor, from the defense.

The Court: Challenge sustained.

Mr. Talley: Will your Honor see me at the bench for a moment in regard to the selection of the jury? It is rather important.

The Court: Yes.

(All counsel and Mr. Turkus appear before the bench and confer without the hearing of the panel.)

By the Court:

Q. Mr. Gierie, you are an assistant superintendent?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. What does that mean?

A. Taking care of all the property the Guaranty Trust [fol. 2504] Company owns and occupies, and as far as alterations are concerned, and taking care of all the help.

Q. You are the man that has charge of the buildings?

A. One of them; the superintendent and my boss has charge of all buildings.

Q. Are you in one of the branches?

A. I am downtown, in the main office. We take care of the Fifth Avenue office, too, and our other office at 60th Street, and we have a group of buildings downtown, about seven or eight.

Q. That would be just about the same as Superintendent of Public Buildings in Brooklyn, the Deputy Superintendent in charge of different buildings?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. You are not connected with the banking business?

A. No, sir, they feed me, that is about all.

Q. You don't object to that?

A. No, sir.

Q. When you were questioned—this is just yes or no—when you were questioned in the case several minutes ago as to whether or not you knew certain names, did these names register in your mind?

A. Yes, sir.

Mr. Barshay: We challenge.

The Court: Try the challenge.

Henry Gierie, residing at 3717 Avenue R, Brooklyn, New York, was sworn on the challenge.

By Mr. Talley:

Q. You were asked some questions by His Honor?

A. Yes, sir.

[fol. 2505] Q. Before you were sworn?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, having been sworn, if you were asked the same questions by the Court or by counsel, would your answers be the same?

A. Yes, sir, the same.

By Mr. Turkus:

Q. Could you, if accepted on this jury, render justice by your verdict and give the defendants every benefit which the law of the land says they shall have?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Can you decide this case justly and impartially to both sides?

A. Yes, sir.

The Court: Well, the Court, of course, has to divorce the record and consult its own recollection. My notion is there might be implied bias. It is reasonable to assume there may one develop. He says there is one present now, and therefore this man should be executed. I sustain the challenge.

(By direction of the Court, the following talesmen were then called: Moe Hiller, No. 3093; James A. Long, No 3088.)

Moe Hiller, was then examined as to his qualifications to serve as a juror.

By Mr. Turkus:

Q. You reside in President Street?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. You look somewhat familiar to me. Have we met as juror and prosecutor before?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was Mr. Rosenthal also involved in the case where [fol. 2506] you were involved as a prospective juror?

A. I have a slight recollection he was; I am not positive.

Q. That has been since Judge O'Dwyer was District Attorney?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you remember the names I mentioned in the voir dire?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. They call it the voir dire. That is a French term. It means to speak the truth. I have a recollection of seeing this man as a juror.

By the Court:

Q. Do you live up near Albany Avenue?

A. No, sir, between New York and Nostrand.

Q. 1239 President Street?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. That is the south edge, what is known as Spotless Town?

A. That is what they term it on the next block. I believe the next block is Spotless Town.

Q. What is your business?

A. I am in the wholesale line.

Q. What line?

A. Ribbons.

Q. Do you belong to the Parkway Democratic Club?

A. No, sir.

By Mr. Turkus:

Q. The case in which Mr. Rosenthal was counsel, was that recently? Do you remember what month?

A. I think it was the early part of this year.

Q. Was I the prosecutor in the case?

A. Yes, sir.

[fol. 2507] Q. Are any of those names familiar to you that we discussed with the prospective jurymen?

A. No, sir.

Q. None are familiar to you at all?

A. No, sir—you mean names of any particular case?

Q. Yes.

A. No, sir.

Q. Were there other names, like Abbandando, the Dasher?

A. I don't remember the names you mentioned.

Q. I think you got as far as you are now, you were examined by both the prosecutor and the defense?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And did I peremptorily challenge you?

A. I think you did.

Mr. Turkus: Then we will not waste any more time.

By Mr. Turkus:

Q. Mr. Long, you reside in the Park Slope?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Have you lived in that district a number of years?

A. Over twenty-four years.

Q. You are listed as a secretary. By whom are you employed?

A. Horace Butler.

Q. Is he a lawyer?

A. An architect.

Q. Have you been with him a number of years?

A. Sixteen.

Q. You heard the questions I addressed to the other jurymen. Is there anything you know now about Brownsville or East New York or the garment trade or garment industry?

A. No.

Q. Do you feel the same as the other prospective jurors who have been accepted did, about acomplice testimony?

A. Yes, sir.

[fol. 2508] Q. If accepted in this case, will you give the defendants at the bar every legal right they are supposed [fol. 2509] to have? The judge will tell you they are to be given the benefit of every right in our law of the land that inures to the defendants.

A. Yes, sir.

Q. If, after hearing all the evidence in the case, you have a reasonable doubt, you will say so by your verdict?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. After you hear all the evidence in the case, if you are convinced beyond a reasonable doubt that these three men are guilty participants in the murder of Rosen and that they each played a part in the combination or group as set forth by the witnesses that are produced, will you say it in your verdict without fear or hesitation?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, is there anything we should know about which disqualifies your sitting as a juror in this case?

A. I think I am prejudiced.

Mr. Barshay: I challenge the talesman.

Mr. Turkus: Let me finish with him.

Q. Is there something that you have read in the newspapers?

A. I have read in the newspapers, but not the entire articles.

Q. Is there anything you have read in the newspapers about these defendants that sticks in your memory?

A. No, sir.

Q. Are there things you have heard in court which prejudice you?

A. No, sir.

The Court: Is it a desire to get back to your work?

[fol. 2510] A. No, sir.

Q. We all have our jobs to play in this world. I have the job of being prosecutor. I have got to present the evidence of the People of the State of New York in criminal cases; that is my job.

Mr. Barshay: I object.

The Court: A jury has to be found—gentlemen have to be found who are willing to give service, so please have that in mind and consult the actual condition of your mind only in giving answers to each question.

The Talesman: That is what I am doing.

By Mr. Turkus:

Q. You did say to me that you would give the benefit to these defendants of every law of the land which was charged you they should have?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. If at the conclusion of the case, if you have a reasonable doubt, after hearing all the evidence, you would give them the benefit of that doubt?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. You did say that if you found they were guilty beyond a reasonable doubt you would say that?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Wherever you got this prejudice from, can you take that prejudice and lay it aside and decide this case on the evidence you hear in the court-room?

A. I don't think so.

Mr. Barshay: I challenge the talesman.

The Court: Try the challenge.

[fol. 2511] (James A. Long, residing at 466 Fifteenth Street, Brooklyn, New York, was sworn on the challenge.)

By the Court:

Q. That is between 6th and 7th Avenues?

A. 8th and 9th.

Q. Do you belong to the 12th Assembly District Democratic Club?

A. I belong to a club.

Q. Have you heard any talk there about this?

A. No, sir.

Q. What club is that?

A. The Ancient Order of Hibernians, the same that Mr. Rooney and Mr. O'Dwyer belong to.

Q. They are officers of the club?

A. No, sir, they are members.

Q. You would not let that influence you?

A. No, sir.

Q. You would not convict a man to accommodate some officers of a club?

A. No, sir.

Q. Do you know Mr. Cuff?

A. I do.

Q. Did you meet him at the Half Moon Hotel?

A. No, sir.

Q. The dinner?

A. No, sir, I was not there; I did not go to that.

Q. Do you remember the dinner?

A. Yes, sir.

By Mr. Rosenthal:

Q. Now that you have been sworn, would you make the same answers as you made when you were sitting in the jury box, to Mr. Turkus?

A. Yes, sir.

By Mr. Turkus:

Q. The answers you made to the questions of Judge Tay- [fol. 2512] lor, if those questions were to be repeated would you make the same answers now?

A. The same answers.

The Court: Some of the answers given in the box were not audible.

By the Court:

Q. Will you be able to put aside every notion you have in your head that will work against any of the defendants and give the defendants a square trial on the evidence?

A. No, sir, I don't think so.

The Court: Challenge sustained.

MOE HELLER, a talesman, was then examined as to his qualifications to serve as a juror.

By Mr. Turkus:

Q. Are you sure, Mr. Heller, there was a peremptory challenge by me in the case where Mr. Rosenthal was?
A. Quite sure.

Mr. Turkus: I will exercise a peremptory challenge now. There is no use of wasting time.

[fol. 2513] (Examination of CLEMENT S. JACOBUS—not sworn.)

By Mr. Turkus:

Q. Mr. Jacobus, do you reside on Clinton Avenue?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. Are you a real estate broker?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. In business for yourself?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. Where is your office?
A. No. 26 Court Street.
Q. Did you hear the question in regard to the clothing garment center in Manhattan, and about the Brownsville and East New York section in Brooklyn, and the water-front?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. Have you heretofore served on any jury?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. Has it been in this court?
A. I do not recall the name or what year—I was not on the jury, though.
Q. You never reached the jury box?
A. No, sir.
Q. Have you any scruples, conscientious or otherwise, against capital punishment?
A. No, sir.
Q. Do you know any of the nine lawyers in the case or anyone in their office?
A. No, sir.

Q. Do you know any lawyer who specializes in the defense of criminal cases?

A. No, sir.

Q. Do you know Mr. Barshay, who says he has an office in the building where you have your office?

A. I do not know him.

[fol. 2514] Q. There are just a few simple things I want to know about, and we can go along very hurriedly. Will you take the law exclusively from Judge Taylor in its every aspect?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Judge Taylor tells the jury what the law is, and the jury applies the law to the evidence in the case.

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Will you take the law Judge Taylor gives you with common sense, and apply it to the facts in this case?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. After hearing all the evidence in the case, if you have a reasonable doubt about guilty participation in the commission of this murder charged in the indictment by all the defendants or any one of them, you will give the defendants the benefit of that reasonable doubt?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. By the same token, if Judge O'Dwyer presents the evidence in this case—you do not form any opinion about what the evidence is from anything you hear in this voir dire—either by the defendants or the District Attorney—you only form your opinion when you get all of the evidence. After you get it, if you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that these three defendants are guilty of murder in the first degree and that each one took a part in this combination or group to kill the victim named in the indictment—that is what you hear here in open court—will you say so?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. With respect to the accomplice part of the testimony in this case, which will come from accomplices—and if you have any prejudice, you just let me know and I will go along [fol. 2515] quickly, and if you have none, let me know that too. Now, will you take all the tests the Judge gives you to find out does this accomplice in the case speak the truth about the part that each of these defendants played in the group or combination murder of the victim named in the indictment?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And do you understand that is the reason you apply the test, to find out does he speak the truth about their participation in this matter, and is there other evidence aside from the testimony of the accomplice which tends to connect these defendants and every one of them with the commission of the murder?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And will you apply your mental faculties to that determination?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now with regard to another point brought out by one of — defense lawyers, that his client has been convicted of other crimes and is serving now a jail term, would you relax or deviate from your duty as a juror in this case on account of that?

A. No.

Q. Is there anything that I should know as prosecutor which would affect your qualifications to sit as a juror and render a verdict in consonance with justice?

A. No, sir, I do not know of anything.

(John J. Dunphy was then questioned by Mr. Turkus.)

Q. You reside up near the Park Slope?

A. Yes, sir.

[fol. 2516] Q. Have you lived in that neighborhood for a number of years?

A. About six years.

Q. Prior to that where did you live?

A. In Flatbush.

Q. You are listed as treasurer.

A. Of a shipping company. They are forwarders—custom truckers.

Q. Does your work keep you inside of the office?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. You handle the checks and the money and such things?

A. Yes.

Q. Is there anything the prosecution should know about any possible contact or connection with people in the garment or clothing industry or clothing trucking industry?

A. No, sir.

Q. Or in connection with Brownsville or East New York section?

A. No, sir.

Q. Or with Albert Anastasia or anybody on the Brooklyn waterfront whose names have been mentioned?

A. No, sir.

Q. Have you ever sat as a juror in any criminal case?

A. No, sir.

Q. Will you take the law implicitly from the trial judge?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And will you, with common sense and understanding, apply the law to the case at bar?

A. Yes, sir.

(Talesman Jacobus was then interrogated by the Court.)

Q. How long have you lived there?

A. Ever since I came to Brooklyn in 1909. I lived at 92 Gates Avenue for ten years.

[fol. 2517] Q. That is between Grand and Gates?

A. On the corner of St. James Place.

Q. How long have you been in the real estate brokerage business?

A. Since 1938.

Q. And before that?

A. I was with the Lawyers Mortgage Company for twenty years.

Q. On Liberty Street?

A. On Montague Street.

Q. The Brooklyn office?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. For how many years?

A. Twenty-six, about.

Q. You came from what town?

A. Springfield, Massachusetts.

Q. You are not a friend of Professor Jacobus of the Theological Seminary?

A. No, sir.

(Talesman Dunphy was further interrogated by Mr. Turkus as to his qualifications.)

Q. Mr. Dunphy, have you heard the discussion with the jurors who have been accepted, in connection with accomplice testimony?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you understand it is not whether you like or dislike accomplice testimony, it is whether you believe he speaks the truth as to the part each man played in the commission of the crime?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And whether you like or dislike the accomplice, if you believe his story and you believe, under the instructions of law, it has been corroborated by other evidence which tends to connect the defendants with the commission of the crime, [fol. 2518] will you find the defendants guilty of murder in the first degree—you do not acquit defendants because you do not like accomplices, you understand that?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Is there any question I put to the other talesmen who have been accepted that you would answer any differently?

A. I do not know of any.

Q. Is there any reason why you cannot give these defendants at the bar of justice every legal right that the law of the land says they should have?

A. No, sir.

Q. And after you give them every legal right they have, and after you hear all of the evidence in the case, if then you have a reasonable doubt about their guilt, will you say so?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And, on the other hand, if after hearing all of the evidence in the case that Judge O'Dwyer brings into this court room, you are satisfied of their guilt of murder in the first degree beyond a reasonable doubt, will you say that in your verdict without any fear or hesitation?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Is there anything the prosecutor of this county should know about your qualifications to render a verdict in consonance with justice in this case?

A. No, sir.

(Mr. Jacobus was then interrogated by Mr. Talley.)

Q. Mr. Jacobus, prior to your being called I think you said that you sat, in the spring of this year, as a juror. Did you sit as a juror in a criminal case?

A. No, no criminal case.

[fol. 2519] Q. You did sit as a juror in a civil case?

A. Yes.

Q. A case of damage for injuries?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. The Court will charge you that in a criminal case the rules are essentially different than those prevailing in a civil court. When I say "rules", I mean the law governing the conduct of a criminal case, and the rights that are accorded every person charged with crime under our American system of law—they are quite different. You will be instructed by the learned Court, if this case goes to the jury, as to what those principles are. The Court will instruct you that every defendant is presumed to be innocent until his guilt is proven. A defendant charged with a crime in an indictment, which is simply an accusation in writing, is not required to prove his innocence, but, on the contrary, the People, when they bring in an indictment, undertake the task to prove that guilt. You understand that?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Will you require the People in this case to prove the guilt of these defendants before you bring in a verdict of "Guilty" against them?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And the law goes further in this particular, not to shield the guilty, but to protect the innocent—that is the basis of these rules of criminal law—if the Court charges you that it is the law that not only must guilt be proven to the satisfaction of the jury, but it must be proven beyond a reasonable doubt—and the Court will charge you what rea- [fol. 2520] sonable doubt is—will you give the defendant, or the defendants, the benefit of such doubt when you come to consider the evidence in this case?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. You have not any doubt in your mind you can do that now?

A. No, sir.

Q. Some testimony—we do not know what it is going to be—we of the defense—but the District Attorney has indicated by his questions that certain accomplices, so-called, will be presented here and their evidence given before you; they will testify, we can rightfully assume, of their participation in this crime charged in this indictment. The Court will instruct you that it is the law that the testimony of such person, who himself accuses himself of the crime, and then testifies as to the participation of others, must be scrutinized with great care and caution to see whether they are telling the truth, to see whether, in the giving of their testimony, they may not be actuated by motives of self-preservation, looking out for themselves, disregarding the truth and the rights of others. Now, if such testimony is presented, will you agree with me now that you will regard such testimony with the care and suspicion and caution that the law says a juryman should regard that type of testimony?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Have you read anything about this case or any of these defendants, or anything connected directly or indirectly with the matters we are here to try?

[fol. 2521] A. I have seen names in the paper, but I do not know anything about the case, I have not read enough.

Q. You read something about some matters that are associated with this indictment in this case?

A. I have seen names in the paper.

Q. Might I ask you what paper you ordinarily read?

A. The Tribune and the Sun.

Q. When you can buy them on the stand?

A. I buy them.

Q. You have not bought them the last couple of nights?

A. No, sir.

Q. Did you read any articles in the Daily Mirror?

A. No, sir.

Q. Did you read in the Journal-American the story of the life of Judge O'Dwyer?

A. No, sir.

Q. Did you discuss this case of these defendants with anybody?

A. Only in connection——

Q. Since you have been called to the jury room?

A. Yes, sir.

[fol. 2522] By Mr. Talley:

Q. Did you form any impression, Mr. Jacobus, about any of these defendants, with respect to their guilt or innocence?

A. No, sir.

Q. Or with respect to their character and reputation?

A. No, sir.

Mr. Turkus: I object to the question whether the man has formed any opinion as to their character or reputation.

The Court: Objection overruled.

A. I have seen their names in the papers.

Q. Is that vague or definite?
A. Vague.

By Mr. Talley:

Q. It has left an impression in your mind about them or some of them, hasn't it?
A. Yes.
Q. Is that impression you have about them or any of them an unfavorable impression?
A. Yes, sir, it is.
Q. Is that impression which you have formed one that you would require some evidence in this case to dispel?

Mr. Turkus: I object, because character evidence is in a different category.
The Court: Yes.
Mr. Talley: I am not speaking of character evidence.
Mr. Turkus: That is what the juror is speaking of.
[fol. 2523] The Court: It is a difficult point to rule on. I have ruled on it before in this case.

By the Court:

Q. Supposing the Court should charge you not to give any attention to it, would you be able to lay it aside?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. And to decide the case on the evidence?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. And not be influenced by it in any way?
A. No, sir.
Q. And not require any evidence to remove it?
A. No, sir.
Q. You cannot put a thing out of your mind, but you can disregard it?
A. What the evidence proves to me.
Q. You are supposed to decide the case fairly upon the evidence, because the scales of justice must be evenly balanced.

Mr. Turkus: He may take the People's evidence.

Q. Could you lay it aside entirely and try the case upon the evidence alone?
A. Yes, sir.

By Mr. Talley:

Q. If the evidence was such, you could dispel that impression and put it aside?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And the converse of that is, if the evidence is not present, you would go in the jury box with that impression on your mind? That is the exact situation, isn't it?

Mr. Turkus: Objected to as leading and suggestive.

The Court: It is obvious you cannot put a thing out of mind at will.

By Mr. Talley:

[fol. 2524] Q. Let us speak as plainly as language will permit. If you are accepted as a juror in this case, you will begin consideration of the case with an unfavorable impression in your mind about these defendants or some of them. That is true, isn't it.

A. Yes.

Q. Before that impression is removed something will have to transpire in this court-room, will it not? What I mean is some evidence will have to be given?

Mr. Turkus: I object. That is an ambiguous question.

The Court: Judge Talley's examination of the juror is quite impressive; that is very much to the point. I think it is clear that Judge Talley means to abstractly obtain an unfavorable impression. It is in reference to whether or not he can disregard it and lay it aside. The objection is overruled.

Q. (Question repeated by the reporter.)

A. Yes, sir.

Q. To get rid of that impression, you would expect such evidence to come from the defendants, wouldn't you?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And unless such evidence was produced, you could not disregard the impression that you have now as you are talking to me?

A. No, I have that impression.

Mr. Talley: I challenge for implied bias.

The Court: Try the challenge.

(Clement S. Jacobus, residing at 464 Clinton Avenue, Brooklyn, New York, was sworn on the challenge.)

[fol. 2525] By Mr. Talley:

Q. Before you were sworn, you answered certain questions put to you by me?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now that you are sworn, if I asked you the same questions, would your answers be the same?

A. Yes, sir.

By Mr. Rosenthal:

Q. You understood Judge Talley when he asked you whether the impression you have in your mind would take some evidence on the part of the defendants in this case to remove?

A. To disprove?

Q. Yes, to remove.

A. Yes, sir.

By Mr. Turkus:

Q. Did I understand you correctly when you discussed the proposition with Judge Talley that you understood that impression goes to character and reputation?

Mr. Climenko: I object. It assumes a state of facts not in the question.

The Court: Objection overruled.

Mr. Climenko: Exception.

A. Yes, sir.

By the Court:

Q. Have you formed any opinion as to whether or not the defendants or any of them are guilty of this specific alleged crime?

A. I have an unfavorable——

The Court: Repeat the question.

[fol. 2526] Q. (Question repeated by the reporter.)

A. I have not formed any opinion; I have an unfavorable bearing in my mind from the headlines I have seen in the paper, that is all.

Q. And you told us that was vague?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. You told us that while it could not be dispelled from your mind other than by evidence, you could and would lay it aside and disregard it?

The Court: You know a judge may or may not have inside knowledge of the facts in the case, and he is disqualified, because he has to be fair. Now, a man of common intelligence may or may not be able to measure up to that moral requirement to disregard impressions and decide on the evidence in a case. The question is, are you able to do so?
The Witness: The impression is not so deep I could not do that.

Q. Will you do it?
A. Yes, sir.

The Court: Challenge overruled.
Mr. Talley: Exception to all counsel for the defendant.

(Mr. Jacobus steps back in the jury box.)
(Mr. Jacobus is interrogated from the jury box by Mr. Talley.)

By Mr. Talley:

Q. Mr. Jacobus, despite the little examination we have [fol. 2527] had here, it would take evidence to remove this impression from your mind?

Mr. Turkus: I object. That has been determined.
The Court: Sustained. That has been tried and disposed of. No more questions on that point by any counsel.

Q. Are you acquainted with Judge O'Dwyer or any members of his staff?
A. No, sir.
Q. Are you taking any part or do you contemplate taking any part in the campaign, on one side or the other?
A. No, sir.
Q. Outside of the matters that have been inquired into, do you know of any reason why you cannot serve as a fair and impartial juror in this case other than what you have indicated?
A. I don't know of any.

Q. Do you think, despite what you have read in the newspapers, you can judge this case impartially and without prejudice or bias?

Mr. Turkus: I object to that as having been already determined.

The Court: Objection sustained.

Mr. Talley: That is not the same question.

The Court: The Court has ruled.

Mr. Talley: I take exception.

Q. I did not hear Mr. Jacobus in his statement as to what his business was. May I ask you that question again?

[fol. 2528] A. Real estate broker.

Q. Operating in Brooklyn or in Manhattan?

A. In Brooklyn.

Q. Where is your office?

A. 26 Court Street.

Q. Are you engaged in business on your own account or are you associated with someone?

A. On my own account.

Q. Do you buy and sell real estate or do you rent it or have charge of real estate?

A. A little bit of all.

Q. Have you any friends on the Police Department, or close associates?

A. No, sir.

Q. Any member of your family in the Police Department?

A. No, sir.

By the Court:

Q. You are a member of the Hill Association?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Has there been any talk there about Judge O'Dwyer's investigation?

A. I don't think they had any meeting; I have not had any notice of a meeting.

By Mr. Talley:

Q. Have you heard any political talks on the radio in connection with this campaign?

A. No.

(Mr. Dunphy was then interrogated as to his qualifications by Mr. Talley.)

By Mr. Talley:

Q. Have you read anything about this case?

A. Yes, sir, I have.

Q. Have you formed any impression about this case or [fol. 2529] about any of the defendants as a result of your reading?

A. Just from reading the newspaper I have sort of an unfavorable opinion of these defendants.

Q. That opinion goes to the question of their guilt or innocence?

A. I should say so.

Q. Would that require some evidence in this case, if you are accepted as a juror, to remove that impression you have about them?

A. Yes, sir, it would.

Q. You do not think you could remove it unless you heard evidence, to take it out of your mind?

A. Yes, sir, that is right.

Mr. Talley: This juror is challenged for implied bias.

The Court: Try the challenge.

(John J. Dunphy, residing at 406 St. Johns Place, Brooklyn, New York, was sworn on the challenge.)

By Mr. Talley:

Q. If I asked you the same questions that I inquired about when you sat in the jury box, now that you are sworn, would your answers be the same?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Is it your feeling that you could not lay that impression aside which you have formed with respect to the guilt or innocence of these defendants?

A. Unless I had the evidence to offset that opinion.

Q. You could not lay it aside?

A. I should not say so.

[fol. 2530] By Mr. Rosenthal:

Q. You have sat in court and heard the various instructions given to prospective jurors as to the law?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. You were listening carefully and heard those various instructions?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Notwithstanding the fact that you understand that law given from the Court and what those different principles are as to the presumption of innocence, reasonable doubt, and all those things, you make the statement conscientiously, that you made to Judge Talley?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. So that the impression you now have, or opinion which you have of or concerning some of the defendants is of such a nature that it will take evidence on their part to remove it before you would be able to lay aside the impression or opinion which you formed. Is that a correct statement of fact?

A. Yes, sir, that is so.

Q. This statement is made by you, notwithstanding the fact that you have been told that the defendants need at no time prove their innocence?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. That at all times it is incumbent upon the People to establish their guilt beyond a reasonable doubt?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. But notwithstanding that, your impression, formed in your mind is of a nature that it will take some evidence upon the part of the defendants before you will remove it from your mind?

A. Yes, sir.

[fol. 2531] Q. That impression which you have you cannot lay aside unless the defendants bring forth such evidence to your satisfaction; is that correct?

A. Yes, sir.

By Mr. Turkus:

Q. Have you ever sat as a juror before? I believe you said no.

A. That is right.

Q. There are instructions of law—— Did you ever sit as a juror in any case at all, in any type of litigation?

A. In just a minor case in the Magistrate's Court some years ago.

Q. You mean the Municipal Court—they do not have juries in the Magistrate's Court.

A. It was in the minor court.

Q. Which would be the Municipal Court?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. What papers do you usually read?

A. The Times and the Sun; once in a while I run across a type of news in some other paper, but I buy those two regularly.

Q. So that the impression you have stated to counsel has been formed from reading the Times and the Sun?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And no other paper?

A. Well, I have stopped to get a shine or something like that, and I might pick up the News and read it, or some other paper.

Q. That would be by mere casual reading?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Casual reading?

A. Yes, sir.

[fol. 2532] Q. From any of that reading you've done so far, do you know any of the alleged facts in this case?

A. No, sir, I don't know any of the facts.

Q. As you are sitting there now, can you remember one newspaper that reported the murder?

Mr. Barshay: I object.

The Court: Objection overruled.

A. No.

By the Court:

Q. Do you recall now the person who was alleged to have been killed?

A. Yes, Rosen.

By Mr. Turkus:

Q. You have heard that in court?

A. I heard that in court, and I would say in the paper, but I did not recall until I heard it here.

Q. What I am trying to find out is, isn't this the situation, that whatever you have read is so hazy in your mind you do not know when it happened, how it happened, or how it is alleged to have happened?

Mr. Barshay: I object to the question.

The Court: Objection overruled.

Mr. Barshay: Exception.

A. That is true, yes, sir.

By the Court:

Q. Does your impression from the newspaper go any [fol. 2533] further than the fact that the defendants have been indicted and are accused of the murder of Rosen?

A. Yes, sir, that is true.

Q. Is that as far as it goes?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. You know that from being called they are accused of the murder of Rosen?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you read anything in the newspaper about the alleged facts of the case which caused the impression to form that these defendants were therefore guilty of the murder of Rosen?

A. Repeat that, please.

Q. You say you read that they were accused.

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Of the murder of Rosen.

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Of course, you knew that the moment you got in court?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. The fact they are on trial, does that form any impression in your mind that they are guilty?

A. Oh, no.

Q. Does the fact you read in the paper they are accused of the murder of Rosen form any impression that they are guilty?

A. Not necessarily.

Q. Yes, or no.

A. No, sir.

Q. What is this impression?

A. Just from reading in the paper the various defendants, their names.

Q. You have heard their names in court.

A. Yes, but I was talking about newspaper articles I have read at various times.

Q. Have you read of any alleged evidence in the case? [fol. 2534] A. No, sir, I have not.

Q. Which justifies you in forming an impression as to whether they are guilty or not?

Mr. Climenko: I object to the form of the Court's question.

The Court: Objection overruled.

Mr. Climenko: Exception.

A. No, sir, I have not seen any evidence in the case at all.

Q. Am I correct in concluding that you have simply formed an impression they are accused of the murder of Rosen, and that they are presently on trial?

A. Yes, sir.

Mr. Climenko: Objected to as argumentative.

The Court: Objection overruled.

Mr. Climenko: Exception.

Q. Does it go any further than that?

A. No, sir.

Q. You cannot lay that aside because that is the fact, they are on trial under that accusation?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. If you have any unfavorable impression which goes to the question of guilt or innocence, which according to your own statement you have never had anything to indicate, will you put it aside and judge it fairly and squarely from the evidence in this case?

A. I will.

Mr. Climenko: I object.

The Court: Objection overruled.

Mr. Climenko: Exception.

[fol. 2535] By Mr. Turkus:

Q. Mr. Rosenthal has pointed out that the defendants are here to meet one charge only.

Mr. Barshay: I object to that as argumentative.

Mr. Turkus: They are here to meet only one charge, the charge in this indictment.

Q. Do you understand that?
A. Yes, sir.

Mr. Barshay: I object to it.

Q. Whether Mr. Barshay has himself pointed out that one of the defendants has been convicted of other crimes.

Mr. Barshay: I object. It has never been pointed out to this man at all.
Mr. Turkus: To the other talesmen.
It has nothing to do with my question. May I complete my question?
The Court: There will be no ruling until the question is finished.

Q. I will reframe the question. When questioning other prospective talesmen, some of whom have already been examined—I believe every one who has been examined—Mr. Barshay has indicated that Buchalter has been convicted of other crimes in the past for which he is presently serving a long jail term. I have asked other jurors whether they would relax or deviate from their duty as jurors, knowing that he is presently incarcerated. Do you remember those questions?

[fol. 2536] Mr. Barshay: I object.
The Court: Objection overruled. The man was in court throughout, and repeatedly that question was asked.
Mr. Barshay: It has nothing to do with this challenge. That is the point I make.
The Court: Objection overruled.
Mr. Barshay: Exception.

By Mr. Turkus:

Q. So may we go along with the understanding that all of the matters you have read have nothing to do with the charge in this case at all?
A. That is true.
Q. The Judge will instruct you on the law that that is your duty, to find out from the evidence in this case whether the guilt of the defendants on this charge, the murder of a man named Joseph Rosen, has been established to your satisfaction beyond a reasonable doubt. Can you follow that instruction of law?
A. Yes, sir.

Q. Can you apply that instruction of law to this case?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And should the Judge further instruct you the burden of proof is always on the District Attorney and the defendants have no burden of proof at all, will you follow that instruction?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Should the Judge tell you further that the defendants need not offer evidence or take the stand, and that if they [fol. 2537] fail to take the stand no unfavorable inference can be drawn against them, would you follow that instruction?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. In short, will you decide the question of guilt or innocence on this charge upon the evidence you hear in this court, applying the law the Judge gives you?

A. Yes, sir.

Mr. Rosenthal: May I ask a question, just in the nature of rebuttal?

The Court: No, you had your chance.

Mr. Rosenthal: Does the court rule I may not requestion?

The Court: I have ruled.

Mr. Rosenthal: May I respectfully except.

Mr. Talley: I except to your Honor's ruling not to ask this talesman any further questions. May I as——

The Court: You may not resume your trial of the challenge unless there is something new brought out which is in the nature of rebuttal—something entirely new which you did not or could not bring out in your own questioning on the trial of this challenge.

Mr. Barshay: With respect to my client, there is something new, I think.

The Court: What is it? I will rule on it.

Mr. Barshay: May I proceed?

The Court: Yes.

[fol. 2538] By Mr. Barshay:

Q. Now, there has never been addressed any particular question with regard to prior conviction or incarceration of Mr. Buchalter while you were in the box?

Mr. Turkus: I object.

The Court: Objection sustained. The Court takes notice of the fact that he has been in court throughout repeated questioning by you of the other talesmen on that point, and must have heard it.

Mr. Barshay: Exception.

By Mr. Barshay:

Q. I tell you now as the Judge has already and Mr. Turkus has already said, and I am referring to Buchalter, there may come a time when Mr. Buchalter shall take the stand and you have a right to use the fact of his prior conviction and incarceration in deciding whether or not you should accept or reject that testimony. Now, because of your state of mind that you came here with, and you said you had at present, when you were examined by Mr. Turkus, would the fact he has been convicted on two occasions and is now incarcerated for a long time cause you to accept from the District Attorney less proof with respect to him, or would you require from him more proof if he did not have those convictions?

Mr. Turkus: I object to the question.

The Court: Objection sustained.

[fol. 2539] Mr. Barshay: Exception.

Mr. Talley: I wish to inquire of this talesman with regard to matters that he answered in reply to your Honor's questioning.

The Court: If it is in the nature of rebuttal as distinguished from resumption, the question may be put.

Mr. Talley: I don't understand the term "rebuttal" in connection with an examination of talesmen. Rebuttal has to do with the presentation of evidence which rebuts evidence previously given, but here this talesman tells me one thing in the box and then when he takes the stand tells you something entirely different. I am confused as to his state of mind. I want to straighten it out, which is the purpose of my examination.

The Court: A ruling has been made.

Mr. Talley: I respectfully take exception to your Honor's refusal to permit me to further examine this talesman on the substance of challenge.

By Mr. Rosenthal:

Q. I have this question to address to you—do not answer until the Court rules. When I addressed you and asked you certain questions and you made certain answers, did you understand the questions which I addressed to you and did you answer them to the best of your ability?

Mr. Turkus: I object.

[fol. 2540] The Court: Objection sustained.

Mr. Rosenthal: Exception.

The Court: Challenge overruled.

Mr. Talley: Exception to all defendants.

(Mr. Dunphy resumes his seat in the box.)

(Mr. Jacobus, a talesman, was then interrogated by Mr. Barshay.)

By Mr. Barshay:

Q. Mr. Jacobus, I speak on behalf of the defendant Buchalter. Do you know him at all?

A. No, sir.

Q. He has been referred to here by the prosecutor and others by the name of Lepke. Do you know him under that name?

A. No, sir.

Q. Did you read about him?

Mr. Turkus: I object. This was the subject-matter of a challenge.

The Court: Sustained.

Mr. Barshay: I have not quesioned this man at all. I except.

The Court: You all tried it.

Mr. Barshay: I am not going on the point of challenge now, that is past. I adhere to your Honor's ruling on that point.

The Court: You may have your exception.

By Mr. Barshay:

[fol. 2541] Q. May I know whether you were ever the victim of any crime?

A. Only a traffic violation.

Q. I said the victim of any crime.

A. No, sir.

Q. Do you know anybody in the Police Department?

A. No, sir.

Q. Do you know anyone at all in Judge O'Dwyer's office?

A. No, sir.

Q. May I know who is associated with you in your firm?

A. No one.

Q. May I know what floor you are on?

A. The 23rd.

Q. Does anyone share the office with you?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Any lawyers share offices with you?

A. Frederick W. Rowe; I am in the same office.

Q. Anybody else?

A. No, sir.

By the Court:

Q. Frederick W. Rowe was a former Congressman?

A. Yes, sir, Republican.

Q. And certainly he is not campaigning for Judge O'Dwyer's election; is that right?

A. That is right.

Q. He is connected with some bank, isn't he?

A. He is a trustee.

By Mr. Barshay:

Q. Anybody else in the office with you other than Mr. Rowe?

A. No, sir.

Q. Is Mr. Rowe active in campaigning against Judge O'Dwyer?

[fol. 2542] A. No, sir.

Q. Is he still active in politics, to your knowledge?

Mr. Turkus: I object.

The Court: He may answer.

A. I don't know.

Q. Have you discussed Judge O'Dwyer with Congressman Rowe?

A. No, sir.

Q. Have you discussed your prospective jury service with him?

A. Not discussed; I told him I was called for jury service.

Q. Was there any opinion expressed with respect to this case?

A. No, sir.

Q. Have you served on a jury, actually?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was it in a capital case?

A. No, sir.

Q. Were you ever a member of the Grand Jury?

A. No, sir.

Q. Do you belong to any societies for the prevention of crime?

A. No, sir.

Q. Any society for the enforcement of law?

A. No, sir.

Q. Were you ever a juror in any case, civil or criminal, where Mr. Turkus or Mr. Klein were lawyers?

A. No, sir.

Q. Are you prejudiced by virtue of the fact that some person has been killed?

A. No, sir.

Q. Did you know Rosen?

A. No, sir.

Q. At the time this was alleged to have occurred, did you read about it then?

A. I don't remember reading it, but I may have.

[fol. 2543] Q. While you were sitting here, none of the things which you may have read recur to you, do they?

Mr. Turkus: I object. This has been gone over on the challenge.

The Court: Objection sustained.

Mr. Barshay: Exception.

Q. You know that under our law each defendant is accorded the presumption of innocence?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. You believe in that?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you believe that is a substantial presumption, a substantial right for every defendant?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you feel you must use it as evidence in favor of a defendant?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. The presumption of innocence is so strong, the Court will tell you you may use it as evidence in favor of the defendants. Will you do that?

A. Yes, sir.

The Court: I have ruled "should have probative force," but there is quite a question about that, yet the usual words, "probative force," even they may be debatable.

Mr. Barshay: I take my quotation from Chief Justice White of the United States Supreme Court. I take it precisely from him; that is the only reason I use it.

The Court: Many years ago I had a discussion with [fol. 2544] the late Justice Stapleton on that very point, as to precisely what Judge White meant. We will not go any further on that. It is purely a legal argument with prospective talesmen. The question is whether he will follow the instructions of the Court, whether he believes in it or not.

The Witness: Yes, sir.

By the Court:

Q. Will you follow the instructions of the Court on the law without question, whether you agree with that law or not?

A. Yes, sir.

Mr. Barshay: I take it you will prohibit me from the use of that sentence, "presumption of innocence"?

Mr. Turkus: That has been answered.

Mr. Barshay: May I address the Court?

The Court: You have your answer; you have the Court's ruling, and you have the elucidation by the Court which the Court now regrets having made, because it simply leads to further loss of time.

Mr. Barshay: Exception.

By Mr. Barshay:

Q. Do you agree with the principle which says that when a man pleads "not guilty" to a charge set forth in the indictment he creates for the District Attorney a burden which he must sustain beyond a reasonable doubt, and that burden is to prove the defendant guilty beyond a reasonable [fol. 2545] doubt?

Mr. Turkus: I object.

The Court: Objection sustained. It is not necessary that every talesman or every judge or every lawyer should agree with the law in all its respects. The talesman said he would follow the instructions of the Court as to the law.

Mr. Barshay: Exception.

By Mr. Barshay:

Q. You understand that every person in the jury box has a right to his own opinion?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. That opinion may go, even if it is a prejudicial one, he has a right to it?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. You understand we are searching for prospective jurors whose minds are free?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, my client, I tell you now, is incarcerated for a period of from forty-four to seventy-seven years. Some people have a right to be prejudiced against such a person. Is that one of the items which causes you to form an unfavorable impression of him?

Mr. Turkus: I object to again going over the challenge.

The Court: Sustained.

Mr. Barshay: Exception.

Q. By virtue of that fact, if he should take the stand, [fol. 2546] would you be influenced in disbelieving him because of that fact?

Mr. Turkus: I object. That is a legal question.

The Court: Sustained.

Mr. Barshay: Exception.

Q. Would you less readily accept his testimony even though on the entire evidence he may be telling the truth, because of that fact?

Mr. Turkus: Objected to.

The Court: Sustained.

Mr. Barshay: Exception.

Q. Would you reduce the quality of evidence necessary to prove him guilty beyond a reasonable doubt by virtue of that fact?

Mr. Turkus: Objected to.
The Court: Sustained.
Mr. Barshay: Exception.

Q. Would you expect him to come forth with proof to prove his innocence by virtue of that fact?

Mr. Turkus: Objected to.
The Court: Sustained.
Mr. Barshay: Exception.

Q. Would you increase in any way the burden on the part of the defendant in any degree because of that fact?

Mr. Turkus: Objected to.
[fol. 2547] The Court: Sustained.
Mr. Barshay: Exception.

Q. Would you lessen the burden on the part of the District Attorney because of that fact?

Mr. Turkus: Same objection.
The Court: Sustained.
Mr. Barshay: Exception.

Q. You have heard that the District Attorney intends to present people here who will claim they are accomplices—you have heard that?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, assuming the man comes here and says that he participated in the commission of this crime, and in addition to that he has also admitted on the stand that he has lived a life of crime and committed other murders other than this, burglary, is an ex-convict—would you weigh that person's testimony with caution and care?

Mr. Turkus: I object. He is asking a legal point.

The Court: If the Judge should tell you that the testimony of an accomplice must be viewed with suspicion and accepted with caution and then only if corroborated by sufficient other evidence that tends to connect it with the defendant in the commission of the crime; would you follow those instructions?

The Witness: Yes, sir.

Mr. Barshay: I respectfully except to the Court's [fol. 2548] ruling.

Q. Will you look a bit further than the accomplice? Supposing in your opinion the testimony which comes forth from people who claim to give evidence tending to corroborate the accomplice, that testimony by virtue of the fact that it comes from a murderer, an extortionist, criminal, ex-convict, has little weight or no weight whatever, will you then take the instructions of the Court with respect to that?

Mr. Turkus: I object to the form of the question.
The Court: Objection overruled.

A. Yes, sir.

By the Court:

Q. Will you take the instructions of the Court in that and in all other respects?
A. Yes, sir.

By Mr. Barshay:

Q. If the Court should tell you that if one person is an accomplice and he is supported only by another accomplice, that that is not corroboration, will you take that ruling from the Court?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. Now, there may come a time when some person may claim he is not an accomplice, and it will be up to you to decide whether he is or he is not. Will you do that?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. No matter what he claims, if you find from the evidence that he is an accomplice, you will require that his testimony be corroborated, won't you?
A. Yes, sir.
[fol. 2549] Q. In other words, if the Court shall tell you that one accomplice cannot corroborate another, you will follow that?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. Now, a man may come here and say, "I committed this crime." That may be true or it may not. That will be for you to decide. Are you willing to look into that to find out whether or not he is telling the truth with respect to whether or not Buchalter is his accomplice?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. In other words, he may be telling the truth about himself and still be lying with respect to Mr. Buchalter, and that will be for you to determine and keep in mind at all times. Will you look with suspicion on his testimony?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Will you take into consideration that together with all the other evidence in the case, the fact that the so-called man who now claims he is an accomplice of Buchalter has never seen or spoken to him in his life?

Mr. Turkus: I object to the form of that question.

The Court: Objection sustained.

Mr. Barshay: Exception.

Q. Now, Mr. Turkus has addressed you with respect to finding fault with the District Attorney who solved a case from the inside. Do you understand that neither side—or counsel from neither side are witnesses in this case?

A. Yes, sir.

[fol. 2550] Q. We are not witnesses to this crime, you understand that?

... Yes, sir.

Q. We are merely presenting what we have—is that correct?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. You are not here to find fault with either side, the prosecution or the defense, you know that?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. At the same time, I take it, you will not throw into the scale his evidence, or lend it greater weight because Judge O'Dwyer, according to Mr. Turkus, claims to have broken this case from the inside? That has nothing to do with the weight of the testimony, has it?

A. No, sir.

Q. I take it, because Mr. Turkus claims to have accepted the testimony of the accomplice, that would not influence you in any respect, because he accepted it?

A. No, sir.

Q. The point is, Will you accept it? Isn't that so?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. You are not bound to accept anything I say or anything he says or anything that anybody offers; is that right?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. For it becomes testimony when it is given on the witness stand, subject to direct and cross-examination, and you will give it every conceivable test outlined by the Court?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Testimony may come here from people which is binding only with respect to one person, two persons, or three [fol. 2551] persons, depending upon the person who gives the testimony. If the Court shall tell you it binds only one defendant, and you may not use it against another, will you adhere to that instruction?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. If it binds two, and does not bind the third, will you adhere to that instruction?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. If the trial should take a long time, you will still keep that instruction in your mind?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. You appreciate that only for convenience are these three men being tried together, when in reality you are giving them separate trials? Do you appreciate that?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Some of the defendants, through their counsel, have indicated that they may offer a defense in the case—one said an alibi; I don't recall what the other said. Assuming that particular defendant or defendants does offer testimony, I take it you will follow the Court's instructions that because of that you still may draw no unfavorable inference against them—in other words, each counsel can do with respect to his client as he seems wise and correct with respect to his defendant?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. The District Attorney speaks first. He opens up to the jury. He presents his side of the case. Can I have your word that you will keep your mind open and not form a definite conclusion with respect to rejecting or accepting that person's testimony because it comes to you first, but [fol. 2552] that you will wait until the entire case is over before making up your mind?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. In summation the District Attorney speaks last. Counsel speak before him. We are three counsel, who shall sum up in behalf of their respective defendants. Mr. Turkus has said a repetition of the argument three times would not or should not increase the weight of that argument. You recall that?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. He did say that because the argument is repeated three times it does not necessarily mean it has three times the force. You agree with that?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. On the other hand, do you appreciate that when counsel sum up for their respective defendants they have a right to discuss the evidence as they see fit and as they view it, and that it may coincide with another counsel who shall follow?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And will it lost force with you because it may appear three times in summation?

A. No, sir.

Q. So if you find it helps you in deciding this case and it coincides with your own view of the evidence, you will accept it no matter how many times you hear it?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. You never served as a juror before. Were you ever called?

A. Yes.

Q. Were you ever examined by the District Attorney or by counsel for the defense?

A. No, sir.

By the Court:

Q. What business are you in, Mr. Dunphy?

[fol. 2553] A. Freight forwarding and custom brokers.

Q. What is the firm of custom brokers?

A. The Dumont Shipping Company, 11 Broadway, New York.

Q. How long have you been in that line of business?

A. Eight years.

Q. And before that?

A. I was secretary for B. F. Yoakum.

Q. He is dead?

A. Yes, sir, he died in 1929.

By Mr. Barshay:

Q. Have you at any time discussed crime or investigations of crime—have you heard any lectures on crime?

A. No, sir.

Q. Do you intend to partake in this forthcoming election?

A. No, sir.

Q. Do you know any of the gentlemen here at the prosecutor's table?

A. No, sir.

Q. At any time have you had the misfortunte of being the victim of any crime?

A. No, sir.

Q. Do you know the family of Rosen, or did you know Rosen himself?

A. No, sir.

Q. Were you ever a Grand Juror?

A. No, sir.

Q. Did you read about the case when it first happened?

A. I don't recall.

Q. None of the facts here refresh your recollection?

A. No, sir.

Q. Presently, for any reason whatever, is there in your [fol. 2554] mind any prejudice against the defendants?

Mr Turkus: I object. The challenge has been already tried.

The Court: Sustained.

Mr. Barshay: I am asking him a general question.

The Court: The challenge has been tried.

Mr. Barshay: I am not going into the challenge.

The Court: The objection has been sustained.

Mr. Barshay: Exception.

(Mr. Rosenthal then examined Mr. Dunphy.)

By Mr. Rosenthal:

Q. I believe the questions I am about to ask, in view of the various objections to questions by Mr. Barshay and the sustaining of them by the Court are such that the Court will take some attitude as to this question——

The Court: The Court has ruled consistently on all questions of law.

Mr. Rosenthal: If that be so, we protest over the ruling so far as it concerns my client and also over the overruling of challenge made. I will ask no questions, but reserve my exception.

The Court: All right.

Mr. Barshay: May I say for the record, in behalf of the defendant Buchalter, with respect to the questioning of the juror known as Mr. Dunphy——

[fol. 2555] The Court: No speeches. You have taken your exception. No building up of the record for the benefit of the press.

Mr. Barshay: I except. I spoke to the Court, and not to the press.

The Court: All right, the Court is speaking to you.

Mr. Turkus: Mr. Jacobus and Mr. Dunphy are satisfactory to The People.

Mr. Talley: We reserve our exceptions on the challenges to both Mr. Jacobus and Mr. Dunphy. We wish to make that very plain to your Honor on the record. We do reserve our exceptions in that respect. The defendants peremptorily challenge Mr. Jacobus and Mr. Dunphy.

(Talesmen James L. Edghill, No. 3041; and Mr. Louis F. Stites, No. 3095, were called to the box.)

James L. Edghill, was interrogated as to his qualifications to serve as a juror.

By Mr. Turkus:

Q. You live at 158 Linden Boulevard?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. Is that between Flatbush and the other street?
A. Yes, sir.

By the Court:

Q. You are right near Bedford?
A. A half a block from Bedford.
Q. There is a political club on the corner?
A. Yes, sir. Democratic club.
[fol. 2556] Q. Do you belong to it?
A. No, sir.
Q. You have heard no talks about this case?
A. None at all.
Q. Have you given it any thought?
A. No, sir.
Q. You are not taking any particular activity in any political campaign?
A. No, sir.

By Mr. Turkus:

Q. Were you present in court when I addressed the other jurors about possible contacts with the clothing and garment industries?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Is there anything the prosecutor should know about any contacts you have had there?

A. No, sir.

Q. In the Brownsville or East New York areas or the Brooklyn waterfront?

A. No, sir.

Q. Do you have any scruples, conscientious or otherwise, against capital punishment?

A. No, sir.

Q. Have you heretofore served as a juror in any criminal case?

A. In the Federal Court.

Q. Has that been recent?

A. I guess about five or six years ago.

Q. Were any of the lawyers in that case in court now?

A. No, sir.

Q. Do you know any of the nine lawyers representing these three defendants?

A. I don't know any of them personally; I do remember seeing—think I have—only one or two in the County [fol. 2557] Court.

By the Court:

Q. That does not affect you in any way?

A. No, sir.

By Mr. Turkus:

Q. You are in sympathy with law enforcement?

A. I am.

Q. Did you hear that part of the testimony in this case will come from accomplices?

A. I did.

Q. And you understand that the State's case cannot be proved by one witness; there will be a series of witnesses?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you have any bias or prejudice against accomplice testimony as would cause you to reject it under all circumstances?

A. I have not.

Q. Would you substantially make the same answers as the other jurors did, if accepted, with regard to accomplice testimony?

A. I would.

Q. Will you take every instruction on the law from Judge Taylor in this case?

A. I will.

Q. And conscientiously endeavor to apply it to the facts in this case?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you understand it is not whether you like or dislike an accomplice, it is whether he speaks the truth about the guilty part that each of the defendants played in this crime?

Mr. Tally: I object to the form of the question.

The Court: Objection overruled.

[fol. 2558] Mr. Talley: Exception.

A. Yes, sir.

Q. If you are satisfied by all of the evidence, after hearing everything, if you have a reasonable doubt you will give it to the defendants?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Will you give to them everything that the law of the land says they should have by way of protection in this case?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. After you give them everything and after you hear all the facts in this case, if your mind and conscience tells you that the District Attorney of this County has established their guilt of murder in the first degree beyond a reasonable doubt, will you say it in your verdict without fear or hesitation?

A. I will.

Q. Is there anything I should know about your ability to render a just and conscientious verdict in the case?

A. I know of none.

LOUIS F. STITES, was examined as to his qualifications to serve as a juror.

By Mr. Turkus:

Q. You reside just off the Parade Grounds?
A. Right opposite Diamond #1.
Q. Where is your place of business?
A. At my home.
Q. You conduct your business from your house?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. Is that buying and selling jewelry?
[fol. 2559] A. No, sir, I just deal in jewelry wherever I can get something.

By the Court:

Q. You mean you handle memoranda goods?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. You go to the street, get the goods on memorandum, and carry them in your pocket?
A. I have been in the jewelry business for about twenty years.
Q. You have no store?
A. No, sir.
Q. How long have you been doing this?
A. Ever since 1931, when we went out of business. We used to travel.
Q. For what house?
A. Stites.
Q. On John Street?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. Do you buy at pawnbrokers' auctions?
A. No, sir.
Q. You do not pawn jewelry?
A. No, sir.
Q. You are a broker?
A. Yes, sir.

By Mr. Turkus:

Q. Have you heretofore served as a juror, Mr. Stites?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. Have you been examined by any counsel in some of the cases?
A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was it since Judge O'Dwyer was District Attorney?

A. I think Mr. Geoghan was District Attorney.

Q. Do you remember whether any of the lawyers who ar[illegible] in court were present in that case?

A. No, sir.

Q. At any rate, I was not the prosecutor?

A. No, sir.

Q. None of the defense lawyers were in that case?

A. No, sir.

Q. Did you hear the discussion about accomplice testi-[fol. 2560] mony which I have had with the other jurors?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. If accepted, would you substantially give the same answers they did?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. May I go along with the understanding that you have no bias or prejudice against either the District Attorney of the county, Judge O'Dwyer, or against the prosecution of an indictment where part of the testimony comes from accomplices?

A. No, sir.

Q. Do you understand that the tests which the Judge will give you; are all common-sense rules to apply to the believability of an accomplice, to find out does he speak the truth, not only about himself, but about them and the part they played in the commission of this crime?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Regardless of their background, I know you will consider every vicious, criminal act or crime any accomplice may have committed, and that you will adopt the rules of law the Judge gives you in considering the testimony.

A. Yes.

Q. And will you keep in mind it is not whether you like or dislike an accomplice that counts. It is, Does he tell the truth about the part these men played in the murder of the victim named in the indictment?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Will you further follow the instructions of the Court that there can be no conviction upon the unsupported testimony of an accomplice?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. The Judge may tell you in words or substance—I may [fol. 2561] not use the same words as the Court, but substantially he will instruct you that it is not the burden of the supporting testimony to corroborate and support every detail that is given by an accomplice, but that it is sufficient, if believed by the jury and it tends to connect the defendants with the commission of the crime. Will you follow that instruction of law with common sense and apply it to the defendants in this case?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. It may be you dislike an accomplice—I don't know what your personal feeling may be against any of these witnesses, with that I can find no fault; but I want to find out if you are satisfied as to their guilt beyond a reasonable doubt, the three of them, I want to make sure that you will not acquit them because you do not like the accomplice.

Mr. Barshay: I object.

The Court: Objection overruled.

Q. How do you feel about that, if you are satisfied they are three guilty men, and their guilt has been established beyond a reasonable doubt, you will not discard that because you do not like the accomplice—do you care to answer?

By the Court:

Q. You may acquit if you do not believe an accomplice.

A. That is right.

Q. But you may not acquit simply because you don't like his looks.

A. Yes, sir.

[fol. 2562] By Mr. Turkus:

Q. When we get through with this case and you have heard the evidence, everything that Judge O'Dwyer produces, if you entertain a reasonable doubt, after you hear it all, you will give the benefit of that doubt to the defendants?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. If you are satisfied of their guilt beyond a reasonable doubt, would you convict them without fear and without hesitation?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Is there anything that I should know about your ability to render justice in this case?

A. Not as I know.

(During the examination of Mr. Stites a recess was taken until 2:00 P. M., the jury and talesmen instructed not to discuss the case nor let anybody talk to them about it, and to keep their minds open and to read nothing about it. The defendants are remanded.)

[fol. 2563] Afternoon Session—Trial Resumed

(All defendants represented by counsel)

(Examination of James L. Edgehill and Lewis F. Stites continued.)

By Mr. Barshay:

Q. Mr. Edgehill, have you read about this case?
A. I have seen mention of it in the newspapers.
Q. Have you seen it mentioned in any particular paper?
A. In various papers.
Q. Did it include the Journal?
A. No.
Q. The Mirror?
A. No.
Q. The News?
A. I saw the News once in a while.
Q. The Evening Telegram?
A. I rarely take that.
Q. Did you read about it more than once?
A. I have not read it in any detail. I have seen the headlines. I am familiar with some of the names.
Q. But it did occur more than once, didn't it?
A. I have seen it several times.
Q. Some magazines have published items too. Have you ever looked at them?
A. I have never read anything in any magazines.
Q. Sometimes things about this matter have been mentioned on the radio. Have you ever heard it?
A. I don't think so. I don't recall.
Q. Did you ever hear it discussed?
A. No.
[fol. 2564] Q. You were here the three days waiting for the other jurors to be questioned?
A. Yes.

Q. Have you formed any impression with respect to this case?

A. No.

Q. Have you formed any impression with respect to the defendants?

A. No.

Q. Did you get any idea about them at all at any time or at any place?

Mr. Turkus: That is objected to. It has just been answered that he has formed no impression about any of the defendants or the case.

The Court: That is what he said.

Mr. Barshay: I have now reduced the impression to an idea,—some thought.

Mr. Turkus: I object to it in that form.

The Court: Some what?

Mr. Barshay: Some thought about the defendants.

The Court: Sustained.

Mr. Barshay: Respectfully except.

Q. As the result of looking at those headlines or any other observation that you may have had here or elsewhere, is there in your mind some bias with respect to them?

A. There is not.

Q. You said you had been a Federal juror.

A. I served in the Federal Court.

Q. More than once?

A. Twice.

[fol. 2565] Q. How long ago?

A. I imagine about six and a half years ago.

Q. Have you ever been a Grand Juror?

A. No.

Q. Have you ever been the victim of any crime?

A. No.

Q. Do you know anyone in Judge O'Dwyer's office?

A. I do not.

Q. I take it you said you knew none of the counsel.

A. Not personally. I have seen some of them.

Q. That would not have any effect on your judgment in this case whatever?

A. Not at all.

Q. The fact that some of us once held office, the fact that Mr. Turkus once practiced law and now it is the reverse, has nothing to do with this case, you understand?

A. I do.

Q. Mr. Turkus said that you should consider every piece of evidence that Judge O'Dwyer will present. I do not know whether or not Judge O'Dwyer will personally present any evidence, but I do not know whether Mr. Turkus meant it in just that way, but I want from you this fact, you will not use the integrity or the reputation or the standing of Judge O'Dwyer in weighing the testimony in this case?

A. I will not.

Q. It has nothing to do with this case at all except that he is the district attorney of the county; you understand?

A. Yes.

Q. You understand personally that neither the Judge nor his Assistant guarantee the truth of any person's testi- [fol. 2566] mony here as individuals? You understand?

A. Right.

Q. The defendant whom we represent has, by virtue of some prior actions, now been incarcerated for a period of forty-four to seventy-seven years, something like that. In the minds of some people that may arouse a prejudice. I can understand it. Would it arouse a prejudice in your mind against him?

A. No, it would not arouse any prejudice in my mind against the defendant in this case. A certain amount of law enforcement——

Q. Can you tell me just what you mean by the last part of your answer?

Mr. Turkus: I object to that, because that goes into a legal discussion. In certain instances the defendant's incarceration may be considered by the jury.

Mr. Barshay: I did not ask him that.

The Court: I did not hear the last part.

Mr. Turkus: The juror said he would have no prejudice in this case, but that he believes in law enforcement.

Mr. Barshay: He did not say he believes in law enforcement. Let him repeat it and we will find out what he meant.

(Answer read.)

Mr. Barshay: I would like to know what the juror meant by it.

Mr. Turkus: This was a question addressed to the prior conviction of the defendant Buchalter. In certain in[fol. 2567] stances those may be considered by the jury under proper instruction by the Court.

The Court: The answer is ambiguous in that respect. You may explain.

Q. Of course, his Honor shall tell you just how you may use that in judging the testimony, if he should take the stand, and only then. If he does not take the stand you cannot even consider it. You understand that?

A. I understand.

Q. Now may we have from your mouth, please, any explanation or what you intended to say with respect to law enforcement, adding it on to the answer you made.

A. Well, as a citizen I naturally disprove of crime generally.

The Court: Everybody does.

A. But it would not prejudice me in serving and giving a square and honest decision as I could in the jury in any criminal case. I would judge it on the evidence alone and on the instructions.

Q. Now we understand, sir. So that the prejudice which every person has against the commission of crime would not enter your deliberation with regard to the proof in this case; is that so?

A. Definitely.

Q. And if he should take the stand you will follow the instructions of the Court to what extent you may be able to use his present convictions, is that so, only to that extent as the Court shall tell you you may and no further?
[fol. 2568] A. I have no opinion at the present time.

Q. If he should take the stand, because of his prior conviction you will accept his testimony subject to the rules as his Honor shall give them to you; is that so?

A. I will.

Q. And that natural prejudice that people have will be dissipated with respect to weighing his testimony; is that so?

Mr. Turkus: Just a minute. That is bad law.

Mr. Barshay: What is bad law? I did not give him any law, your Honor; I asked him to follow the instructions of the Court with respect to the law.

By the Court:

Q. Will you follow the instructions of the Court in the event of the defendant taking the stand as to how you may consider his prior conviction as impeaching his testimony as a witness?

A. I will, sir.

By Mr. Barshay:

Q. And no other, sir, isn't that so?

A. Right.

Q. So that you will judge him on the merits of this case and by no other standards?

A. Exactly.

Q. I take it, encompassed in your belief in the enforcement of the law is the belief in the presumption of innocence?

A. Correct.

Q. Do you believe now that this man here is presumed innocent under the law of this charge as any person in this world?

A. I do.

[fol. 2569] Q. And do you believe further that presumption remains with him until twelve of you unanimously, after a consideration of every bit of evidence in this case, decide that it is overcome or it has not been overcome beyond a reasonable doubt?

A. I do.

Q. Should the defendant fail to take the stand, fail to call a single witness, fail to explain a single accusation against him, and the Court shall tell you you must not draw any unfavorable inference by reason thereof, you won't hold it against him?

A. I will not.

Q. Should anyone say, "Well, the others took the stand, why didn't he?" you will call that law that the Court shall give you to their attention, isn't that so?

A. Yes, correct.

Q. Now, with respect to you, sir, have you had any prior experience in criminal courts?

A. I have had experience with Alexander & Green six years.

Q. How long are you with them?

A. About six years, from 1898 to———

By the Court:

Q. Was Mr. McIntosh head of the firm then?

A. No, Mr. McCall, H. M. Alexander and Mr. McCullough, William C. Denning, and Mr. Pearson.

By Mr. Barshay:

Q. Did you study law?

A. I studied, but I never graduated.

Q. Did you ever study criminal law?

A. No, sir, more corporation.

[fol. 2570] Q. Did you come in contact in that firm with people who practiced criminal law?

A. Naturally.

Q. Did you discuss it with them?

A. No.

Q. Did you hear them discuss it among themselves or sometimes when briefs were discussed in the office, did you participate?

A. But not criminal work.

Q. Did you ever investigate cases?

A. No, I took care of the stipulations, diaries, used to go to court, and different things like that, regular law clerk.

Q. You were managing attorney, in other words?

A. No, there was four or five of us did the same kind of work.

By the Court:

Q. You had a whole floor then?

A. Yes, sir, except we had a private library.

Q. That was in the Trinity Building then?

A. No, sir, 120 Broadway.

The Court: That burned down.

By Mr. Barshay:

Q. Did you read about this case, sir?

A. Yes, sir, in the Eagle and New York Times.

Q. More than once?

A. Yes, on several occasions, talked it over home—not this particular case, but some of the defendants in this case.

Q. And by virtue thereof did you come to any conclusion?

A. Yes, sir, naturally.

[fol. 2571] Q. And did that conclusion go to their guilt or innocence?

A. That we thought they were guilty—that was the case before? This is a different case.

Q. You said you came to some conclusion.

A. You know how we discuss things.

Q. Perfectly all right. I quarrel with no man who expresses his opinion. Even if it is against me, that is still his right. And, having come to that conclusion, I take it you carried it into the jury box as you sit here?

A. Yes, sir, but that won't——

Q. We will get to that. In other words, the opinion that you formed, based on newspaper reading, with no explanation, without accepting the truth or falsity of the accusation, you came to a conclusion— And so that conclusion was detrimental and prejudicial to the defendants?

By the Court:

Q. Was that simply a logical deduction based upon an assumption as to the truth of the newspaper report?

Mr. Barshay: I object to the word "logical."

The Court: Sustained. It may have been illogical. I did not mean that. I should have used another word.

Q. Did you assume that the newspaper report was true?

A. Well, yes, sir, you know how you can believe.

Q. Was that an opinion on your part that it was true?

A. Yes, sir, just a general opinion.

[fol. 2572] Q. Or was it simply an opinion based upon an assumption as to accuracy for the purpose of forming the impression?

A. Well, it formed an impression.

Q. I take it you are a man of experience in one of the biggest law firms in the city, and you have had a rich experience since then. You are a man of intelligence, and you know that you cannot swear to the truth of anything just because you read it in the newspapers.

A. I did not say it was the truth. I just read it.

Q. Did you read about this particular case?

A. No, sir, about other cases in there that led up to this case.

Q. Not this case?

A. Not this case.

Q. Have you formed any opinion as to the guilt or innocence of the defendants in this case?

A. No, sir.

By Mr. Barshay:

Q. Was this case mentioned?

A. No, I don't think it was.

Q. You said it led up to this case. Then it must have been mentioned, sir.

By the Court:

Q. Do you know the name of this case, the man who was killed.

A. No, sir.

Q. Or the date on which the alleged killing occurred?

A. No, I do not know that.

Q. Do you know anything other than that these defendants are being tried for having killed somebody at some time?

[fol. 2573] A. I only knew what I read about the other one being sent away to prison for a long term.

Q. That has been discussed freely here. You mean you assumed he was guilty then, because he was convicted?

A. That had something to do with it.

Q. What we want to find out is whether you can judge this case upon the evidence and the evidence alone.

A. Yes, sir. What I read would have nothing to do with this case at all, none whatever.

Q. And, having been in a law office, you surely know that the prior conviction and imprisonment is not competent except for the purpose of impeachment in the event only that the person takes the stand as a witness?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. You know that rule?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. You will abide by that?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. You will give the defendants a square deal?

A. Absolutely.

Mr. Mr. Barshay:

Q. What I am driving at is, perhaps subconsciously you may let the conclusion which you formed, even though it may be unfounded, you may let that conclusion creek into the judgment in this case in deciding the guilt or innocence.

A. I don't think it would.

Q. When you say, "I don't think it would," is there a doubt?

A. It would not creep in. This case I will listen to the [fol. 2574] man who is giving the evidence.

Q. Would you expect the District Attorney to come forth with less proof because of some opinion you may have about something else?

A. No, sir.

Q. Would you expect the defendant to make some explanation here with respect to the charge here, or come forth with some evidence?

A. No.

Q. Would you judge him more harshly by virtue of some conclusion you have?

A. No, I would go just by the evidence.

Q. Would you allow any sentiment at all to creep in in deciding this case by virtue of some fact or facts or some conclusion or opinion that you had in some other matter?

A. No.

Q. I take it you are in accord with the principle which says that one man can be tried for one charge at one time.

A. Yes.

Q. No matter what else you may think, if he is not proven guilty beyond a reasonable doubt by evidence which you believe here you must acquit him?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. You will acquit him?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. If that is the fact?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. I take it you, too, sir, won't allow the integrity and the reputation of the District Attorney of this county to enter into this case by way of influencing your judgment?

A. No.

Q. And you won't let the fact that Mr. Buchalter is now serving a prison term influence you in this case otherwise [fol. 2575] than instructed by the Court?

A. Not in this case unless the Court instructed me.

Q. And if he does not take the stand, you may not even consider it in this case at all in any respect; you understand that?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Even you have heard about accomplice testimony. Now I am addressing these questions collectively both to Juror No. 11 and to you, without repetition. If the Court shall tell you that no accomplice can have his testimony accepted unless and until you weigh it with suspicion, with care, and with caution, and only then?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you must also look further than that. If he has a criminal background, which he admits, or he does not admit, but which the evidence tells you he has, you will look into that too?

A. Yes.

Q. And with every demerit mark, sir, that you find that this witness has, so much more caution will you use with respect to accepting or rejecting his testimony?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And if other accomplices come here and are no better than the first, you will use the same rule with respect to them, won't you?

A. Yes. Yes.

Q. And one accomplice cannot corroborate another. Do you agree with that?

A. Yes.

Q. And if some man says he is not an accomplice and the evidence in your mind shows that he is, you will so decide, [fol. 2576] won't you?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And if you find that any person has a motive for giving testimony and declaring himself in the manner in which he does, and you find there is such motive, and that motive induces the falsity of his testimony, you will consider it, won't you?

A. Yes.

Q. No matter what that motive may be?

A. Yes.

Q. And if it is a hope of escaping punishment for crimes which he committed or getting some reward, you will consider that, too?

A. Yes.

Q. And if you find out of the evidence that the witness or witnesses have received treatment of a nature to which he is not ordinarily accustomed and that fact induces him to testify, will you consider that?

A. Yes.

Q. And will you?

A. Yes.

Q. In other words, we will shed light as best we can on every witness who takes the stand, accomplice or not, and you shall find your own way in determining the truth or falsity; will you?

A. Yes.

Q. And if other testimony comes here, other witnesses, which tends to connect the defendant with the commission of the crime, the law as given by the Court shall say to you, "I se certain standards in measuring the truth or falsity of their testimony," you will follow it?

A. Yes.

Q. You will obey that law, won't you?

A. Yes.

[fol. 2577] Q. And if this other independent testimony comes from murderers and extortionists and convicts and pimps and shylocks and draft-dodgers, you will consider that, too, won't you? This is not talk. Don't accept it until you hear it as truth from the stand. So out of all that you find a reasonable doubt, the Judge says a reasonable doubt, you must give it to the defendant, and you will?

A. Yes.

Q. And you will too?

A. Yes.

Q. If by any chance—— Well, I would not say by any chance. I take it that the Court in its wisdom will keep you gentlemen together throughout this trial. That is a matter of procedure for the Court. You won't charge that to the defendants, will you?

A. No, sir.

Q. You, sir?

A. No.

Q. As far as you know and as far as I know, if you should take your oath as jurors to render an impartial verdict in this case, will you keep your oath?

A. Yes.

Q. And you owe no obligation to anybody in this case except to do your duty as a juror, eminently impartial to both sides?

A. Yes, sir.

By Mr. Cuff:

Q. Mr. Edghill and Mr. Stites, I will address my questions, as Mr. Barshay did, to you both together, so there won't be any repetition if I can avoid it. I gather from what you said, Mr. Stites that you have, up to the time you [fol. 2578] took your seat in the jury box, an unfavorable impression about the defendants or some of them. Is that right?

A. Yes.

Q. You have it now?

A. I have it now.

Q. Would you mind telling me how long that impression has remained in your mind?

A. Since I first started to read about it.

Q. That does not give us any idea.

A. About a year and a half.

Q. You had this unfavorable impression?

A. Yes.

Q. Entertain it now, been in your mind for a year and a half?

A. Not about this case.

Q. I am addressing my questions now to your impression. I am not talking about anything else, just your impression which you say you have kept in your mind for one year and a half at least, is that right?

A. Yes.

Q. It has not grown any weaker in that time, has it?

A. Yes, I did not think about it.

Q. Have you changed your mind about it since you first formed it?

A. I have not changed my mind; I did not think about it.

Q. I am not asking you that. I say that impression has not grown any fainter or weaker, has it, in the year and a half?

A. No, sir.

Q. And each time you took up a newspaper and found some article about these defendants in it you read it in the [fol. 2579] light of that impression which you had previously formed?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And each succeeding newspaper or whatever it was, magazine, that you read, deepened the impression as it was formed originally, didn't it?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. So that it continued to grow stronger rather than weaker as the year and a half went by, isn't that the fact, honestly speaking?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. In the paper that you read the articles contained statements that were in your mind construed by you as detrimental to the defendants or some of them in this case, isn't that right?

A. I don't get the first part of it.

Q. The articles which you read and which helped to form in your mind this unfavorable impression that you have told us about, did they contain statements or expressions of opinion that were detrimental to these defendants?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you accepted those statements and those expressions of opinion that you read in those papers as true, did you not?

A. I did not know anything about it.

Q. You did accept them as true? Did you tell Mr. Barshay that as you sit in the jury box now you regard these defendants and all of them as innocent men, presumed to be innocent in this case?

A. In this case until the trial, until I get the evidence.

Q. Do you honestly believe, Mr. Stites, and I am only seeking your Honest opinion, so as to ascertain the state [fol. 2580] of your mind—do you honestly believe that after entertaining this unfavorable impression about the defendants or some of them for a year and a half that you can do what the law says you must do, give the benefit of the presumption of innocence to these defendants and each of them, one hundred per cent?

A. No, I would not.

Q. You don't think you can?

A. Not the way it is now, no, sir.

Mr. Cuff: Challenge for cause.

The Court: Try the challenge.

LEWIS F. STITES, residing at 10 Westminster Road, Brooklyn, New York, being duly sworn, testified as follows:

By Mr. Cuff:

Q. Mr. Stites, before you were sworn I asked you a series of questions.

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you made answers to them?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. If those questions were put to you now in the same fashion would your answers be the same?

A. They would.

Q. And do those answers reflect the true state of your mind as you express it?

A. Yes, sir.

Mr. Cuff: That is all. I press the challenge.

The Court: The trouble is that due to some of the answers being inaudible, the Court does not know what they were.

Mr. Turkus: On the basis of the record made by Mr. Cuff and Mr. Barshay, the District Attorney will not oppose [fol. 2581] the granting of the challenge.

The Court: He may not oppose it, but I cannot allow challenge by consent.

Mr. Rosenthal: He said the present state of his mind is such that even though the law is that a defendant is presumed to be innocent, that that is not the frame of mind in this case at this time. That is in substance——

Mr. Cuff: That is what he said substantially. May we have the answer read?

The Court: Is that correct?

The Talesman: What was that?

The Court: Please listen. Mr. Rosenthal will say it again.

Mr. Rosenthal: Let me ask it in the form of a question.

By Mr. Rosenthal:

Q. Mr. Cuff just asked you a series of questions. This is Mr. Cuff, who just addressed you.

A. Yes, sir.

Q. In response to his question, isn't it a fact that you said in substance that in this trial here you could not give the defendants the benefit of the presumption of innocence which arises in their favor? Is that what you answered?

A. I did not understand that. This trial has not taken place yet.

Mr. Cuff: May we have the question and the answer read?

(Question and answer read.)

The Court: Sustained.

[fol. 2582] By Mr. Cuff:

Q. Now, Mr. Edghill, I gather from what you told Mr. Barshay and Mr. Turkus that you will strive in every way to apply the rules of law that his Honor will give you for your guidance in the jury room in considering the evidence and in arriving at a just determination in this case; is that right?

A. Correct.

Q. Now, if his Honor charges you that you and the eleven other men who will be selected as jurors in this case are the sole and absolute and exclusive judges of the fact, that no one, not even his Honor, can invade that province of yours, will you see to it that you are guided by that instruction and that you will, uninfluenced by anybody but your own consideration of the evidence and your discussion with your fellow jurors, decide the facts in this case?

A. I will.

Q. If you reach the conclusion honestly and fairly, after giving that careful consideration to the evidence, under the rules that his Honor will give you for your guidance, if, I say, you should reach the conclusion that there is a reasonable doubt as to the guilt of the defendants or any one of them, and that that is a doubt that is based upon the evidence or lack of evidence, will you have any hesitation in giving that doubt, the benefit of that doubt, to the defendant or defendants to whom it applies and vote not guilty?

A. No.

Q. Assume that you have reached that reasonable doubt based upon your consideration of the evidence and reason-[fol. 2583] able discussion with your fellow jurors based upon the evidence in the case fails to convince you that you are wrong, will you for any reason surrender your judgment, other than for any reason other than reasonable argument and consideration of the evidence, if his Honor tells you that you must give to the defendants the benefit of your individual judgment in your verdict?

A. I will not.

Q. Neither the lateness of the hour nor the number of men who may be against you on that question will influence you so long as you are honest in your entertainment of that reasonable doubt, is that right?

A. Correct.

Q. And if you are selected here may I rest assured, so far as my client is concerned, that no consideration other than the credible evidence in this case, the evidence that you believe after giving it the consideration that it is entitled to, will influence your vote; is that right?

A. Positive.

Mr. Cuff: That is all.

By Mr. Rosenthal:

Q. Mr. Edghill, when Mr. Barshay was questioning you he asked you whether you knew any of the lawyers and you said no, except from seeing them around the court-house, or some answer such as that. You meant around this court-house?

A. Yes, in the County Court.

Q. Have you been called as a juror before in the County Court?

A. Six or eight times in the past seven or eight years. [fol. 2584] Q. And when was the last time that you were called?

A. I think the last time was toward the end of last year or early this year in Judge Fitzgerald's part.

Q. Toward the end of last year or the early part of this year? Judge Fitzgerald's court?

A. Yes.

Q. Were you actually examined at that time?

A. No, I have only got as far as the jury box once.

Q. You went as far as the jury box and you were excused by one of the counsel?

A. I was excused by mutual consent.

Q. Was Mr. Turkus the attorney in that case?

A. I don't think so.

Q. Can you recall who the defense counsel was? Was it any one of the lawyers in the court-room?

A. I was not in the case, so I do not know whether——

Q. What I thought you said was that you had gotten into the jury box.

A. Yes.

Q. Was it a capital case, a murder case?
A. Yes, a re-trial.
Q. Were you called on a special panel?
A. Excuse me—the case I was excused on——
Q. You are not allowed——

Mr. Turkus: I waive.

Q. Will you give me the name?
A. The case was six men charged with murder.
Q. That was more than a year ago: That was before [fol. 2585] Judge O'Dwyer became District Attorney.
A. That is right.
Q. That was the last time you were called?
A. No, I have been called several times since.
Q. Then you misunderstood me. I asked when was the last time you were called.
A. The last time on this panel was either early this year or December last year.
Q. The question I asked you was in reference to the last time you were called, which was December of last year or January of this year. Did you actually get called to the jury box at that time?
A. No.
Q. You were merely on the panel?
A. On the panel; my name was not drawn.
Q. Was Mr. Turkus the Assistant at that time?

Mr. Turkus: I did not try any case in December or January.

Q. Was that before Judge Fitzgerald, that is, this last time?
A. Yes.
Q. And was that a capital case also?
A. Yes.
Q. Were you present in the court-room during the discussion between the Assistant District Attorney and the prospective jurymen and defense counsel at that time?
A. I was in the court-room two days.
Q. Do you recall who the Assistant was then?
A. I don't.
Q. You don't recall who the defense counsel was?
A. I can tell you what the case was. I don't recall who——

[fol. 2586] Q. In examining the jurors we are supposed to refrain from any discussion of the facts of other cases. For that reason, in a round about way, we lawyers try to find out in our own mind whether we can figure the case. I don't want to ask you questions we are not supposed to discuss. Something might happen which might prejudice the other men and make us start all over again.

A. I don't recall who the counsel were.

Q. And how long before that time were you called to serve, approximately?

A. About three months. That case was postponed. I got five notices postponed. Finally it was called off.

Q. So when you said you were called four or five times in the last three years, you mean, I assume—and if I am wrong, correct me—that you were originally called and the case was continuously postponed?

A. No, I only considered that as one.

Q. When then before that one was it that you were called to serve?

A. The year before last, 1939.

Q. That was before Judge O'Dwyer was District Attorney. That was while Judge O'Dwyer was on the bench, was it? 1939, must have been.

A. Yes.

Q. Did you sit in any of these cases in the County Court at all, actually participating in the trial as a juror?

A. No.

Q. So your only actual service as a juryman has been in the Federal Court?

A. And the Supreme Court.

Q. Those were civil cases?

A. Then I was on the Anner.

Q. That was in the Supreme Court?

A. I did not serve on the jury.

[fol. 2587] Q. You were called, but did not get into the box?

A. I got into the box but was challenged.

Q. In any of the cases that you served on in the Federal Court, was the question of accomplice testimony ever a part of the case?

A. No.

Q. So that in so far as the question of accomplices are concerned, the discussion as to accomplice testimony in so far as you are concerned, I should say, is confined to what you heard in this court in the last couple of days that you have been here; am I right in that assumption?

A. Right. No, I heard that in other cases instructions of the jury.

Q. In other words, while you were seated there you heard instructions to jurymen who were other than yourself?

A. Yes.

Q. Who were actually serving, and you listened?

A. Right.

Q. Of a similar nature to what you heard here today: is that correct?

A. Right.

Q. You have read concerning one or more of these defendants, you say, in various newspapers. And in the reading matter which you have seen did you read it to such an extent that it in any wise formed any impression in your mind?

A. No, I only glanced it over.

Q. You have never served as a Grand Juror?

A. No, sir.

Q. And in glancing over the matter which you read, was it just a cursory reading, or did it form any impression of any character on your mind?

[fol. 2588] Mr. Turkus: Objected to. That has been answered. The talesman said it was a cursory reading.

Mr. Rosenthal: This is the first time the word has been used.

Mr. Turkus: Didn't you use the word?

The Court: Overruled.

By the Court:

Q. Did it form any impression as to the guilt or innocence of the defendants?

A. None at all, no, sir.

By Mr. Rosenthal:

Q. You feel here at this time that so far as all the defendants are concerned, that you could be fair and impartial to both sides, taking the law from the Court and applying that law to the facts as you see them: is that correct?

A. I do.

Q. You understand that each one of these defendants, although they are being tried together, are entitled to a separate trial at your hands; you understand that?

A. I do.

Q. I appear, together with my associates, for the defendant Capone. That is clear to you?

A. Yes.

Q. Each defendant has his own counsel or counsels. The mere fact there happens to be nine counsel in the court room here does not in any wise act to the detriment of the defendants in your mind, does it?

A. In no way.

Q. In the case of the defendant Capone, who I represent, in the judgment of his counsel we may put in a defense, in [fol. 2589] other words, the defendant may take the stand. Now, merely because he is a defendant, would that in and of itself make you disbelieve him if he took the stand?

A. No.

Q. Of course, you understand that, the same as with any other witness, you have a right, when you are determining what weight you are going to give to the testimony of a witness, to determine what interest or motive he may have to testify. You understand that?

A. Yes.

Q. As well as his actions and demeanor on the stand and his background, everything, anything that will aid you in your mind to solve the main issue, namely, Is the person telling the truth? Now, if the defendant offer himself as a witness and you, a juror, having that in mind, and you believe he was telling the truth, you would give the same value to his testimony, would you not, as you would give to any other person you believed; am I correct?

A. Correct.

Q. The word "alibi" has been used. I do not know whether it has been discussed while you have been a prospective juryman or not. Have you heard it discussed?

A. (Answer inaudible.)

Q. It may be possible that the defendant may offer proof of what is termed in law an alibi, which simply means, in plain language, that there will be individuals who will take the stand and testify to the fact that the defendant was not at or near the scene of the particular crime at the time it is alleged that it happened. Do I make myself clear?

[fol. 2590] A. Perfectly.

Q. If the Court were to instruct you—and the only reason I am talking anything about the law to you is this, that you understand, as a human being, that you have a right to your own opinion in your own mind. Some of us object to certain law, and we subordinate the law to our own opinion. Is that right? Some people on prohibition. Is that right?

A. Yes.

Q. The purpose that I have in mind in questioning you is that you may disagree on particular points, and on those points, if they arise in this trial, you might in your own mind feel you would be prejudiced. Do I make myself clear to you?

A. Yes.

Q. For that reason, any question that I may address in which I say anything about the law is merely to ascertain whether or not you feel competent, if you are accepted as a juror, to follow those instructions of law and subordinate your own opinion, whatever it may be, to the law itself. Is that clear?

A. Yes.

Q. If proof of an alibi is offered and the Court were to say to you that the law of our land is that no man has to prove his innocence and that no man has to offer anything in his behalf, he does not have to take the stand, he does not have to call any witness, and whether he does or he does not, the burden never shifts from the District Attorney to establish his guilt to your satisfaction beyond a reasonable doubt, before you can convict; assuming that the Judge tells you [fol. 2591] that, does the mere fact that I have mentioned to you that the defendant may take the stand and offer proof, in any wise lead your mind to believe that under circumstances of that character the burden would shift over to our side?

A. It does not.

Q. If the Court were to instruct you that where evidence of an alibi is offered, if that evidence is of sufficient import to your mind to raise a reasonable doubt as to whether the particular defendant who offers the evidence did actually participate in the crime, that doubt, like any other doubt, must be resolved in favor of the defendant and you must acquit, would you follow that law?

A. I understand.

Q. On the question of accomplices, I believe Mr. Turk asked a question—and I don't recall whether the Court addressed any remarks particularly to you along the same line as to the fact that no man can be convicted on the uncorroborated testimony of an accomplice. Is that clear?

A. Yes.

Q. If the Court were to charge you that the corroboration, the other evidence, is not evidence of a number of accomplices accusing these defendants, but must come from an independent source, you would follow that instruction?

A. I will follow the instructions of the Court.

Q. You understand that the accomplice may be telling the truth about himself and at the same time telling an untruth as to the others. Is that true?

A. Yes.

Q. And do you understand further that your job is not to [fol. 2502] find out whether he is telling the truth about whether he, the accomplice, so-called, committed the crime, but your job is to find out whether he is telling the truth about any one of these defendants when and if he accuses that particular defendant of having helped, aided, or participated in the crime itself. Is that clear to you?

A. Yes.

Q. You understand further that if the Court were to charge you that the independent evidence outside of the accomplice testimony is not proof that actually a crime was committed to make myself clear, that if the accomplice says, "I shot the man, and he dropped in front of such a place, and he died in an automobile," a policeman takes the stand, a coroner or medical examiner, and says, "We found the man dead with a gunshot, in an automobile," that does not prove that any one of these defendants helped him; is that true?

A. Yes.

Q. Do you understand that the proof which you must look for if you are accepted as a juryman is independent proof which will tend to connect the particular defendant with the crime? Is that clear?

A. Yes.

Q. You find no fault with any law of that character?

A. None whatever.

Q. And if you are instructed by the Court on the proposition, if it does arise, of that character, you will strictly adhere to it and follow it; is that correct?

A. I understand.

Q. It may be, sir, that the District Attorney may con-
[fol. 2593] tend—and before you were accepted on the jury this has been repeated a number of times—we have no way of ascertaining at this time what the District Attorney contends, therefore we address certain questions to you that may or may not subsequently come into the evidence; is that clear to you?

A. Yes.

Q. It may be that the District Attorney may contend that this independent evidence consists of an alleged oral statement or admission which the one or more of these defendants are supposed to have made to somebody whom he will call as a witness, the District Attorney, and who will go on the stand and say, "I spoke to the defendant. He, the defendant, said to me that he helped commit the crime." Do I make myself clear so far?

A. Yes.

Q. If such happens to be the case will you, in determining what weight you will give to that testimony, determine the source from which it comes?

A. Yes.

Q. And if you find the source from which it comes is one where the particular individual has a motive, whether it be the desire for revenge, whether it be the desire to escape punishment for murders that he, the witness, may have committed, or whether it be any other desire, whatever the motive may be to testify falsely, will you, in considering his testimony, judge from all the surrounding facts and circumstances whether or not he is telling the truth when he makes the statements accusing the defendant?

A. I will.

[fol. 2594] Q. It may be, sir, that you in your wisdom, after listening to all the evidence, may come to a conclusion one way or the other which is adverse to a majority of the members of the jury. If that time does come you understand that your duty would be to reason and tell the other remaining jurymen the reason for your coming to the conclusion that you do; is that right?

A. I understand.

Q. And you understand further their duty is correspondent to your duty, ultimately they are to reason with you and tell you their reason, is that clear?

A. Yes.

Q. If after that, after reasoning with the other men, the opinion which you formed on your conscience is one which remains with you, would you, merely because of lateness of hour, the length of time of the trial, the fact that numbers are against you, or for any other reason except the fact that you have been convinced that you are wrong in your logic, would you change your opinion merely because of those facts?

A. No.

Q. You have been asked, or most of the jurymen have been asked whether you would fearlessly or courageously find a verdict of guilty if the evidence warranted it, and you rightly said yes. On the other hand, because of publicity having been given to this case, do you feel that it is your bounden duty to find a verdict of guilty if the evidence does not warrant it?

A. No.

Q. You know that you owe just as great a duty to these [fol. 2595] defendants, who are a part of the State of New York, as you owe to the People of the State of which they are a part and you are a part; you understand that?

A. I do.

Q. And you understand that your bounden duty, if you are convinced of the fact that The People have failed beyond a reasonable doubt to prove the guilt of these defendants, is to fearlessly and courageously announce that fact in your verdict, just the same as you should fearlessly and courageously and without hesitation announce an adverse verdict; you understand that?

A. I do.

Q. You have that courage, haven't you?

A. I hope so; I believe so.

Q. Do you happen to know Captain Bals of the Police Department, Lieutenant Osnato or Detective McDonough, Detective Swift, Detective McCarthy—do you happen to know any of those?

A. No.

Q. Have you any close friends who are in the Police Department?

A. No, I have not. I only know two to come in contact with.

Q. Two patrolmen?

A. In Headquarters.

Q. Two men from Police Headquarters?
A. Yes.
Q. What Police Headquarters?
A. Manhattan.
Q. Would you mind telling me the names of the two men?
A. Captain Frank Upton of Missing Persons Bureau.
Q. And who is the other man?
A. I think he is Lieutenant Kane.
[fol. 2596] Q. I don't want to pry into your business. And if you have any objection to disclosing this, don't think I am unnecessarily curious. You say you came in contact with these men in a business way. May I ask what you mean by that?
A. I was connected with the—Welfare work.
Q. Was it in connection with that particular work that you came in contact with them?
A. Yes.
Q. You have no social acquaintance?
A. None at all.
Q. They have not visited you or you them?
A. No.
Q. And you have never discussed police duties with them?
A. No.
Q. That was the real purpose of my inquiry.
A. No personal acquaintance.
Q. That you never discussed police. Mr. Turkus has made mention about the fact as to whether you had any objection to the District Attorney breaking a case from the inside by using the testimony of an accomplice. Do you recall that?
A. Yes.
Q. You don't assume from the statement that he makes here that it is a fact that this case has been broken from the inside so far as it affects the defendant? That is your job. You understand that the fact that a particular individual tells him or tells Judge O'Dwyer or the Grand Jury that he, that indivdual, actually shot and killed Rosen and then accuses these three men of being a party, it is no proof that what he may have told the Grand Jury or Mr. Turkus or Judge O'Dwyer is the truth other than it affects [fol. 2597] him, the particular individual; is that right?
A. Right.

Q. Now then, if you find that that particular individual, the so-called accomplice, has committed a number of murders, and if he admits to this one, this one in itself, and if he testified before the Grand Jury, the Court will tell you he gets immunity, he cannot be prosecuted——

Mr. Turkus: That is bad law.

Mr. Barshay: But it is the law.

Mr. Rosenthal: It may be a bad law, but it is good law.

Mr. Turkus: It is bad law the way you say it.

Mr. Rosenthal: Let me withdraw it.

Q. Let me put it this way generally: This particular individual who calls himself now an accomplice, it may develop, has committed a number of murders for which the individual wishes to escape punishment to himself. It may develop. So that the statement of Mr. Turkus to you about the solution from the inside does not have any weight or effect on you as you go into this jury box?

A. No, naturally I do not know anything about the case.

Q. I am not trying to ask you any tricky questions. I just want to see whether or not, because he tells you something, you start off with the assumption that it is true. You do not start off with the assumption that anything he has told you, not under oath, is the truth, do you, any more than anything I have told you?

[fol. 2598] A. Naturally not.

Q. You understand that your province is to take the truth as you see it only from the witness stand and from no other place?

A. Right.

Q. And do you understand further that whatever your verdict may be, if it is based on your conscience, that it is your verdict and it is your conscience and it is your oath, and nobody can be heard to complain whether it be the defendants or any other person. You understand that?

A. I understand.

Q. Have you any reason that has not been reached by questioning by any of the counsel or the Court that in your mind as you sit here would pervent you from acting as a fair and impartial juror? Do you know of any reason at all?

A. No reason.

Mr. Rosenthal: No challenge for cause.

Mr. Turkus: Mr. Edghill is satisfactory to The People of the State.

Mr. Barshay: The gentelman is satisfatcory.

(James L. Edghill took Seat No. 11 in the jury box.)

(Arthur A. Fisher, of 5822 Eighth Avenue, was called and took Seat No. 12 in the jury box.)

Mr. Talley: Will your Honor see me at the bench with the District Attorney for a moment?

The Court: Yes.

(Mr. Talley and Mr. Turkus conferred with the Court at the bench.)

[fol. 2599] By Mr. Turkus:

Q. Mr. Fisher, do you reside at 5822 Eighth Avenue?

A. Yes.

Q. Is that commonly called Bay Ridge?

A. Yes.

Q. Have you lived there for a number of years?

A. Just three years.

Q. You are listed here as a secretary. By whom are you employed?

A. Real estate.

Q. When you qualified as a special juror were you working for somebody else?

A. No, I was working for myself as a real estate man.

By the Court:

Q. Local man?

A. Yes, local.

Q. In that neighborhood of the Long Island Railroad cut?

A. Yes. We have been there since 1917. We do business on Eighth Avenue.

Q. You rent property and manage it?

A. That is right.

Q. How long have you been doing that?

A. Since 1917 in that particular spot, 5718 Eighth Avenue, Brooklyn.

Q. Before you went into business, weren't you in some office downtown?

A. No, I was not.

Q. Do you belong to a civic organization?
A. I do not.
Q. May I ask how old a man you are?
A. Fifty-four.
Q. Born in Brooklyn?
A. I was raised in Brooklyn.
Q. Before you went in the real estate business, what business were you in?
A. I was in the wire business.
[fol. 2660] Q. Whereabouts?
A. In Taafe Place.
Q. That is off Willoughby Avenue?
A. Two blocks down, Flushing Avenue.

By Mr. Turkus:

Q. Mr. Fisher, I assume that you were in court when as prosecutor I spoke about the garment industry and the needle trades and the clothing industry. Is there anything in your present business connection or past business connection that brings you into contact with any manufacturer of garments?
A. None whatsoever.
Q. Or anyone that delivers clothing, that is, clothing truckers?
A. No.
Q. Do you have any contacts presently, or any in the past, with anybody in Brownsville or East New York?
A. None at all.

By the Court:

Q. May I ask who takes care of your business while you are on the jury?
A. We have a corporation. There is four of us in it, my brother-in-law and two other men.
Q. What is the name of the company?
A. J. P. Harrigan, Inc.

By Mr. Turkus:

Q. Is there a Mr. William Harrigan in the firm?
A. No.
Q. Or is he one of the relatives?
A. No.

Q. Because there was a William Harrigan who was a law clerk in my office.

A. No.

The Court: When I asked you if yea were downtown I [fol. 2601] was thinking of Jim Fisher.

Q. Have you served as a juror heretofore in a criminal case?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was that in recent years?

A. Yes, last December, Judge Fitzgerald.

Q. Do you recall who the prosecutor was?

A. Not the name.

Q. Were any of these defense lawyers engaged in the defense of that case?

A. No, I do not know any one of them.

Q. Do you know any member of the bar who specializes in the defense of criminal cases?

A. I do not.

Q. I was not the prosecutor in the case?

A. You were not.

Q. I assume that you are in sympathy with law enforcement?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Is there anything concerning any of the names that were mentioned that you should call to my attention?

A. No.

Q. Did you hear certain names mentioned from time to time—And part of the testimony in this case will emanate or come from one who is known under the law as an accomplice. The best way I can say it in plain English is it is one who himself has participated with others in the commission of crime and the crime charged in this indictment. Is there anything about the nature of a prosecution which rests in part upon the testimony of an accomplice which causes you to have any bias or prejudice against the prosecution?

A. No, sir.

Q. Do you have any bias or prejudice against the prosecutor, Judge O'Dwyer, who, in order to solve a murder, [fol. 2602] has accepted the testimony of an accomplice and uses it against the other perpetrators of the crime?

A. No.

Q. In the case in which you sat was there accomplice testimony, one of the men testifying against his former associates in the commission of the offense?

A. No.

Q. The Judge will charge you as to the rules of law that you apply to an accomplice witness. He will tell you these rules to guide you in ascertaining whether the accomplice speaks the truth. Is that clear to you?

A. Yes.

Q. Will you bear in mind that every test that the Judge gives you to apply, or every test that your ordinary common sense dictates to you should be applied to an accomplice witness is done for the sole issue of ascertaining does that accomplice speak the truth, not only about himself but about these other men who perpetrated the crime with him? Do you understand that?

A. I understand.

Q. Will you, sir, if accepted as a juror, devote your mental faculties to ascertaining does the accomplice who testifies here speak the truth about the group part that each one played as a combination, the part that each defendant played in the commission of the crime? Do you follow that?

A. Yes.

Q. And will you devote your mental faculties to find that out? It may be that you may not like an accomplice, as a matter of fact, you may dislike him intensely, but do you understand, Mr. Fisher, that that is not the test here, [fol. 2003] whether you dislike him or like him; do you understand that?

A. Yes.

Q. For example, you may feel that this accomplice tells the truth and you may feel that in addition to the accomplice's testimony there is other evidence from an independent source coming within the confines of the admonition that the Judge gives you, other proof which tends to connect each one of these defendants with the commission of the crime, and you may believe that beyond a reasonable doubt. If you feel that way, and your state of mind is such, is it not, that you would not acquit three guilty men because you do not like an accomplice?

A. No.

Q. Something has been said here by one of the lawyers who represents the defendant Buchalter that Buchalter has been convicted of other crimes and is now serving a long jail term as penalty for those offenses. I want to know from you, is your state of mind such that you may relax your duty as a juror in this case or deviate from a result that is proper and just because he is presently incarcerated?

A. No.

Q. It has been pointed out too by one of the defense lawyers, and properly so, that the defendants at the bar of justice are required to meet the specific charge in the indictment, and this indictment is for the murder of a man named Joseph Rosen. By the same token, do you appreciate that the duty of the District Attorney is, and the law only permits this, that he establish guilt beyond a reasonable doubt on the charge and this charge alone: [fol. 2604] do you understand that?

A. Yes.

Q. In other words, we have no more to do and no less to do. The law does not permit less and it does not permit more. Do you understand that?

A. Yes.

Q. Having served in a prior case— Was it a capital case? By that I mean was the charge murder in one of its degrees.

A. Murder in the first degree.

Q. I take it, then, that you understand that the Judge in that case, as in this case, charged on certain benefits or rights that every defendant accused of crime must have in a criminal case. In this case, no matter what you heard in the other case, I assume it will be the same thing, because the law is settled in these cases, will you take the law implicitly from Judge Taylor?

A. Yes.

Q. In its every aspect, and with the intelligence that you have derived from your every-day business experience, apply it to the evidence in this case?

A. Yes.

Q. Should the Judge in substance charge you—I do not know whether he will use this language, but he may use similar language—should he charge you that the independent proof or the corroborative proof that is required need not support the testimony of the accomplice in its every detail, but it may be deemed sufficient by the jury, when believed, if it tends to connect the defendants and each of them with the commission of the crime, will you [fol. 2605] accept that definition of law?

A. Yes.

Q. And apply it to the facts in this case?

A. Yes.

Q. Will you keep uppermost in your mind, and will you devote your mental faculties to this determination of this issue: Have these defendants and every one of them, Buchalter, Capone, and Weiss, been established guilty beyond a reasonable doubt or have The People failed to establish their guilt and are they innocent? Will you give to these defendants everything that the law of the land says they have given them, everything, the presumption of innocence, the doctrine of reasonable doubt, the burden of proof, and every rule of law and every safeguard that Judge Taylor will give you? Will you do that?

A. I will.

Q. Will you do this, too: After you hear all the evidence in the case, and every bit of it, if, after you hear it all, and then you have a reasonable doubt in your mind as to their guilt, acquit them; will you do that?

A. Yes.

Q. But after you get all the evidence in the case, and if your mind is satisfied that there are three guilty men here who operated as a combination and played the part that the witnesses in this case say they did in the commission of the Rosen murder, and you believe it beyond a reasonable doubt, will you tell us that in your verdict?

A. Yes.

Q. Without fear and without hesitation?

A. I will.

[fol. 2606] Q. Is there anything I should know about your qualification to sit here and do justice with your verdict?

A. Nothing. I have an open mind.

By Mr. Talley:

Q. Mr. Fisher, have you read anything about this case?

A. Nothing, practically, at all.

Q. Have you read anything that made any impression upon your mind, directly or indirectly, in any way?

A. No.

Q. That affects the guilt or innocence of these defendants?

A. No.

Q. As far as your mind is concerned, then, it is entirely open?

A. It is.

Q. To hear the evidence and pass upon it and decide accordingly?

A. Yes.

Q. If after hearing all the evidence you have a reasonable doubt in your mind as to the guilt of these defendants, will you acquit them without fear or hesitation?

A. I will.

Q. The court will charge you that they are presumed to be innocent until their guilt is established by evidence that satisfies the jury beyond a reasonable doubt. That is our American law. Will you give them that presumption?

A. I will.

Q. The court will charge you that if accomplices are called to testify against these defendants, or men who say they are accomplices, who will try and satisfy you that they are accomplices, if the Court charges you that the evidence of an [fol. 2607] accomplice must be corroborated by evidence quite independent of their testimony, will you insist upon that kind of evidence being presented and believed by you before you will vote to convict these defendants?

A. Yes.

Q. Have you sat in any other homicide case than the one you spoke of about last November?

A. No.

Q. That is the first and only time you sat in that type of case? And in that case there was a determination by the jury, was there?

A. Yes.

Q. Did you ever hear of these defendants before you came into this Court?

A. No.

Q. And you read nothing about them?

A. Nothing to speak of.

Q. When you say——

A. I saw the name of Lepke in the paper. That is about all I can remember.

Q. Did you read anything about it, having seen his name?

A. No.

Q. Did you read anything about either of the other two defendants in connection with that article that you read?

A. No.

Q. Did you form any impression at all from your reading of the name of Lepke in the papers, about him?

A. I did not even read it.

Q. You have no impression and you had none at any time?

A. I had none and I have none.

Q. Is there any reason that you know that we have not interrogated you about—And Lord knows we have interrogated you about enough.

A. I heard all the questions.

[fol. 2608] Q. Is there any reason that you know why you cannot sit as a fair and impartial juror in the trial of this case?

A. Nothing whatsoever.

Q. Any reason that you know that would prevent you from doing exact justice?

A. No.

Q. Between The People on one side and these defendants upon the other?

A. No.

Mr. Talley: I have no further questions.

By Mr. Fischbein:

Q. Mr. Fisher, you have been in the court-room for the past three days, have you?

A. Yes.

Q. And you have listened to questions propounded by Mr. Turkus and by the other lawyers who represent two of the other defendants?

A. Yes.

Q. And you have heard Mr. Turkus mention certain names of people in Brownsville, East New York?

A. Yes.

Q. You have heard him also mention names of individuals that come from the garment center?

A. Yes.

Q. You heard him speak, did you not, of some people that are connected with certain unions?

A. Yes.

Q. The fact that Mr. Turkus has mentioned those names, has that in any wise influenced you in so far as your mind is free from prejudice or bias or sympathy at the present time?

A. No.

Q. It has not? Have you been impressed, sir, by anything that was stated in the court-room, anything at all? In [fol. 2609] other words, what I mean by that, Mr. Fisher, have you an impression which goes to your ability to serve as a fair and impartial juror by reason of anything that may have taken place in this court-room by way of questions or anything else?

A. No. I heard all the questions and I have an open mind.

Q. Prior to serving last December before Judge Fitzgerald, have you ever had any other jury service?

A. No.

Q. That was the only time that you were selected? That was the only time you served?

A. That was the only time I was ever really called.

Q. And prior to December of last year, have you ever been questioned by any lawyers or by any prosecutor?

A. No, I was always excused before.

Q. Before you were called to the jury box?

Mr. Climenko: No questions.

Mr. Turkus: Mr. Fisher is satisfactory to The People.

Mr. Climenko: May it please your Honor, the defendants challenge the gentleman peremptorily.

Stuart Andrews, No. 3037, of 153 East 29th Street, Brooklyn, New York, was called and took Seat No. 12 in the jury box.

Mr. Climenko: May it please your Honor, all defense counsel respectfully request an opportunity to be heard before your Honor on a matter which all defense counsel deem of concern to themselves.

[fol. 2610] The Court: Is that the same matter I have just discussed?

Mr. Climenko: If it may be in the absence of the jury.

The Court: It won't be necessary for you all to come up. I just want to be enlightened. You come up, Judge Talley.

Mr. Talley: The same matter.

The Court: You can be the spokesman.

Mr. Talley: I would rather one of these other gentlemen was.

Mr. Climenko: Will your Honor permit two of us to come up?

The Court: Yes.

(Mr. Turkus, Mr. Rosenthal, and Mr. Climenko conferred with the Court at the bench.)

The Court: (To Juror No. 8) Mr. Strober, for reasons which are not to be discussed in open court, all counsel have agreed to excuse you, and the Court thinks the reason is sufficient. It does not reflect on you in any way at all.

Mr. Strober: I understand.

The Court: You know the reason?

Mr. Strober: I know.

The Court: Perfectly honorable, but it is believed [fol. 2011] advisable that you should not be embarrassed.

Mr. Strober: I appreciate that.

The Court: The other gentlemen may move up. Call one more.

John J. Rourke of 1288 East 34th Street, was called and took Seat No. 12 in the jury box.

By the Court:

Q. Mr. Andrews, you are a salesman for what line of merchandise?

A. Envelope manufacturers, folding carton manufacturers.

Q. What concern?

A. P. L. Andrews Corporation.

Q. You are down on White Street, New York?

A. No, sir. The plant is in Glendale, Long Island, and my sales office is in New York City.

Q. Isn't that in Manhattan?

A. No, that is another firm, that is the H. P. Andrews firm.

Q. Harold Andrews?

A. Harold Percy, I believe.

Q. They moved to Manhattan?

A. That is correct.

Q. You live between Tilden Avenue and Beverly?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. One of those Calder houses?
A. That is correct.
Q. Where is your office located?
A. At 1328 Broadway.
Q. And you have been connected how long?
A. About twenty years.
Q. And before that?
A. I served in the American Expeditionary Forces dur-
[fol. 2612] ing the war. Been with the organization since I returned from France.
Q. What outfit were you in?
A. 106th Infantry, 27th Division.
Q. And before that?
A. I left school to join the Army.
Q. Do you belong to the Legion?
A. I am a member of the Veterans of Foreign Wars.

By Mr. Turkus:

Q. Mr. Andrews, the Judge has brought out your background in great detail and saved me all that bother. I can get right down to this point now. There is nothing in your background that brings you into contact with the garment industry, the needle trades, or the manufacture of clothes?
A. Not at all.
Q. No clothing truckers?

By the Court:

Q. Just one question. In making these cartons and paper boxes, you fill orders telephoned to your concern from various dealers in marchandise in the Borough of Manhattan?
A. Yes, we serve the large manufacturer or various industries throughout the country, not directly connected with the garment trade.
Q. You do include the garment trade?
A. No, it would not.
Q. What particular kinds?
A. Well, for the packaging of drugs and foods and textiles, hosiery. That is about as close an approach as we make to the garment trade.
Q. None of the light paper boxes?
A. No.
Q. All the heavy cartons?
[fol. 2613] A. No, quite the contrary, ours is more the smaller units. Ours is a package house.

Q. They are more sturdy than used in garment trade?

A. Quite the contrary. Your garment boxes are a large size type of box. Ours is a smaller unit, more of a counter unit, so to speak.

By Mr. Turkus:

Q. And the work that you do is sales representative?

A. That is right.

Q. In regards to Brownsville or East New York, can I go along—no contacts there of any kind, nature, or have you?

A. Not familiar at all with the section.

Q. Did you ever serve as a juror in any type of litigation?

A. To the various minor cases in years past.

Q. Were they civil cases, Mr. Andrews?

A. Those were. I served on one criminal case.

Q. Has it been in this court?

A. No, it was two years or more ago, still in the old building.

Q. It may not have been a criminal case, because we have been here more than two years in this building. Unless it was years ago, when it was in Oxford Street, that would be considerably more than two years ago, but it does not make any difference. I no not care whether you served or you have not served; will you take the law from Judge Taylor if you serve in this case?

A. I certainly will.

Q. Every aspect you will take?

A. Right.

[fol. 2614] Q. And will you, with common sense and reason, apply it to the facts in this case?

A. Right.

Q. Is there anything as prosecutor that we should know about your qualifications to sit?

A. Nothing I can think of.

Q. Part of the testimony in this case, as has been indicated to every juror who has been accepted, will emanate from an accomplice. I take it that by now you understand what an accomplice is?

A. Correct.

Q. Have you any bias against Judge O'Dwyer, the prosecutor of the county, or against the prosecution wherein part of the testimony will emanate from an accomplice?

A. None at all.

Q. Will you apply all the tests that Judge Taylor gives you and that your common sense dictates to you should be applied to an accomplice witness to ascertain does he speak the truth about these men on trial and about the part that each one of them played as a group or combination in the killing of the victim named in this indictment?

Mr. Climenko: I object to that question.

The Court: Qualify your question.

Q. Don't think that anything that I say is evidence in the case. You will get your evidence from witnesses here. What I want to know is this: Whether you will devote your mental faculties to find out whether the accomplice in the case not only speaks the truth about these men on trial and the part that each of them, we allege, played in the [fol. 2615] commission of the murder charged in the indictment.

A. Right.

Q. And will that be the way you devote your mental faculties to see whether or not you are getting the truth from that accomplice or that associate of theirs when he speaks about them?

A. Exactly.

Q. Now, as I said to other jurors, you may not like an accomplice. My feelings toward an accomplice or your feelings toward an accomplice mean little. Our job is, to find out does he speak the truth about them, as we have discussed. Do you understand that?

A. Yes.

Q. If you feel that these men on trial are guilty of murder in the first degree and that has been established to your satisfaction beyond a reasonable doubt, is your state of mind such that you won't acquit them because you do not like an accomplice? You won't acquit three guilty men because you do not like the accomplice, would you?

A. No, of course not.

Q. It has been pointed out by one of the lawyers for Buchalter that Buchalter has been convicted of other crimes and as penalty he is serving a long jail term for those crimes. Would you relax your duty or deviate from a proper result in this case because of his present incarceration in jail?

A. No.

Q. Will you devote your mental faculties to ascertain is he guilty or innocent and are these other defendants guilty or innocent of the crime charged in this indictment?

A. Absolutely.

[fol. 2616] Q. You will be told by the Judge that there cannot be a conviction upon the unsupported testimony of an accomplice. I won't go into any detailed discussion of it. The Judge will tell you the law after you hear all the evidence, and that is the time you can use it. You cannot use it yet. You do not know what the case is all about, but I want to know this: If he tells you that the law of corroboration does not require the prosecution to establish and corrobate in detail everything the accomplice says, but that the supporting testimony, if believed by the jury, may be deemed sufficient if it tends to connect the defendants with the commission of the crime, will you follow that instruction of law?

A. I will.

Q. It has also been pointed out by one of the lawyers for these defendants, and it applies to all the defendants and it applies to every criminal case, the defendant meets only the charge in the indictment. The prosecutor establishes that charge and that alone. That is all he is allowed to do under the laws of evidence. Will you devote your mental faculties to find out, do we establish guilt here of this Rosen indictment beyond a reasonable doubt?

A. Yes.

Q. After you hear all the evidence in the case, Mr. Andrews, and after you hear everything that Judge O'Dwyer will submit to this Court and jury bearing upon the guilt of these defendants, if you entertain then a reasonable doubt about their guilt, you acquit them, do you understand that?

A. Yes.

[fol. 2617] Q. And after you get all the evidence in this case, if you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that there are three guilty men here, three of this combination or group who participated in the murder of Joseph Rosen as charged in this indictment, will you find them guilty without fear and without hesitation?

A. I will.

Q. Is there anything I should know as prosecutor before I pass on, as to your qualifications?

A. Nothing that I can think of.

Q. Mr. Rorke, do you live at East 34th Street?
A. I do.
Q. Is that Flatbush?
A. Yes.
Q. Have you lived there for a number of years?
A. Five years.
Q. And before that time where did you live?
A. Avenue K, always in the Flatbush section.

By the Court:

Q. That is near M or L?
A. It is between Avenue K and Avenue L.
Q. Near the Nostrand Avenue subway station?
A. About four or five blocks.
Q. It is up towards the Highway?
A. Two blocks from the Highway.
Q. Switchman for what?
A. New York Telephone.
Q. Employed for how long?
A. Twelve years.
Q. How old are you?
A. Thirty-two.
[fol. 2618] Q. This is your first position?
A. No, sir.
Q. Before that what line were you in?
A. I was employed by the Chatham & Phoenix Bank.
Q. In what capacity?
A. I was teller when I left. Started as clerk.
Q. John Street and Broadway?
A. Bowery and Grand Street.
Q. Branch?
A. Branch office.
Q. Are you married or unmarried?
A. Married.
Q. Who is taking care of your house when you are away on jury service?
A. Wife, I guess.
Q. She won't fret about it, will she?
A. I don't think so.
The Court: All right, go ahead.

By Mr. Turkus:

Q. All right, Mr. Rorke, the Judge has simplified my questioning of you, too. I take it from your background that

I can forget all about any connection with the garment industry, clothing industry, union officials of the Amalgamated or any of those other things that I inquired from other jurors; is that correct?

A. Yes.

Q. Exclude Brownsville-East New York?

A. Yes.

Q. Do you have any scruple, conscientious or otherwise, against capital punishment?

A. No, sir.

Q. In sympathy with law enforcement?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. I accepted as a juror, will you do justice by your verdict in the case?

A. Yes, sir.

[fol. 2619] Q. Will you give to these defendants everything that the Judge says they should have, the benefit of every law of the land and every constitutional right and safeguard?

A. Yes.

Q. And if, after you hear all the evidence in this case, if you then have a reasonable doubt about the guilt of any one of them, you will acquit that one or all of them; will you do that?

A. Yes.

Q. And if I satisfy you—and I say I, as representative of Judge O'Dwyer, the District Attorney of the County—if the evidence produced here by him in this court-room satisfies your conscience that these three men are guilty of murder in the first degree, that each one played a part in the commission of this murder, played a part as a combination or group that is charged in the indictment, will you say that in your verdict without fear or hesitation?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you find any fault with the prosecutor of the county, or do you have any prejudice against the prosecutor, Judge O'Dwyer, who, in order to solve a murder case, accepts the testimony of an accomplice? We have been over that many times. If you have any bias or prejudice, tell me about it.

A. (No answer.)

Q. All these rules and tests that your common sense will tell you that you should apply to an accomplice witness, the care, caution, and suspicion and every vicious or immoral act an accomplice may have committed during his lifetime, [fol. 2620] those are all tests to find out does he speak the truth, not only about himself, but about them. Do you understand that, Mr. Rorke?

A. Yes.

Q. As I discussed with all the other jurors that have been accepted here, it is not a question of whether you like the accomplice or whether you dislike him or whether anybody likes him. In criminal cases sometimes you have to deal with accomplices. The test is, if you are satisfied from the evidence in this case beyond a reasonable doubt that here are three guilty men, three who participated in the murder, you do not acquit them because you do not like an accomplice, do you understand?

A. Yes.

Q. That sentence of the defendant Buchalter, will that cause you to relax or deviate from the proper determination in this case?

A. No.

Q. You understand the rule that the defendants meet the one charge in the indictment, that is all the prosecutor can establish, guilty beyond reasonable doubt of this charge here?

A. Yes.

Q. Is there anything I should know as Judge O'Dwyer's representative in this prosecution, about your qualification or ability to sit here and do justice in this case?

A. I am a nephew of Inspector Rorke.

Q. Inspector Rorke does not figure in this case. All that I want to know is this, from you, Mr. Rorke, whether [fol. 2621] the Inspector is your uncle or not; we are here trying these three men on a charge of murder in the first degree; if after you get all the evidence in the case, if then you entertain a reasonable doubt about their guilt or any one of them, will you resolve that to the benefit of the one against whom you have the doubt, where there is a doubt? If, on the other hand, you are satisfied from the evidence that the District Attorney of the county presents in this court-room, that they are guilty and you believe it beyond a reasonable doubt, will you say it?

A. Yes.

Q. Is there anything that would prevent you from rendering a just verdict under your oath?

A. No.

By Mr. Climenko:

Q. Mr. Andrews, I will address my questions to you first and I will stand here so as to make sure that I talk loud enough to you and you to me, so our friends further in the court-room can hear us. You did on one occasion serve as the juror in a criminal case?

A. Yes.

Q. A couple of years ago?

A. Yes, as I recall.

Q. But I do not recall from your answer whether that was a capital case.

A. It was.

Q. Mr. Turkus was not the Assistant District Attorney in that case?

A. No, he was not.

Q. Do you remember who the Judge was?

A. I believe it was Judge Fitzgerald.

[fol. 2022] Q. And you are not clear as to whether the trial was held in this building or not?

A. No, I am not. It goes back a couple of years.

Q. You cannot recall, as you sit here now, just what year it was, although you think it was at least two years ago?

A. I believe it was. I was called many times since, but I have not gotten as far as the jury box.

Q. You understand from my questions which I put to you as attorney at this moment for the defendant Buchalter, that I am inquiring only for the purpose of trying to ascertain whether you can sit impartially in the trial of this case. Have you read about this case at any time?

A. I have, in the usual cursory reading of the newspapers.

Q. Have you also read about the defendants at any time?

A. Just what would appear in those articles which I might have glanced through.

Q. May I ask—I am trying to get directly to the point—did any of the matter which you read appear in the Mirror, Daily Mirror?

A. I never read it.

Q. So we can exclude that altogether. The other tabloid is the News. Do you ever read that?

A. No.

Q. Then there is the Hearst paper in New York called the Journal-American.

A. Another one.

Q. You never read that at all? I take it then that your morning paper is either the Times or the Tribune and your [fol. 2623] evening paper is either the Post or the Sun or the Telegram?

A. I see the Sun and Telegram.

Q. Do you read a publication that is called P. M.?

A. No.

Q. Never read anything about this case in that paper?

A. No.

Q. Did you ever read through from beginning to end any particular so-called story about this case or any of the people who are named in this indictment?

A. No, I have not.

Q. So then I may assume as a fact that whatever reading you have done in connection with this matter is purely a desultory and casual reading that really confronted you?

A. That is it.

Q. You never looked to read about this case?

A. No.

Q. And if you saw a headline about it, it made that much of an impression upon you and then you went on to other matters as to which you were more interested; is that correct?

A. Yes.

Q. Of course, you realize that this is a case that has received newspaper attention, but I can take it as a fact from you, Mr. Andrews, that you were not a person who read with interest about this case?

A. No, none.

Q. And I can also take it as a fact that you did not have any impression about this case in consequence of any newspaper reading?

A. None.

Q. Is that correct?

A. That is correct.

Q. Have you ever at any time heard about the defendants or any of them?

A. No.

[fol. 2624] Q. And I am now asking you apart from newspaper reading.

A. None.

Q. Then may I assume you have no impression, not only do you not have any impression about the case but you have no impression about the defendants or any of them?

A. None whatsoever.

Q. And you are acquainted with the precepts of our law, the fact that all defendants are presumed to be innocent? You understand that?

A. I do.

Q. That the indictment, as the lawyers says, has no probative effect?

A. Yes.

Q. Which means now that the mere fact that a charge has been made is in no sense and to no extent and to no degree proof of that charge?

A. That is right.

Q. And at the same time that the charge is made the defendants are presumed to be innocent thereof; is that correct?

A. Yes, as I understand it.

Q. And assuming that the Court instructs you, were you to be sworn as a juror here and act as a juror in the trial of this case, that the presumption continues from the beginning to the conclusion of the case.

A. Right.

Q. That these defendants are presumed to be innocent of that charge, you will have no difficulty in following that instruction?

A. None at all.

[fol. 2625] Q. Because that is a concept of law with which you are thoroughly in accord; is that correct?

A. That is right.

Q. Assuming that you were to be sworn as a juror and act as one in this case, you understand, of course, that it will be your duty as a juror to decide as to the honesty of persons who take the stand?

A. Yes.

Q. Roughly, then, the function of the Judge is to instruct you as to the law?

A. Right.

Q. The Judge is the sole judge of the law, and you and your fellow jurors are the sole judges of the facts?

A. Right.

Q. That in a very rough way is the distribution of labor in the trial of a case, you understand?

A. Yes.

Q. You understand also no one can divide the responsibility with Judge Taylor as to the instructions as to law?

A. Right.

Q. That is Judge Taylor's own province, you understand that?

A. Yes.

Q. By the same token, you understand that it is the jurors' undivided responsibility to pass upon the facts?

A. Right.

Q. You understand that?

A. Yes.

Q. You also understand, I take it, that in assessing the honesty or dishonesty of any witness who takes the stand in this case, that you are to employ your general intelligence and all of the standards which you normally employ in the discharge of the duties of your every-day life; is that correct?

A. Right.

[fol. 2626] Q. And so, in consequence of that, if a man takes the stand and admits that on former occasions he has committed perjury, that on other occasions in other courts, of jurisdiction equal to this, when he solemnly swore that he would tell the truth and he then proceeded to lie in violation of that oath, you will take that into consideration as a circumstance in determining whether or not you are going to take his word in this case; is that correct?

A. Yes.

Q. That is certainly a test that you would employ in your normal, every-day life, is that so?

A. Yes.

Q. By the same token, if a man takes the stand in this case and it becomes apparent to you, either because of questions which Mr. Turkus puts to him or questions which counsel for the defense puts, that powerful motives are operating upon that man to perhaps cause him to tell a lie, to deviate from the truth, you will take those circumstances into consideration in deciding whether or not he is telling the truth, isn't that so?

A. I should have to be the judge.

Q. Certainly. You will employ those same standards whether that particular witness be produced by the District Attorney or by anybody else, isn't that so?

A. Right.

Q. The mere fact that a witness is called to the stand by the District Attorney is not necessarily an earnest in your mind of the truth of what he says, isn't that so?

A. That is right.

[fol. 2627] Q. He has to be subjected to all of the normal tests of credibility or honesty that you would attach to anybody with whom you conduct a transaction in your normal life; isn't that so?

A. That is right.

Q. Of course, the Court will instruct you that punishment is not for the jury, as it is not, but you realize that this is a serious issue because this is what we call a capital case; correct?

A. Yes.

Q. And, that being so, you will attach to your job as a juror of sifting false from the truth the same degree of importance that you will attach to anything affecting your own interest; is that so?

A. Right.

Q. In other words, the obligation to find the truth is a very sacred, solemn one in this case; is that correct?

A. It is.

Q. Mr. Turkus has said to you and to others—he has asked you this question: Supposing an accomplice takes the stand, you won't reject his story because you don't like him? You remember that question?

A. Yes.

Q. Of course, nobody expects that you as a juror or anybody else in this court-room in any other capacity needs to develop an affection with respect to a witness. You understand that, of course.

You also understand that the word "like" may be used in a different sense, in the sense of respect, for instance? Isn't that so?

A. That is correct.

[fol. 2628] Q. So if on a general appraisal of the personality and character of an accomplice, as it is revealed by his direct examination and the facts that come out in his cross-examination, you come to the conclusion that you so dislike that man, so dislike that man that you would not take his word——

Mr. Turkus: I object to this. This is going into a psychological discussion.

Mr. Climenko: Oh, No, it is only a question of language, language that you used.

The Court: Sustained.

Mr. Climenko: Exception.

Q. In other words, you realize that whether or not you take a man's word depends on whether or not you respect him to that extent, isn't that so?

Mr. Turkus: Objected to. You do not have to respect any accomplice.

The Court: Sustained.

Q. Do you realize that you may so disrespect a man that you cannot take his word because of his own acknowledgments and admissions about himself?

Mr. Turkus: Objected to. That is not the test. Does he tell the truth about these men? That is the test.

The Court: Sustained.

Mr. Climenko: Exception.

Q. Do you realize, Mr. Andrews, that in deciding whether [fol. 2629] or not you can take a witness's word you must take into account everything that that man says about himself? Isn't that so?

By the Court:

Q. You must consider it. You will consider it for what it is worth?

A. Absolutely.

Q. Use common sense?

A. That is it.

By Mr. Climenko:

Q. You will apply the same standards of common sense in appraising the honesty or trustworthiness of any witness as you would apply to him in the course of your own business affairs. You realize, of course, that it is your obligation under your oath to respect that portion of the criminal law of the State of New York which requires a jury to vote Not Guilty if, after hearing the whole of the case, he entertains a reasonable doubt about the guilt of the defendant. You understand that?

A. I understand.

Q. You understand that these defendants nor any one of them are required to demonstrate their innocence to you, you understand that?

A. I do.

Q. That being so, you will not hold it against any particular defendant or all of them if that should prove to be the case, that they do not themselves either adduce any testimony through other witnesses or themselves take the stand? You understand that?

A. I do.

[fol. 2630] Q. Correct?

A. That is correct.

Q. And you understand also that you have both an individual duty as a juror and a collective duty, that your collective duty, which I will come to first, is one to come to your own conclusions about the testimony and then discuss it with your fellow jurors?

A. Right.

Q. To try to come to an agreement with them if you can through the use of your mental processes and theirs, too, isn't that so?

A. That is right.

Q. You also have an individual obligation, and that is that in the event that through reasoning in connection with the evidence you cannot come to agreement with them, you will adhere to your own conscientious conclusions; you understand that?

A. That is correct.

Q. It may prove a hardship for you to do that, in the sense that you may find yourself in a minority, or you may find that the hours of deliberation become a burden to everybody in the jury room. Will you abrogate your own opinion because of such consideration or inconvenience?

A. No.

Q. Have you heard any lectures on crime by any members of the staff of the District Attorney?

A. None at all.

Q. Are you acquainted with any members of the police force?

A. I am. I perhaps should have mentioned this to Mr. Turkus.

Q. Yes?

A. It slipped me for a moment. My next door neighbor is a plain-clothes patrolman. Through him I met some [fol. 2631] of his friends. I thought it should be brought out, at least now.

Q. It is not too late. I take it that that acquaintanceship is the casual kind that one normally has with a next-door neighbor. You do not class it as an intimate friendship?

A. We are rather intimate friends.

Q. May I know his name?

A. Francis P. Garvey.

Q. He is a patrolman?

A. Plain-clothes patrolman.

Q. Is he assigned in Brooklyn?

A. In New York, with Inspector Henry——

Q. Is that a specialized squad?

A. I don't believe so, simply plain-clothes patrol.

Q. Have you met other friends of his on the force?

A. Yes, I have.

Q. Do you recall their names?

A. One of them is Edward Meyer. He is a plain-clothes patrolman in the Borough Hall section of Brooklyn, and he is the only fellow intimately.

Q. So those are the only three whose acquaintance that you have you think it is important to mention?

A. That is it. I just mention it.

Q. Have you gone out socially with these gentlemen?

A. Yes.

Q. Spent evenings in their company?

A. That is right.

Q. Entertained them at your home?

A. Yes.

Q. I will ask this general question about it all as best I can: Is there anything about the fact that you have en- [fol. 2632] joyed the friendship of those gentlemen, been intimate with them, have you had any experience in consequence of that intimacy which would in any way color your thinking as a juror about this case?

A. None.

Q. Has this case ever been mentioned during the course of your friendship and being with those gentlemen?

A. No, I don't believe so.

Q. That brings me to something else. You have been asked whether, if you were convinced beyond a reasonable doubt of the guilt of the defendants, you would, without reservation, vote for a verdict of guilty.

A. That is right.

Q. By the same token, this is a case which you realize has been discussed, even though you have not been particularly interested in it, and you are a personal friend of members of the police force. Now, is there anything in that fact which you have just been good enough to tell me about, anything else which I have not asked about, in the background of your family life, your business life, your general attitude, which would cause you to be reticent about returning a verdict of Not Guilty if at the conclusion of the entire case you should entertain a reasonable doubt about the guilt of the defendants or any of them?

A. Nothing.

Q. Mr. Andrews, there is just one thing I am interested in, and I will try to make that as short as possible. You have been here since Tuesday morning?

[fol. 2633] A. No, the Court excused me until this morning.

Q. There have been made mention of names of members of unions. You have not heard the names of any union officials?

A. None mentioned here today.

Q. The fact that those names have been mentioned would not influence you one way or the other, particularly if their names were never again referred to once the trial actually started.

A. No.

Q. Assume that you were chosen as a juror and the trial began and the Court in the proper discharge of his duties as judge presiding over this trial should determine that the jury ought to be kept together during the time that the case goes on, during the duration of the trial; are you confident that you would not even unconsciously let that fact militate in your mind against the defendants or any one of them?

A. Not at all. I rather expect that. Not with pleasant anticipation.

Q. No.

A. Still and all, it would not prejudice me.

Q. It is not a circumstance——

A. It is one's duty.

Q. The fact that the Court thinks that is necessary is not a circumstance that you would permit to color your thinking about the defendants or any one of them?

A. It will not.

Q. You know that pretty soon the people of New York City will vote for a Mayor and the District Attorney of Kings County is happily the nominee of his party, in that campaign. You have heard that?

A. Yes.

[fol. 2634] Q. And the District Attorney is a person who enjoys the regard of his fellow citizens in Kings County. The mere fact that his reputation may be what it is is a circumstance which you realize has nothing to do with the virtues or the merits of this case; is that correct?

A. Yes.

Q. The mere fact that you may like or dislike the Democratic nominee for Mayor of New York City is a circumstance which cannot have any part in thinking about this case. We are agreed on that proposition?

A. I am.

Q. The mere fact that the District Attorney happens to be a nominee for elective office is a circumstance which does not enhance the credibility of any witness that Mr. Turkus calls to the witness stand; isn't that so?

A. That is correct.

Q. And the mere fact we have the accident of a political election coming within the next three weeks is a circumstance which has nothing to do with this case whatsoever? You would not permit it to enter into your deliberation?

A. I would not.

Q. Something has been said about the fact that the defendant Mr. Buchalter has been previously convicted of crime. You realize, do you not, that the only issue in this case, is the charge in this particular indictment. You realize that?

A. That is true.

Q. Nothing about any prior conviction has anything to do with the charge here; you realize that?

A. I do.

Q. The mere fact that such a charge is made is, as we said before, not proof. On the contrary, the defendant is [fol. 2635] presumed to be innocent, and that presumption attaches to Mr. Buchalter in spite of and independently of any prior conviction. You realize whatever conviction he may have been subject to in the past is something he has paid the penalty for or is paying the penalty for, and the fact that he has such a conviction is a circumstance you would not permit for one moment to enter into your thoughts about him and his innocence or guilt in this case; is that correct.

A. That is correct.

Q. Because any other mental approach would not be giving him a fair deal in the trial of this case, isn't that so?

A. That is correct.

Q. Do you know of anything—because I want to shorten this—do you know of anything as you sit here now which gives you any mental reservation about your acting as a fair juror in this case without sympathy to our client or without any prejudice against him? Do you know of any reason that you cannot act fairly in that sense?

A. No, I don't.

Mr. Climenko: Thank you.

By Mr. Barshay:

Q. Mr. Rorke, do I understand that you are related to a police inspector?

A. I am.

Q. And may I know his full name?

A. Thomas H. Rorke.

Q. Where is he assigned.

A. Assigned in Brooklyn, in charge of traffic in Brooklyn.

Q. How long has he been in the department, do you know?

[fol. 2636] A. Thirty-some-odd years, I guess.

Q. So that he has held many posts, to your knowledge?

A. To the best of my knowledge, the past ten years or twelve years he has been in various traffic posts.

Q. Do you see him often?

A. Occasionally.

Q. You take pride in his advancement as a police inspector, naturally?

A. Purely his accomplishments.

Q. That is correct. Have you discussed any police work [fol. 2637] with him at any time?

A. Never discuss any police work.

Q. Haven't you at any time heard him discuss his work?
A. No, sir.
Q. He has friends in the police department, I take it, whom you know?
A. Personal friends?
Q. Yes, any way you put it.
A. None that I know of.
Q. Did you ever meet anybody in the police department through him?
A. No, sir.
Q. Have you told him that you had received a jury notice?
A. No, sir.
Q. You were a juror, rather, a prospective juror, on a prior occasion in this court?
A. Yes.
Q. That was a blue ribbon jury?
A. That is right.
Q. Mr. Turkus was the prosecutor?
A. That is right.
Q. At that time, sir, you were questioned by Mr. Turkus?
A. Yes.
Q. Thereafter that fact came out, did it not?
A. Not while Mr. Turkus was——
Q. It came out?
A. It came out during the questioning.
Q. Then the lawyer for the defendant questioned you, too?
A. That is right?
Q. And I am not assuming too much to say that he questioned you almost along the same lines that the jurors were questioned here in respect to prejudice and so forth?
A. Yes.
Q. And some of the names that you were questioned [fol. 2638] about were some of the names that you heard here while you were sitting here waiting to be called?
A. That is something I had not been paying much attention to, names that have been mentioned.
Q. You heard the name "Buggsie" Goldstein then?
A. No, I did not hear it then.
Q. You heard it here? Did you hear the name Maione?
A. Of course I heard that.

Mr. Turkus: Just a minute. We are getting it confused, whether it was heard then or now.

Mr. Barshay: We are not getting confused.

Mr. Turkus: I am getting confused.

The Court: I understand Mr. Barshay is asking if the gentleman remembers if those names were mentioned when he was called for jury service on the previous case.

Q. That is right?

A. The first name that he mentioned was not mentioned on the previous occasion.

Q. Do you remember any of those names?

A. No, sir, I do not.

Q. You mentioned one you did remember.

A. Maione, yes, of course.

By the Court:

Q. Do they mean anything to you?

A. No, sir, they do not.

By Mr. Barshay:

Q. Well, about how many names would you say that [fol. 2639] were mentioned then that you recollect as being mentioned here today or yesterday or the day before?

A. One of the defendants.

Q. Maione? And one of the defendants at the present time?

A. Maione.

Q. Was mentioned then, too?

A. That is correct.

Q. Was Pittsburgh Phil Strauss mentioned then?

A. No, sir. I don't believe the questioning had gotten that far with the defense when the question arose as to my having any relations in the police department. When that question arose I was immediately excused.

Q. And thereafter did you follow the case with interest in the press? Did you read about it?

A. Only to the effect of the decision that was arrived at.

Q. I do not know whether you remember all the counsel in that case.

A. I do remember two of them.

Q. I was not one?

A. Just Mr. Rosenthal was there of the present group and Mr. Turkus.

Q. Do you feel any resentment then because you were excused, not for any personal reason, but because of this relationship with a police inspector?

A. No.

Mr. Barshay: Now, with your Honor's permission, may we see you for a minute?

The Court: Yes.

(Mr. Turkus, Mr. Talley, Mr. Barshay, and Mr. Fishbein conferred with the Court at the bench.)

[fol. 2640] By the Court:

Q. Mr. Rorke, how close are you to your uncle, the inspector? How intimate? Some relatives never see one another or care.

A. He only lives two blocks from me. I might happen to pass him on the street. I don't make it a point to go and visit him.

Q. Do you visit one another's homes?

A. No, sir. I mean, if we happen to be in the neighborhood he might drop in or I have reason to go over and borrow some tool I will go over.

Q. Do you visit at one another's homes?

A. No, we do not make it a point.

Q. At Christmas do you have get-together parties?

A. No, sir, he has his own family to maintain over there?

Q. How is that?

A. He has his own family there.

Q. The families are not very close?

A. I would not say they are close, but by the same token they are not far apart, either.

Q. They are not enemies. Well, at any rate, there is a feeling of distance, apparently, because you don't intermingle in one another's homes; you don't entertain one another?

A. No, sir.

Q. Have you ever discussed police matters with your uncle?

A. Just in so far as traffic problems that might come up.

Q. Not in connection with any of Mr. O'Dwyer's work?

A. No, sir, I have never discussed it at all.

Q. He has never expressed any opinion to you on that?
[fol. 2641] A. As I said on this previous occasion, I mention the fact that I was called for jury and that I had been turned down. He said "I guess you are not sorry for that," and that was the end of the conversation.

Q. That was just a congratulation?

A. That is right. I happened to meet him on the street.

Q. You have not formed any opinion concerning any of these defendants from any contact with your uncle or his family?

A. Oh, no, sir, not at all.

Q. Is there any reason why it would embarass you with your uncle and his family for you to render a verdict which reflected your own conclusion?

A. Not that I know of.

Q. Independently arrived at?

A. Not that I know of, no.

Q. You are under no obligation to your uncle?

A. No, sir, none whatsoever.

Q. You would not care whether he liked it or not?

A. That is quite right.

Q. You mentioned something before—I will put it this way—was there anything connected with that other case in connection with any one of these defendants that caused you to have an impression adverse to one of these defendants?

A. No, sir.

Q. Just yes, or no.

A. No, sir.

Mr. Talley: If your Honor pleases, I offer a challenge for implied bias in this case.

The Court: Try the challenge.

[fol. 2642] John J. Rorke, residing at 1288 East 34th Street, Brooklyn, New York, being duly sworn, testified as follows:

By Mr. Talley:

Q. Mr. Rorke, you are a nephew of Police Inspector Rorke?

A. That is correct.

Q. Police Department, New York City. And you live within a block of him?

A. About two blocks.

Q. And see him frequently and talk with him frequently?

A. I do not see him so frequently. If I happen to be passing in the street, say hello, and that's the extent of the conversation unless something else comes up.

Q. And you visit his house occasionally?

A. Very seldom.

Q. Does he come into yours?

A. Very seldom.

Q. But he does come in?

A. He has been there, yes.

Q. You were called as a juror in the spring of this year, were you not, in May, five or six months ago you say?

A. That is correct.

Q. And that was a homicide case?

A. No, a capital case.

Q. Murder case. Murder and homicide.

The Court: Was I the Judge.

The Witness: Yes, sir.

Q. And Mr. Turkus was the prosecutor in that case?

A. That is correct.

Q. And one of the counsel now engaged as counsel to the defense was counsel for one of the defendants?

A. Mr. Rosenthal.

[fol. 2643] Q. And Mr. Rosenthal challenged you as a juror, did he not?

A. He did not challenge me, that is, I was not put in the box here. He was questioning me.

Q. Yes. And after you were questioned he presented a challenge?

Mr. Turkus: No, he did not.

A. No, he did not present a challenge.

Q. Who did?

A. Not as I understand a challenge. In my estimation a challenge is when I am put in the box.

By the Court:

Q. Do you attribute your excuse to either of the counsel in the case?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you charge it against one particularly?

A. Yes, I would charge it against one who was questioning.

Q. Do you carry a grudge?

A. No.

Q. Does it make a particle of difference?

A. Not a particle of difference.

Q. You would not be sore on counsel?

A. Of course not.

By Mr. Talley:

Q. Speak up.

A. As I remember this thing, it was a Friday night. It was a week—I believe your Honor wanted to get the jury chosen that night.

Q. It is not necessary, Mr. Rorke. All we want to have on the record——

The Court: We don't need to go into that detail.

[fol. 2644] Q. All we want upon the record is that you were challenged when you were called as a juror in that case, were you not?

A. I do not understand what you mean by a challenge.

Q. You were excused from serving, weren't you?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. At the request of one of the defendants' counsel in that case?

A. That is correct.

Q. You were not excused as the result of any statement made by the District Attorney, were you?

A. No, sir.

Q. So that he was not responsible for your being excused; it was something that was said by Mr. Rosenthal, a counsel in this case, to the Judge, that resulted in your being let out of the jury box?

A. That is correct.

Q. A rather circumlocutious way of putting it, but that is about it, isn't it? In that case there were certain names that you remembered, were there not?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And at least one of those names you have heard since you have been called in this case, isn't that so; just yes or no?

A. That is right, yes, sir.

Mr. Talley: I submit——

Mr. Turkus: I have not finished.

Mr. Talley: I submit, appealing to the discretion of the Court, that my challenge should be sustained in this case.

The Court: Any other counsel for defense?

Mr. Cuff: We all join.

The Court: Any other counsel wish to question the talesman?

[fol. 2645] By Mr. Rosenthal:

Q. Mr. Rorke, there were other defense counsel in that particular trial in which you were called, is that right?

A. I believe there was one other that I remember.

Q. And in the course of questioning it developed that your uncle at that time was Police Inspector Rorke?

A. That is correct.

Q. And at that time weren't you questioned also as to your association, that is your friendship, with your uncle and how close it was? Do you recall?

A. No, sir, I was not.

Q. You were not asked any questions concerning how close you were to your uncle or how often you saw him?

A. No, sir.

Q. That is your recollection?

A. That is correct.

Q. You were living then a short distance away from him?

A. Same situation.

Q. Did you prior to May of this year see your uncle more often than you did subsequent?

A. No, sir.

Q. You do see him practically three or four times a week, don't you?

A. No, sir; I have not seen him now in two months or more, I don't believe.

Q. Did you follow with any interest the development of the trial where you were excused?

A. The previous trial?

Q. Yes, where you were excused. Did you read newspapers?

A. I just made it a point to——

Q. Please——

Mr. Turkus: He is answering you, because he has an[fol. 2646] swered when he was in there. I object to him being shut off.

Mr Rosenthal: I want to know whether he read newspapers, without quoting what he may or may not have read in the newspapers.

Mr. Turkus: He stated before, as he was about to state now—I am not going to say what it was—let him say it.

The Court: Overruled.

Q. Did you read any newspapers in connection with the evidence in that trial?

A. No, sir, I did not.

Q. At any time?

A. No, sir.

Q. So that you read nothing about the progress of that trial until its conclusion?

A. That is correct, sir.

Q. Did you converse with anybody as to that trial?

A. Just the point that I had been chosen as a talesman for it.

Q. Other than with your uncle, did you converse with any other person?

A. People at my place of business, yes.

Mr. Rosenthal: That is all.

The Court: Any other counsel for defense?

Mr. Climenko: No, thank you.

By Mr. Turkus:

Q. Is the name that you speak of, Mr. Rorke, the name of Maione?

Mr. Rosenthal: I object to any mention. There was an objection at the time that one of the counsel——

The Court: Sustained.

Mr. Turkus: There is a record made here by Judge Tal-
[fol. 2647] ley and he asked him about whether there was a name. If I am precluded from going into it, you are leaving the record open with something that is not explained here. I don't want to leave it that way.

Mr. Rosenthal: At the time that counsel for defense asked the privilege of this Court to permit them to direct attention of prospective talesmen in the jury box as to a name or names. I recall distinctly Mr. Turkus objecting and the Court's sustaining and I think it is highly improper for the District Attorney after urging an objection to thereupon disregard it in the presence of an entire panel after eleven men are chosen and deliberately mention a name in this court-room.

Mr. Turkus: That is a stage play.

Mr. Rosenthal: I object to that statement. Please, I am addressing the Court.

Mr. Turkus: Please don't push.

Mr. Rosenthal: I don't do what you do.

Mr. Turkus: You just pushed me.

Mr. Rosenthal: And you are not telling the truth.

Mr. Turkus: You are deliberately stating a falsehood if you state you did not push me.

The Court: Please!

Mr. Turkus: There is a record here, Judge, I am concerned about.

The Court: I can hear only one at a time.

Mr. Turkus: Let him get through with it.

[fol. 2648] The Court: At this time I will hear Mr. Rosenthal. You mean that you were examining this talesman and asked him concerning names; that the Court sustained an objection?

Mr. Rosenthal: No, sir; I did not say that. I said when prospective talesmen were in the box, Mr. Barshay at the time asked permission to direct the particular juryman's attention to what name of a particular jury he had sat on. Mr. Turkus objected on the ground that it was bringing out a specific thing and the Court sustained it.

The Court: I see the point.

Mr. Turkus: And there was another juror, but I waived that when Mr. Rosenthal wanted to ask it.

The Court: Objection is sustained.

Mr. Turkus: Judge, may I point this out to you? Judge Talley brought out that there was a name mentioned in the other case that he heard here now and there is nothing on the record——

The Court: Pardon me. The point is quite clear. It involves the revelation of the name of the case and the Court must rule impartially as to both sides, so the objection is sustained.

Q. Let me ask you two more questions and we will be through with this. Mr. Rorke, do you owe your uncle anything?

A. No, sir.

Mr. Talley: I object to that question. I would not like to have that asked of myself.

Mr. Turkus: Please don't be so sensitive.

[fol. 2649] Q. If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that they are guilty, will you say it in your verdict?

Mr. Cuff: I object to that as already answered.

The Court: Sustained.

Q. If you are not satisfied of their guilt beyond a reasonable doubt, will you say it?

Mr. Cuff: I object to that for the same reason.

The Court: Sustained.

Mr. Turkus: Then that is all I want to ask.

Mr. Talley: We press the challenge.

The Court: I will have to overrule you, Judge

Mr. Talley: We all except to your Honor's ruling in this instance.

The Foreman of the Jury: Your Honor, some of the jurors have asked for a five-minute recess.

The Court: We will take a fifteen-minute recess.

[fol. 2650] Do not discuss the case.

Let the defendants be remanded first.

(A fifteen-minute recess was thereupon taken.)

(5:00 P. M.)

TRIAL RESUMED

Mr. Talley: Counsel desires to confer with your Honor at the bench. May we do so?

The Court: Yes.

(All counsel and Mr. Turkus appear before the bench, and the following takes place, without the hearing of the panel):

Mr. Talley: Counsel are now presented with this condition: that they have only one more of the challenges left.

If the peremptory challenge has got to be exercised, if it is against the eleventh juror, that will leave us without a challenge for the twelfth juror. I did not feel we would be justified in putting upon the record, in our challenge to Mr. Rorke, now sitting in the twelfth seat, the fact that the name he stated in his examination that he had heard mentioned in the Maione trial, in which he was called as a juror and challenged peremptorily by one of the present counsel in this case, was the name of one of the three defendants in this case. We wish to put upon the record now that the [fol. 2651] basis of our challenge was not only his relationship to the Police Inspector in the New York City Police Department, but also that he had sat in a court-room as a prospective juror in a case in which was mentioned to him during the course of his examination, and I assume the examination of other talesman, the name of the defendant Capone, who is a defendant in this case.

I want to call your Honor's attention to the fact that many, if not all, of our peremptory challenges were compulsory, so to speak, after your Honor had denied our challenges for cause or implied bias, or on whatever ground the challenges were made; so we are now faced with the situation of having exhausted or of being about to exhaust our peremptory challenges and being unable to serve a peremptory challenge against Talesman Rorke, who was examined a few minutes ago.

The Court: Is that all?

Mr. Rosenthal: One thing I want to add is some of the voluntary peremptory challenges that were taken and caused us to use up our peremptory challenges I consider were involuntary, so that your Honor is faced with a situation under authority of The People vs. McQuade and People vs. Greco. The People vs. McQuade is in 110 N. Y., at page 290 or thereabouts. For that reason exception was taken [fol. 2652] to the exhausting of peremptory challenges by us—necessary to be taken by us.

Mr. Barshay: Counsel for the defendant Buchalter joins in exactly what Judge Talley and Mr. Rosenthal have said as if they said it separately and independently.

The Court: You have exercised, I understand, twenty-nine peremptory challenges.

Mr. Rosenthal: That is right.

The Court: And possibly several were following the Court's overruling challenges for cause. The rest were without any trial of a challenge for cause, but that is neither here nor there.

The Court is not interested in these cases for the reason that the Court has done its best to be fair in the trial of these challenges and believes its decisions to be correct and that they will stand up on appeal.

The matter that Judge Talley mentioned in relation to the name of one of the defendants in this case was, of course, included in the Court's ruling upon the last challenge. It was one point on which the Court had considerable difficulty in coming to a decision, and believes it to be accurate. I do not see what difference it makes. The Court viewed the challenge as being for all purposes of bias, consequently considered the point of alleged bias that developed. I think, now, counsel having had their say, we should let it stand.

[fol. 2653] Mr. Rosenthal: May I make this observation——

The Court: No more argument after the decision.

Mr. Rosenthal: I just wanted to make mention of the fact that——

The Court: You cannot build up a record by comments after the Court has made a decision.

Defense Counsel: Exception to all defendants.

The Court: Resume examination of talesmen.

Mr. Talley: There are no further questions as to Mr. Andrews (talesman).

The Court: Any further questions by any other counsel for the defense?

Mr. Talley: No further questions with respect to Mr. Andrews for the defense.

[fol. 2654] The Court: You may resume questioning as to Mr. Rorke.

Mr. Rosenthal: May I note an exception on the record.

John J. Rorke (examination continued):

By Mr. Barshay:

Q. Mr. Rorke, we are serving as the legal machinery, each counsel contending what he claims is his legal right. I take it that will not influence your judgment against our defendant?

A. No, sir.

Q. The fact, on legal motions, on legal argument, the Court has ruled in the manner in which it did, you will not hold that against us or resent it in any way?

A. No, sir.

Q. I take it it will be fair enough to say that every defendant who comes to trial in this court is entitled to be represented by counsel, who makes the best fight they know how for their client.

A. Yes, sir.

Q. The fact that at some time or other some lawyer excused you in another trial has nothing to do with this case—the fact that when a motion was made with respect to this case, you had nothing to do with that—as though it never happened—you will consider the evidence in this case just as fairly and equitably and squarely as you know how?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. At no time and no place will you allow it to prejudice [fol. 2655] you in any way?

A. No, sir.

Q. Pardon me for repeating it, because this is my cause. Do you belong to any organization of any nature?

A. No.

Q. Do you intend to participate at all in the forthcoming election?

A. No, sir.

Q. Do you know anyone at all in Judge O'Dwyer's office?

A. You mean officials?

Q. Yes.

A. No, sir.

Q. Do you know anyone on the clerical staff?

A. I did know one there—whether he is still there I do not know.

Q. May I know his name?

A. O'Sullivan.

Q. I don't know whether he will be in this case, but if he is, will it influence you in any way whatever?

A. No, sir.

Q. Because he merely reported what transpires, if he did report.

A. I understand.

Q. Do you know Mr. Turkus or Mr. Klein?

A. No, sir.

Q. Mr. Klein is not here now, but he will be here during the course of the trial—do you know him?

A. No, sir.

Q. He may have appeared in the matter in which you were questioned before; do you recall that—a very short fellow.

A. No, sir.

Q. I take it that all the argument you have heard while sitting here, between counsel and Mr. Turkus, will have nothing to do with the case? Sometimes it is of a legal nature—sometimes we get a little personal—but that does [fol. 2656] not matter at all when it comes to consider the guilt or innocence of the defendant.

A. I know that.

Q. Just as well as I was on this side of the table and he was on the other, and he fought just as hard for his case then as he does now.

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Speaking for Mr. Buchalter, you have heard, and I must repeat, that he is now incarcerated for a long time because of some previous crime. Some people may have a prejudice against people in that position. They may not take his word. Would you be prejudiced against him by virtue of that?

A. No, sir.

Q. The issue here is the only one which you shall decide?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Whatever happens, happens?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you believe in according to him as well as to the other defendants what the law gives him as a matter of substantial right—the presumption of innocence?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you believe the indictment is, by its language, simply an accusation against Mr. Buchalter of the commission of a crime, and has no weight whatever?

A. I do.

Q. And when he said, "Not guilty," he put every charge against him and every bit of evidence that is to be presented against him, in issue for you to decide?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And by his plea of not guilty he has said, "I am not an accomplice of anyone," do you understand?

A. Yes, sir.

[fol. 2657] Q. The mere fact that a man comes here and claims he is an accomplice of Buchalter does not make it so unless by evidence you are convinced of that fact?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And that person may be telling the truth, as has been well said by other counsel, about his own participation in it, but somewhere, for some reason, he has a motive in saying he is an accomplice of Buchalter. You will be the one to find out whether there is a reason—whether there is a motive for such testimony.

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you may come to the conclusion, if you see fit after judging him or liking him or disliking him, whatever you may think, that he may be saying the truth concerning himself but absolutely falsifying about Mr. Buchalter.

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And among other things, you may take into consideration his background, his hope of regard, the treatment he has been accorded, the fact that he did at one time say he was not an accomplice, and the fact he never even saw Mr. Buchalter, will you take those things into consideration?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Even then, if the Court shall tell you to view that testimony with a great deal of care and suspicion—the law says that, will you do that?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Then the law demands of you that you must go further. Should you even believe the testimony of the accom- [fol. 2658] plice that is not enough. Corroborate that man's testimony, says the law to the District Attorney, by independent evidence, independent of him, which tends to connect Mr. Buchalter with the commission of this crime. Will you do that?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Otherwise you will acquit him?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Then will you look to the source from which comes the so-called corroborating testimony?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. If it comes from a polluted or criminal source, from criminals who have a motive, you will consider that?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. If you disbelieve it and out of that disbelief you find a reason for doubt, you will say so by your verdict?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. If you disbelieve it and out of that disbelief you find that there is a reasonable doubt, the District Attorney has failed to prove his case beyond a reasonable doubt, and you will say so by your verdict?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And of course that will be "Not guilty"?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Some counsel have indicated quite clearly that they may offer testimony on behalf of their defendants, no matter what that testimony may be. We may offer testimony on behalf of Buchalter or may not. But if the Court shall tell you we need not, either by him or through witnesses, you must not draw any unfavorable inference by virtue thereof. Will you follow that law?

A. Yes, sir.

[fol. 2659] Q. You will not expect him to explain any single accusation against him?

A. No, sir.

Q. Because, without a single word forthcoming from the defendant, the duty always remains with the prosecution. Do you agree with that?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. So Mr. Buchalter, if you are chosen as a juror, can we rely upon you for the preservation of every right that the law gives him?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. You to be the sole and exclusive judge of every fact in the case and you to take the law from his Honor at the proper time?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Applying both together, you not yielding to anyone with respect to the fact, and taking the law from his Honor, then, if there is a reasonable doubt, will you have the courage to give it to Mr. Buchalter?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. No doubt about it?

A. No, sir.

Mr. Rosenthal: I have no questions and rest on the record.

Mr. Turkus: Mr. Andrews is satisfactory to The People of the State, and Mr. Rorke is satisfactory to The People of the State.

Mr. Talley: Mr. Andrews is challenged peremptorily [fol 2660] by the defense.

Defense Counsel: All join.

(Mr. Rorke was then seated as Tentative Juror No. 11.)

Mr. Turkus: Your Honor, since we have only one more juror to get and two alternates, may I respectfully suggest we adjourn.

The Court: I would like to complete, if possible, the jury tonight and get them sworn; then we can accommodate counsel by having the alternates selected tomorrow.

Mr. Turkus: That would mean a night session?

The Court: No, it would not.

Mr. Turkus: I have only had a sandwich at one o'clock; I cannot eat more when I am working.

The Court: Call one more gentleman.

(Victor H. Heatley, of 183 Lafayette Avenue, Brooklyn, New York, No. 3081, a talesman, was then called to the jury box and examined as to his qualifications.)

Mr. Rosenthal: I am supposed to be in court at nine o'clock in the morning, and I must contact my office and have some substitute go there.

The Court: You had a half an hour and a fifteen-minute declared recess; you had plenty of time to contact your office.

Mr. Rosenthal: I cannot contact my office in the courtroom.

The Court: Please proceed.

[fol. 2661] By Mr. Turkus:

Q. Do you reside at 113 Lafayette Avenue?

A. Yes.

The Court: May I ask a few questions?

Mr. Turkus: Yes.

By the Court?

Q. Where is your place of business?

A. No. 5 Beekman Street, New York City.

Q. Is your business mostly in bonds?

A. No, sir; it is a personal business entirely. I have friends, corporations and lawyers; I get bonds for them.

Q. Is that your own business?

A. I am with W. T. Jones.

Q. How long have you been in that business?

A. Since 1924.

Q. How old are you?

A. Fifty-eight.

Q. Before that what line were you in?

A. The Federal Reserve Bank, United States Government.

Q. How long were you in the Federal Reserve Bank?

A. About two years.

Q. In what capacity?

A. I was with the clearing department, they cleared checks.

Q. Is that when Mr. George W. Davis was one of the governors

A. No, sir, I think Mr. Kern was.

Q. There is a board of governors?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Or trustees?

A. A board of governors, I think, Judge; I don't think they have trustees.

[fol. 2662] Q. The board of governors is right. You had experience then in investments?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. For lawyers who handled estates?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Have you had any business experience besides that?

A. I was with the Government in the Shipping Board before they assigned it to the Department of Justice. That was in 1923. They had an embezzlement case and they could not get the evidence, so they put it into my office. That was in 1923.

Q. What position did you have in the Shipping Board?

A. I had charge of all the labor along shore, but the man who was there previously to me had embezzled about $2,000.

Q. You mean you had charge of the workmen along shore?

A. Yes, sir, the men who take care of ships, and do all the heavy work.

Q. You mean you had direct charge of the stevedores?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. How long ago was that?
A. 1921, 1922, and '23.
Q. That is twenty years ago?
A. Yes, sir, about that.
Q. You did not, at that time, I assume, contact any names that have been mentioned here?
A. No, sir, I do not know any.
Q. 183 Lafayette Avenue is near Adelphi Street?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. Is that a private house?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. Are you married?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. Have you any children?
A. No, sir.
Q. Do you occupy the whole house?
A. Yes, sir.

[fol. 2663] By Mr. Turkus:

Q. Have you heretofore served as a juror?
A. I have been called in January, on the panel, but my name was not called.
Q. Was that in the Supreme Court?
A. Yes, that is correct.
Q. Have you any scruples, conscientious or otherwise, against capital punishment?
A. No, sir.
Q. Are you in sympathy with the law enforcement?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. Did you hear me speak to the other talesmen about possible contacts in the clothing and garment truckers and the Brownsville and East New York area?
A. I don't know any of them.
Q. Do you know any of the nine lawyers representing the defendants?
A. No, sir.
Q. Do you know any member of the bar who specializes in criminal cases?
A. No, sir.
Q. Did you hear the discussion about accomplices?
A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you feel the same as the jurors who have been accepted?

A. No, sir.

Q. A different feeling?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. You have an entirely different feeling?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Maybe I don't understand you. Do you have any bias or prejudice?

A. Yes, sir, I have.

Q. Would you close your ears to the testimony?

A. That is different. You would have to prove it very [fol. 2664] conclusively.

Mr. Turkus: Challenge.

The Court: Try the challenge.

Victor H. Heatley, residing at 183 Lafayette Avenue, Brooklyn, New York, was duly sworn on the challenge.

By Mr. Turkus:

Q. Judge Taylor put certain questions to you as to your background and as to your present connection with stevedores.

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Would you make the same explanation under oath?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Would you make the same response to me about accomplice testimony?

A. Yes, sir.

Mr. Turkus: I press the challenge.

By the Court:

Q. Maybe I did not understand you. Did you say you had a prejudice in this case?

A. No, sir, on the type of the defendants.

Q. Have you a prejudice against the defendants?

A. Yes, sir, of that type—a particular type is the one that I am very much prejudiced against.

Q. Would that affect your decision in this case?

A. Yes, sir, I start off very much so.

Defense Counsel: No questions.
The Court: Challenge sustained.

[fol. 2665] JACK COHEN, No. 3063, residing at No. 23 East 91st Street, Brooklyn, New York, was examined as to his qualifications to serve as a juror.

By Mr. Turkus:

Q. Are you related to Assistant District Attorney Cohen?
A. No, sir.
Q. You live in Brownsville?
A. East Flatbush.
Q. You are practically in Brownsville?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. That street begins at Utica?
A. It is right off the corner of Utica Avenue and East New York, right off that corner.
Q. How many years have you lived on the fringe of Brownsville?
A. Two years.
Q. Prior to that where did you live?
A. 675 Empire Boulevard.
Q What district is that?
A. That is Crown Heights.
Q. You are listed as being in the coal business.
A. Yes, sir.
Q. For yourself?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. Where do you maintain your office?
A. Varick Avenue, in Brooklyn.
Q. Do you make coal deliveries throughout Brooklyn?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. Among people in Brownsville?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. Are the names Maione, Abbandando, Goldstein, Strauss, familiar names to you?
A. I read about them in the newspaper.

[fol. 2666] By the Court:

Q. Is that coal business a bushel business or tonnage?
A. Delivered by the ton.

Q. What is the name of the concern?
A. Harbor Coal Company.
Q. Where is that?
A. 157 Varick Avenue, Brooklyn, Newtown Creek.

By Mr. Turkus:

Q. Your trucks, in pursuance of your business, go into Brownsville and East New York?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. You have read about the names I mentioned, in the newspapers?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. Have you heard discussions about them in Brownsville or the East New York area?
A. No, sir.
Q. Having lived in that neighborhood, did you follow Judge O'Dwyer's investigation with any degree of particular interest?
A. No, sir.
Q. Now, Mr. Cohen, you have lived on the fringe of that neighborhood and have gone in the district on business; have you heard the names of the defendants in this case?
A. Not through business, through the newspapers I heard the names.
Q. Have you heard the other names, Goldstein, Strauss, Pittsburgh Phil?
A. No, sir, only through the newspapers.
Q. You never heard any discussion?
A. No, sir.
Q. Have you any bias against the defendants?
A. No.

[fol. 2667] Mr. Turkus: Challenge peremptorily.

Harry L. Yakel, No. 3092, was examined as to his qualifications to serve as a juror.

Mr. Barshay: May I again ask for a recess? This is the last juror to be chosen, and the strain will be greatest upon us in view of the situation that develops.
The Court: Proceed.

By Mr. Turkus:

Q. Yakel—is that a correct pronounciation of that name?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. You live on Albany Avenue?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. What do they call that district?
A. Vandeveer Park section.
Q. You are an architect by profession?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. Have you been an architect for years?
A. I obtained my registration in 1923.
Q. I take it since you have been engaged in business you have been an architect?
A. Yes, sir.

By the Court:

Q. You are between what streets?
A. Avenue I and Avenue H.
Q. That is right by the Long Island Railroad cut?
A. The cut runs through at Avenue H.
Q. You are south of the cut?
A. Yes, sir.

By Mr. Turkus:

[fol. 2668] Q. Have you any scruples, conscientious or otherwise, against capital punishment?
A. No, sir.
Q. Have you sat in any criminal case where there has been accomplice testimony given?
A. No, sir.
Q. The testimony of one defendant against the other?
A. Not in an accomplice case.
Q. Do you find any fault with the District Attorney, Judge O'Dwyer, or with the prosecution of an indictment wherein the testimony of an accomplice is received and used against the other confederates in a crime, or alleged to have committed a crime?
A. Due to my association with the Police Department.
Q. You say you have some association with members of the Police Department?

A. Yes, sir, the sergeant in the Brownsville station—I think he was there two years ago—I have not seen him in six months now.

Q. Did he tell you anything about this case?

A. At one time, along about last fall, I got a call to Flushing Avenue and he told me something about——

Mr. Rosenthal: I object to his going into any details of a conversation.

The Court: Yes, objection sustained.

Mr. Rosenthal: I challenge him for cause.

Mr. Turkus: No objection, of course.

The Court: Try the challenge.

[fol. 2669] Harry L. Yakel, residing at 1754 Albany Avenue, Brooklyn, New York, was sworn on the challenge.

By Mr. Rosenthal:

Q. You are now under oath.

A. Yes, sir.

Q. You made certain answers in regard to your personal acquaintanceship with a sergeant in the Police Department in Brownsville and a certain conversation which would prejudice the defendants in this case; is that right?

A. It would.

Q. And it goes to the question of their guilt or innocence on this charge, is that correct—the prejudice which exists in your mind?

A. To an extent.

Q. That is true?

A. Yes, sir.

Mr. Turkus: No questions.

The Court: Challenge sustained.

Harry Weisberg, No. 3119, called as a talesman, was examined as to his qualifications.

By the Court:

Q. You live around Avenue J?

A. Between L and M, East 21st Street.

Q. What is your business?
A. Banking.
Q. What bank?
A. Kuhn, Loeb & Company.
Q. How long have you been with them?
A. Thirty-six years.

Mr. Rosenthal: If your Honor please, this is a friend of mine. He was excused on a previous trial in which I was [fol. 2670] counsel, and at other times by this very Court. He would be very embarrassed if he had to sit.

The Court: Don't you realize the difficulty the Court would be in if it violated its determination not to allow more by consent.

Mr. Rosenthal: This is not consent. Mr. Turkus can ask him one question and he will tell him that he would be embarrassed if he sat on a case in which I am the attorney. He said it before. I withdraw the statement to the Court.

The Court: Personalities do not count. In rural districts lawyers know every juryman and every juryman knows every lawyer. It makes no difference. Go ahead.

Mr. Turkus: Judge, I am exhausted. I cannot go on any more. I cannot talk any more. I am tired out. I can't stand it any more.

The Court: You have a complex.

Mr. Turkus: All of us feel the same way, your Honor. This has gone on for weeks.

The Court: The Court is working as hard as counsel. The Court, I am sure counsel will agree, asks altogether too many questions. That, of course, makes the Court tired. Now, in addition to that, the Court has to be on the alert as to every question and answer, so as not to slip up on a ruling. The Court is not tired now.

Mr. Rosenthal: The Court is younger than counsel. I [fol. 2671] have been in the court-house since nine o'clock this morning.

The Court: I ask you to reconsider, and I will thank you very much if you do it.

Mr. Turkus: All right.

By Mr. Turkus:

Q. Mr. Rosenthal said you were a prospective juror in another case where he was counsel.

A. I don't think so.

By the Court:

Q. Would the fact that you know Mr. Rosenthal affect your decision?

A. It might, your honor.

Q. Would you be able to lay it aside and decide the case on the merits?

A. Possibly. There is one more angle. I am a member of the men's club, the 8th Avenue Temple, your Honor asked some jurors about that.

Q. Who spoke there?

A. Mr. Turkus.

Q. What was that about?

A. I was treasurer of the men's club at the time.

Q. Was that about Judge O'Dwyer?

A. No, sir.

Q. Was it anything about this case?

A. Yes, sir.

The Court: All right, challenge for implied bias. Try the challenge.

Harry Weisberg, residing at 1348 East 21st, Brooklyn, New York, sworn on the challenge.

By Mr. Turkus:

Q. When the Court asked you about the embarrassment [fol. 2672] of service, you replied you had some thought in your mind, and then you volunteered that you heard a discussion at the 8th Avenue Temple, which I gave at a time when you were present.

A. Yes, sir.

Q. That was a lecture concerning the apprehension of criminals and their prosecution?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you feel as a result of certain matters you heard in that speech that you have a bias against the defendants which would preclude you from being fair?

A. It is quite likely it would.

The Court: As long as there is no question about counsel ——

Mr. Rosenthal: I just want to ask him one question for the record.

By Mr. Rosenthal:

Q. The bias does not extend to me?
A. No.

The Court: I will sustain the challenge.

Benjamin R. Corning, No. 3062, a talesman, was examined as to his qualifications to serve as a juror.

By Mr. Turkus:

Q. Do you live in Bay Ridge?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. You are an engineer?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. I take it you have some background by way of a college degree?
A. Columbia.
[fol. 2673] Q. How old are you?
A. Thirty-seven.

The Court:

Q. Who are you employed by?
A. New York Telephone Company.

By the Court:

Q. How long have you been employed by the Telephone Company?
A. Twenty-one years.
Q. That has been your life occupation?
A. Yes.
Q. You live in the Fort Hamilton Section. Is that a house or an apartment?
A. That is a two-family house.
Q. Are you married?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. Any children?
A. No, sir.
Q. Are you under any embarrassment in serving here on account of your wife being alone?
A. Well, I don't like to leave her alone, naturally.

Q. You have in-laws?
A. I have a brother-in-law.

By Mr. Turkus:

Q. Have you any scruples, conscientious or otherwise, against capital punishment?
A. No, sir.
Q. Are you in sympathy with law enforcement?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. Have you ever sat as a juror in a criminal case?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. Did the case come to a conclusion, and by that I mean did the Judge charge the jury on the law?
A. I think he did.
Q. Were any of the lawyers in that case in this case now?
A. No, sir.
Q. Will you take the law exclusively from the trial judge [fol. 2674] in this case?
A. Yes, sir. I recall about six months ago, by Judge Leibowitz, Judge Healy was counsel.
Q. You were called as a juror in a part that Judge Leibowitz presided over, and Judge Healy was one of defense counsel?
A. Yes, sir, I was picked as No. 1 and challenged.
Q. I was not the prosecutor?
A. No, sir.
Q. It has been brought out by one of the lawyers for the defendant Buchalter that he has been convicted for other crimes and that he is now in jail serving a jail sentence. Would you relax or deviate from a proper result in this case because he is in jail for one of the crimes he has committed?
A. No, sir.
Q. It has also been brought out by one of the lawyers for the defendants that the defendants are here only to meet one charge. Do you understand that is all the District Attorney in law can do, establish guilt beyond a reasonable doubt on this charge and this charge alone?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. If I accepted you as a juror, would you endeavor to do justice in this case?
A. I will try, yes, sir.

By the Court:

Q. Has anything you heard in court caused a prejudice in your mind in relation to either side of the case?

A. No, sir.

By Mr. Turkus:

Q. In the case in which you sat as a juror, do you say that was years ago, when you actually sat as a juror?

A. Yes, sir, that was a murder case, Judge Brancato [fol. 2675] was the judge. Mr. Kleinman was the Assistant District Attorney.

Q. Do you know any of these nine lawyers in this case?

A. I saw Mr. Barshay in the court-room at that time, I think.

Q. Is your acquaintance with Mr. Barshay limited to the time when you, as a juror, saw him in the court representing The People?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Is that the limit of your acquaintance with Mr. Kleinman?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. In a criminal case, in every criminal case, as you understand from your experience, the defendants have certain rights, and the Judge charges certain legal safeguards, the presumption of innocence, the doctrine of reasonable doubt, the burden of proof on the District Attorney, and other matters which the Judge will charge you on the law. Will you take every one of the Judge's instructions and apply them to the facts?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And after you hear all the evidence in the case, if you have a reasonable doubt about their guilt, will you say so in your verdict?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Have you any bias or prejudice against the prosecutor of the county, Judge O'Dwyer, or against the prosecution wherein a murder case is solved from the inside, by the acceptance of an accomplice's evidence?

A. No, sir.

Q. Will you apply all the rules and tests to an accomplice witness, to find out does he tell the truth, I don't mean about [fol. 2676] his own share in the commission of the murder, but the part which each defendant played?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. If accepted, will you devote your mental faculties to ascertaining whether the accomplice speaks the truth about the part that each defendant, as a group or combination, played in the commission of this murder?

Mr. Barshay: I object as to the form.

Mr. Turkus: Alleged murder.

The Court: Allowed as qualified.

Q. You understand, when I tell you a case is broken from the inside and I tell you the defendants played certain parts in the commission of a murder, that is not evidence? I am telling you that now in order to find out your state of mind, to see if there is any prejudice. Do you understand it is your job to find out whether or not the case is solved from the inside and whether or not these defendants did play the part that we charge in the indictment they played in the commission of this murder? You do not accept any statement of the prosecutor in lieu of testimony you hear in court?

A. No, sir.

Q. It may be you may not like the accomplice. I don't know what your reaction is. I am not sworn here; you are sworn, and all my personal belief about an accomplice is not what really concerns. We are concerned with, Does he speak the truth, not only about himself, but them.

A. Yes.

Q. If you find from the evidence that these three men [fol. 2677] are guilty of murder in the first degree, you will not acquit them because you do not like the accomplice, will you?

A. No, sir.

Mr. Barshay: I object to the form of the question.

By the Court:

Q. If the case is proven beyond a reasonable doubt, will you convict?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. If not proven beyond a reasonable doubt, will you acquit?

A. Yes, isr.

Q. Do you know of any reason why you cannot make a fair and impartial juror?

A. No, sir.

Q. And make an intelligent decision upon the evidence and the evidence alone?

A. No, sir.

Q. Is there any reason why you cannot or won't make a fair and impartial juror and try the case upon the evidence and the evidence alone?

A. No, sir.

By Mr. Talley:

Q. Have you read anything about this case or any of these defendants?

A. I have read the headlines.

Q. Did you read any of the articles the headlines of which you say you read?

A. I read an article in the Telegram.

Q. In any other paper?

A. I read the headlines, that is all.

Q. Did you read anything in the Mirror?

A. No, sir.

Q. Did you read the Journal-American, the life and career of Judge O'Dwyer?

A. No, sir.

[fol. 2678] Q. Have you talked to anybody about this case or about these defendants?

A. No, sir, I just had a little conversation that had no bearing on the case.

Q. Was it about this case?

A. I have mentioned it in conversation.

Q. Was it about these defendants or any of them?

A. Well, maybe I should elaborate a little bit. I go home at night, and certain people know I am on this panel—they found out—and they ask me certain things about it. I did not speak an awful lot about it.

Q. When were you served with your notice to appear in this case?

A. On Saturday at about four o'clock.

Q. You have had much time since then to talk about the case?

A. No, sir.

Q. Have you formed any impression about the guilt or innocence of these defendants as a result of the conversation, casual or otherwise, as a result of your reading?

A. No, sir.

Q. You haven't any impression about any of these defendants; is that right?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. The Court will charge you that the burden in a criminal trial rests upon The People to prove the guilt of the defendants and to prove it beyond a reasonable doubt; would you require that degree of proof before you would find a verdict of guilty?

A. I understand.

Q. If you have a reasonable doubt, the Court will charge [fol. 2679] you that guilt must be proven beyond a reasonable doubt—if you have a reasonable doubt as to the guilt of any of these three defendants, will you give these defendants the benefit of that doubt and acquit them?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. There isn't any question in your mind that you will do that under these circumstances?

A. No, sir.

Q. The law requiring that The People must prove the guilt of the defendants means, in another way, that the defendants are not called upon to prove their innocence, you understand?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And they are not called upon to testify—to prove their innocence, or to rebut anything said by The People—you understand that is our law?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And if it should happen, under advice of counsel or otherwise, that any of these defendants shall not take the stand, will you indulge in any unfavorable inference against them in case they do not take the stand?

A. No, sir.

Q. You realize that is one of their rights?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. It has been indicated here by the District Attorney that the evidence, or some of it, against these defendants will come out of the mouths of accomplices—that is, men who say they had a part in the commission of the killing, the subject of the indictment. The Court will charge you that your obligation, your duty, is to scrutinize the testimony of an accomplice, or one who says he is an accomplice, or [fol. 2680] one whom you find from the testimony and the facts, whether he denies it or not, is an accomplice. If the Court charges you to scrutinize that kind of testimony with care and caution and suspicion, would you view their testimony in that regard?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, the Court will charge you further that before you can convict upon the testimony of an accomplice, whether it be one or one hundred, that such testimony coming from the mouth of an accomplice, must be corroborated, supported, and backed up by some other evidence which is independent of the testimony of the accomplice. Before you convict upon testimony of such an accomplice, will you require that that further independent evidence will be produced by the District Attorney?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you know of any reason why you cannot sit as a fair and impartial juror on the trial of this case?

A. No, sir.

Q. You haven't any prejudice or feeling against the defendants?

A. No, sir.

Q. The Court will charge you that they are presumed to be innocent until guilt is proven beyond a reasonable doubt, and you will give them that presumption, that legal right that every citizen has?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. The presumption of innocence you will give to them?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. You will not be afraid to bring in a verdict of Not [fol. 2681] Guilty with respect to these defendants if you are not satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt of their guilt?

A. That is right.

Q. Do you know Judge O'Dwyer?

A. No, sir.

Q. Are you contemplating taking any part in the campaign in which Judge O'Dwyer is a candidate?

A. No, sir.

Q. Are you a member of any organization, so far as you know, that is taking part in the campaign to elect Judge O'Dwyer?

A. No, sir.

Q. So you have no activity at present, or no concentrated activity with respect to this Mayoralty election?

A. That is right.

By the Court:

Q. You are not a member of the family of Erasmus Corning?

A. No, sir, mother and father were born in Nova Scotia.

Mr. Climenko: If your Honor please, may I respectfully request we recess at this time? May I state the reason for my request?

The Court: No, this is not a reviewable matter at all.

Mr. Climenko: May I merely state it is now twenty-five minutes to seven, but I had other reasons for making the exception, and I take an exception to your Honor's ruling that I may not state those reasons.

By Mr. Climenko:

Q. You started working for your company when you were [fol. 2682] sixteen?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, do you belong to any club or association formed in connection with the company you work for?

A. No, sir—The Pioneers, that is, a man who has twenty-one years' service becomes a Pioneer.

Q. That is just seniority?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. That is not an association in a sense other than it brings men together?

A. Yes, sir, they have meetings, but I have not been with them yet.

Q. You are just qualified, you have not become intimate as yet?

A. That is right.

Q. You do not belong to any other social association connected with your corporate employer?

A. No, sir.

Q. Have you heard any lectures on crime in general?

A. No, sir, not to my knowledge.

Q. I don't mean necessarily in connection with your employment, but have you listened to lectures on crime?

A. No.

Q. Are you acquainted with any member of the Police Department of the City of New York?

A. No.

Q. You do not have any members of that particular group in your friendship?

A. Only one, I bowled with him; I met him occasionally, bowling.

Q. May I know his name?

A. Carey.

Q. Do you know his rank?

A. No, sir.

Q. He is just a bowling acquaintance?

[fol. 2683] Q. You bowled a game with him, I understand?

A. I have known him for about six months.

Q. What I am interested in knowing is whether or not, in connection with the acquaintanceship with Officer Carey you have discussed matters coming before him in his capacity as a police officer.

A. No, sir.

Q. What is his rank, by the way?

A. I could not say what his rank is; I know he is a member of the Police Department.

Q. Have you and he ever talked about this case?

A. No, sir, it is six months maybe; I have not seen him for six months.

By the Court:

Q. Have you and he ever talked about any criminal case?

A. No, sir, strictly bowling.

By Mr. Climenko:

Q. That has no bearing on your decision in this case?

A. No, sir.

Q. Judge Talley asked you if you read about this case, and I understood you to say you simply read the headlines.

A. Yes, sir.

Q. You did not read the contents of any article below the headlines?

A. Except the one in the Telegram, that was Tuesday of this week.

Q. You did not read the Mirror or the series of articles which it ran sometime between July and August of this year?

A. No, sir.

Q. You did not read the series of articles which appeared in the Journal?

A. No, sir.

[fol. 2684] Q. Have you discussed this case other than the discussion you told Judge Talley about, with those people who know you are on the panel?

A. No, sir.

Q. Have you ever heard discussions by other persons?

A. I heard them speak about it, yes, sir.

Q. Within a week or so?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Were those discussions in which participants, through the discussions, voiced or expressed an opinion about anybody named in the indictment in this case?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. You have heard other people express opinions about one or more of the defendants in this case?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Were those opinions expressed by persons who purported to have an opinion as to the guilt or innocence of the defendants, one or more of them, in this case?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. How late was the last of these discussions you ever heard?

A. About two nights ago.

Q. Will you tell me where this discussion took place?

A. In a candy store where I buy the paper on my way home, as I left here.

Q. Is that candy store near here?

A. Near where I live.

Q. In other words, is it a place you usually patronize, where you go to buy confections or newspapers?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you know the participants in this discussion?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Are they friends of yours?

A. Yes, sir.

[fol. 2685] Q. And they have been your intimate friends for some time?

A. I know one of them.

Q. He is a fellow whom you respect generally?

A. Yes, sir, I respect.

Q. I mean he is a fellow you respect.

A. I would not say that I respect him.

Q. You do not always believe friends on every subject but this man is a friend of yours?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. A good enough friend of yours——

Mr. Turkus: (interrupting) I object. They have been going over this fishing trip for the third time.

The Court: For a man who is trying to save time there have been lots of questions.

By the Court:

Q. Was anything said in the candy store which would influence your opinion in the decision of this case?

A. No, sir; he expressed an opinion.

Q. Does that influence you?

A. No, sir.

Q. Did you pay any attention to him?

A. Not particularly, no, sir; I cannot say I did.

Q. Do you know the candy store man?

A. This man is not the candy store man.

Q. He is a customer?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. What was his business?

A. He works in the fur line; I think he models fur goods.

[fol. 2686] Q. Did he give you what appeared to be information that had any bearing on this case?

A. He claimed he knew certain things, I don't know just what they are.

Q. Did he go into details?

A. No, sir; he mentioned certain things.

Q. Did he apparently try to talk to you as a partisan for the prosecution?

A. I would not say that; I think he just spoke what he thought.

Q. Did you participate in the discussion?

A. No, sir, not to any length.

Q. Did you ask him for more?

A. No, sir.

Q. Are you able to lay all that aside?

A. I think so, yes.

Q. Do you know so—that you will lay it aside?

A. I can, yes, sir.

By Mr. Climenko:

Q. You understand I am not to pry into your personal affairs, you know I would not presume to ask you about the identity of your friends. I am a lawyer representing a defendant in this case; you know that?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. So that there isn't any possibility that you may be offended by the tone of any question I ask you?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. There is nothing personal about any of these questions I put to you. I am here under an obligation as a lawyer at this moment to ask you on these matters, which were I to ask you about outside of the court-room might sound dif- [fol. 2687] ferently?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. But because of the circumstances we are in at this moment and because of this obligation on me at this moment, you understand, these questions are not offensive?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. The gentleman you spoke to in the candy store you frequent, you understand I am not being offensive about it, but simply because I feel it is my duty to do it: now, the gentleman whom you met in the candy store you frequent expressed an opinion about a defendant in this case within the last two days?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, did he know that you had a notice to appear here as a member of this panel?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. He had learned that a few days before this discussion took place, is that correct?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was that discussion you had with him two days ago the first conversation of a series on the subject?

A. That is the only time I had that talk.

By the Court:

Q. Did you tell him you did not want to listen to it?

A. I did not get that far, I don't think.

Q. Did it last any length of time?

A. No, sir. He expressed an opinion, and I did not go any further.

Q. Just a few words?

A. Just a little more than a few words.

Q. Then it was dropped?

[fol. 2688] A. Yes, sir, and I went on another conversation.

By Mr. Climenko:

Q. You volunteered that your friend had something to do with the fur business. What did he do, model fur coats?

A. Modeled fur coats.

By the Court:

Q. He was a workman?

A. Well, I suppose you would call him a fur dealer.

Q. I mean, was he the owner of the business?

A. No, sir, I cannot answer that question; I did not know him well enough for that.

By Mr. Climenko:

Q. You first talked to him two days ago?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you talk to him on any prior occasion?

A. Not about this.

Q. When first did he know you had a notice to appear as a member of this panel?

A. It happened that I was out fishing with him on Saturday.

Q. Did you tell him you had a notice to appear as a member of this panel?

A. I did not know it myself until I got home.

By the Court:

Q. Let us get down to the point. You went fishing with the man. Did he do any talking with you along the lines of evidence in this case—we are entitled to get an answer.

A. No, sir, I did not know I was on the ticket.

[fol. 2689] Q. Whether you knew it or not, did he talk to you and plant seed of belief in your mind?

A. Well, that question was a leading question he asked me——

Q. Did you form any impression as to the guilt or innocence of the accused, from what he said?

A. No, sir.

By Mr. Climenko:

Q. Did he tell you anything about any of the defendants in this case?
A. Yes.

By the Court:

Q. Did he mention them by name?
A. Yes, sir.

Mr. Climenko: I challenge.
The Court: Try the challenge.

Benjamin R. Corning, residing at 138 Ninety-sixth Street, Brooklyn, New York, was sworn on the challenge.

By Mr. Climenko:

Q. Now that you are sworn, if I were to repeat the different questions which I put to you before you were under oath, would your answers be the same?
A. Yes, sir.

Mr. Turkus: No questions.
The Court: Challenge sustained.

(William C. Link, a talesman, was called to the jury box.)

The Court: Gentlemen, you may go until tomorrow morning at ten o'clock. Please remember the previous admonition. Do not discuss the case nor let anyone talk to you about it. Keep your minds open. Particularly, in connec- [fol. 2690] tion with my admonition, do not listen to the radio or any campaign speeches tonight. Defendants remanded.

All other talesmen excused until ten o'clock tomorrow morning.

(After the departure of talesmen and jurors, the Court made the following statement:)

The Court: The purpose of this is to simplify and complete the record in regard to the good faith of the Court in relation to the defendant who claims to be ill but who may be shamming.

A letter by the Court, delivered by messenger last night at the close of the court session, to the Tombs, 101 Centre

Street, City Prison, directed to Dr. Andrew J. Torre, acting chief, Medical Staff:

[fol. 2691] "Dear Sir:

"This confirms my oral request to you yesterday on the occasion of your visit at the County Court. I request that you endeavor forthwith to procure a modification of the Acting Commissioner's order of October 10, 1941, so as to permit Louis Capone on each occasion when leaving for the court to be supplied with sufficient medication to be used, in his discretion, for the day's possible needs. The order of the Acting Commissioner permitting no medication whatever to be carried is in my judgment too stringent, in view of the diagnosis. The Court cannot afford, in the light of the report, to take any chance on the defendant's dying, due to coronary attack, for want of medication.

"Yours truly,

"(Signed by the Court.)"

The Court noticed today, both this morning and this afternoon, that this particular defendant chews gum very actively and constantly, and every few seconds opens his mouth, apparently swallowing air. This may have some bearing on the attack.

Court adjourned.

(Whereupon an adjournment was taken to Friday, October 17, 1941, at 10:00 A. M.)

[fol. 2692] Brooklyn, N. Y., October 17, 1941.

Trial Resumed

William C. Link, a talesman, examined as to his qualification as a juror.

By Mr. Turkus:

Q. Do you reside on Remsen Street?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. That is on Columbia Heights?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. You are listed as a radio producer?
A. Well, I was a radio producer——

Q. You look familiar to me; I think you were on one of the panels in one of the murder cases I prosecuted?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Mr. Rosenthal was one of the lawyers in that case?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Is my memory correct, did you write the script for "The District Attorney?"

A. No, sir, I did not.

Q. Did you have something to do with that program?

A. No, sir, at times I have been called in consultation on various programs; that was one of the programs.

Q. What business are you in?

A. I am a radio announcer.

The Court:

Q. What station?

A. A free lance, your Honor; no particular station; all stations.

Q. Before you went in the radio business what was your profession?

A. I was director of a radio school of technique for the Federal Service; prior to that I was a radio announcer; and prior to that I was manager of the Packard Motor Car Company.

[fol. 2693] By the Court:

Q. On Atlantic Avenue?

A. No, sir, 63rd Street and Broadway, New York.

Q. What school was that?

A. The Federal Theatre Radio School of Technique; I was director of that school, teaching actors and actresses.

Q. That is a W. P. A. proposition?

A. That is what they say.

By Mr. Turkus:

Q. I think you got as far as the jury box in the last case, was that in 1940—September of 1940?

A. March, I think.

By the Court:

Q. When you say you were a director in the school I assume you have had theatrical training?

A. I trained various actors and actresses in technique.

Q. What experience have you had on the stage?

A. None whatever.

Q. You had theatrical training?

A. I had theatrical training in radio technique but nothing as to the stage.

By Mr. Turkus:

Q. While you were examined the last time did you hear certain names mentioned in that examination?

A. I heard some names mentioned in that case.

Q. Did you hear the name of Harry (Happy) Maione?

[fol. 2694] A. Yes, sir.

Q. And Frank (The Dasher) Abbandando?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. The name of Martin Bugsy Goldstein?

A. I do not recall that name.

Q. And Harry Pittsburgh Phil Strauss?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And other names?

A. I can not recall all.

Q. Do you know whether you heard the name of any defendant in this case?

A. I don't recall, no, sir.

Q. Did you follow the case thereafter with any degree of curiosity?

A. Not to any great extent except I wanted to find out what became of the case on the last day of the trial.

Q. Is there anything that you have gained by virtue of having been in the court, or anything you read, which would form a prejudice in your mind?

A. None whatever.

Q. I take it that you have sat through all the examinations we have had of prospective talesmen here?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Would you answers be substantially the same if I went through the questions I put to the other talesmen whom we have accepted?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. For example, going into accomplice testimony, you understand by now that part of the testimony in this case will emanate from accomplices. Was there any discussion we had the last time you were called as a juror?

A. I believe there was.

[fol. 2695] Q. Do you have any bias or prejudice, or any fault to find with the District Attorney of the County, Judge O'Dwyer, or with the prosecution, concerning the testimony of accomplices as used against the remaining defendants in the case?

A. No.

Q. Will you, if accepted in this case, devote your mental faculties to finding out does this accomplice speak the truth about other men who were in the commission of crimes with him?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And do you understand, from our examination, there can not be a conviction upon the unsupported testimony of accomplices?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. For example, no matter how believable a story of the accomplice is, implicating or involving his confederates, the law says there must be other evidence in the case which tends to connect the defendant with the commission of the crime, will you follow the instruction of law, and with common sense and understanding apply it to this case?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. If the judge should charge you, in substance—I may not use the exact language he uses, but in substance, that it is not the burden of the District Attorney to corroborate every item of the accomplice's testimony but that supporting evidence, if believed by the jury, may be deemed sufficient when it tends to connect the defendant and each of them with the commission of the crime, will you follow the instructions of law and apply the same to the facts in this [fol. 2696] case?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you understand it is not whether I dislike an accomplice or whether you dislike him, it is not our personal feeling about him, the test is does he speak the truth about his confederates and the part they played as a group or combination in the commission of the murder alleged in the indictment?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. For example, you will be told, in substance, that you shall weigh the testimony of an accomplice with care and caution, and view it with suspicion—and the other tests you shall apply—which is all done for the common sense purpose of finding out does he tell the truth not only about himself but about them?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. So now you know what test to apply, motive test, the criminal records of defendant's associations, no matter what those are, those are the rules you use to say "Does he speak the truth about them in the part that each of them played in this group or combination that perpetrated this alleged crime?"

A. Yes.

Q. It has been stated by one of the lawyers for Buchalter, that his client is now presently serving a long jail term for the commission of other offences and convictions. Would the fact that he is paying a penalty for other offences sway you in your deliberations in this trial in the proper determination of this case?

A. No.

[fol. 2697] Q. Would you relax or deviate from a proper jury verdict in this case becaase he is in jail now?

A. I would not.

Q. Is there anything in this examination that as a prosecutor I should know as to your qualifications and ability to sit on this trial and render a verdict in consonance with justice?

A. I do not know of any.

Q. Is there anything that occurred in the examination of jurors in the case in which I was prosecutor and Mr. Rosenthal was one of the defendant's lawyers that affects your ability to sit here impartially?

A. None whatever.

Q. In that case I believe you came as far as now—that is, you got in the box?

A. Yes.

Q. Were you excused by one side or the other?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. It was not a cause challenge, was it, that is for any disability on your part?

A. No, sir.

Q. Is there anything by way of your excuse there that would prejudice you one way or the other?

A. No, sir.

Q. Have you served as a juror in any criminal case in the past?

A. No.

Q. There is nothing mysterious about jury duty; you are called here to determine the question of guilt or innocence of men on trial?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And to that you will apply the law that the judge gives you and the common sense you have gathered through [fol. 2698] your every day walks of life?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Very frankly, if, when you hear all the evidence of the case, if, after you have heard everything that Judge O'Dwyer produces in this court, if then you entertain a reasonable doubt, you would give that benefit to the defendants?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Would you give them everything that the law of the land says they should have, and what the law of the land is as to the defendants on trial, Judge Taylor will tell you, and no one else. He tells the law. Will you give them everything under the sun that they are entitled to have by way of constitutional and other safeguards in a court of justice?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And after you give them everything the law demands they should have, and after you heard all the evidence, should you be convinced beyond a reasonable doubt that here there are three guilty men, three who participated and played a combination part with a group—a part in the killing of the victim named in this indictment—will you say so by your verdict?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Will you say so without fear or hesitation?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Is there anything about your background or the present manner in which you earn your livelihood that would make it embarrassing or impossible for you to pronounce such a verdict?

A. No, sir.

[fol. 2699] By the Court:

Q. What stations have you broadcasted on?

A. In New York?

Q. Yes.

A. WEAF, WJZ, WOR, WMCA.

Q. Practically all?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. You get your employment as a free lance from advertising?

A. Advertising agency, yes, sir.

Q. You are put on in order to make the announcement and refer to advertising matter?

A. Yes, sir.

By Mr. Turkus:

Q. When I addressed the omnibus question to you was there anything I should know, I had in mind the garment district, the clothing district, the clothing truckers union, officials of the amalgamated union, the Brownsville section, East New York, and the Brooklyn water front. I direct your attention to that, and I ask you is there anything which brings you in contact with them in any shape or form?

A. None whatever.

By Mr. Barshay:

Q. Do you know anyone at all in the District Attorney's office?

A. No, sir.

Q. Do you know anyone connected with the Police Department?

A. No, sir.

Q. Personally, were you ever the victim of any crime?

A. No, sir.

Q. Do you write scrip too?

A. No, sir, I do not.

Q. Do you really act as an announcer?

A. Years ago I was in the production field; I arranged programs.

[fol. 2706] Q. In any scrip you saw or heard, the experience you got from dealing with this case, of course, aided you in your work but with respect to this case you know nothing?

A. No, sir.

By the Court:

Q. How old a man are you?

A. Forty-one.

Q. Then before you went into the Federal you were giving instructions at school, and you had considerable experience?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Can you tell us one of the lines you were identified with?

A. Well, my experience, before I went to the Federal Theater, was gained first at WNYC. I became program director.

Q. How long ago is that?

A. Mr. Bohnsack was there, you probably know him.

Q. He was there a great many years?

A. I was there just about a year before he retired.

Q. Mr. Bohnsack was then in it about thirty years?

A. I don't know how long; I knew him only two years.

Q. Before that what line were you in?

A. Before that I conducted a school for diction and stage.

Q. For how long?

A. Two years.

Q. And before that?

A. Before that, I was a salesman, manager of the Packard Motor Car Company, for about eight years.

Q. Before that?

A. Before that I was with the United States Line, on the S. S. Manhattan; the entertainment part.

Q. You ran the entertainment part?

A. Yes, sir.

[fol. 2701] Q. For how many years?

A. About a year.

Q. Before that?

A. Before that, I was not doing anything; the Packard Motor Car Company was my first job.

By Mr. Barshay:

Q. Did you read anything about this case?

A. Not very much, just the headlines.

Q. Did that leave you with any impression?

A. No, extraordinary impression.

By the Court:

Q. Pardon me, have you got your school at Carnegie Hall?

A. No, sir.

By Mr. Barshay:

Q. But whatever they were, were they in any respect unfavorable to the defendants?

A. Not unfavorable, no; no impression whatever in that regard of guilt.

Q. Then we start at scratch with you?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Any experience you have had as a juror leaves you with no bias towards them whatever?

A. No, sir.

Q. Mr. Turkus said to prospective jurors and to you that you were to judge fairly the evidence presented in this court by Judge O'Dwyer. I take it, he being part of the whole—I don't know whether Judge O'Dwyer will personally present the evidence—but, assuming he does, would that add weight to the believability of the evidence with respect to you?

A. No, sir.

Q. You understand that they are lawyers just as we are; they present to you what they have to the best of their ability?

[fol. 2702] A. Yes, sir.

Q. And Judge O'Dwyer's presentation of the proof here is no personal guarantee as to its truth—Judge O'Dwyer's presentation of testimony is no guarantee as to its truth?

A. I understand.

Q. He does not underwrite the truth of anything, neither does Mr. Turkus?

A. That is right.

Mr. Turkus: That is an ambiguous way to put it—by placing a witness on the stand the District Attorney vouches for his credibility.

Mr. Barshay: That is a legal conclusion, but you do not personally guarantee the man is not telling the truth.

Mr. Turkus: We are not in the insurance business, if that is what you mean.

Q. In other words, if, subconsciously, there is an attempt to permit the weight of Judge O'Dwyer's integrity and reputation to be used by way of evidence, you will not allow it?

A. No, sir.

Q. He would not want you to—do you believe you can accord to the defendants the presumption of innocence?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. That is a substantial right which everyone is permitted in court?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. When the defendant says not guilty, they in effect, say "You, Mr. District Attorney, present here proof which [fol. 2703] we believe, not any kind of proof, but proof which we believe." And when a defendant pleads not guilty he puts in issue the indictment. The language says "we accuse". It has no force other than to start a trial. You understand that?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And when Buchalter said "not guilty", he said "I am not an accomplice or anyone; I am not part of any combination; I am not part of any group; I deny the accusation," that denial has weight, you understand?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. The burden remains with the District Attorney to prove the accusation alleged?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. He need not prove a single thing—he need disprove not one accusation in this case, you understand?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. So that when the District Attorney comes to present his proof you will want to know who is the person or persons who gives such proof—why do they give it—who are they—what do they expect for giving it?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Is that a fair question?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. The same as any business man applying for credit, or even if he applies for a job—you want to know who he is and what he is, and what is the background of the man?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And the cleaner the background the better the chance of accepting his testimony?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And if it is a rotten background the more carefully you will look at this man in accepting or rejecting his testimony?

A. Yes, sir.

[fol. 2704] Q. That is a fair standard?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. So if the court shall tell you that you, as a juror, in searching for the truth should look for light, and will want to know what kind of a man he is, and is he an accomplice, and if he is an accomplice you must use a different standard—you must look upon it with caution and care—will you do that?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Because you can understand, by the very definition given of an accomplice, if in his testimony in this case he is receiving immunity, he is not going to be punished for the crime he has committed; therefore, when someone has a reason for it, you, as a juror, have the job to find that reason.

Mr. Turkus: Objected to.

The Court: Objection overruled.

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Of course, if you reject his testimony—assuming now that you believe him, you have got to say to yourself, "Is he telling the truth about himself", and then, "Is he telling the truth about Buchalter?

A. Yes.

Q. He may be about himself, I don't know, but with respect to that you shall listen to the testimony and if it comes out here under oath that at a time and place he said he was not an accomplice to anyone, will you consider that?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Will you consider, too, the fact that if it comes out here that at no time did he see Buchalter, in deciding whether or not he now claims to be Buchalter's accomplice?

A. Yes, sir.

[fol. 2705] Q. And find out whether or not he has committed murder or other crimes or robberies, or how he lived?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. How he has been treated since his incarceration, where he lived and what he ate, whom he saw, where he went, what entertainment he received, you will want to find out whether those things motivated him to falsify to you?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Because he raised his hand to tell the truth does not necessarily mean that he is telling the truth?

A. No, sir.

Q. That is why if you are chosen for a juror you are to determine—you will wait until the entire case is finished and not make up your mind with respect to it until the conclusion?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Of course you know by now if the testimony of the accomplice, should you believe it, standing alone is not sufficient for you to convict, and you will acquit?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Corroborating testimony must be absolutely independent of the accomplice's testimony, you understand that?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Are you in accord with that?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. There may be corroboration that someone has been killed at a place mentioned in the indictment, but that does not connect the defendant with the commission of the crime, that is not corroboration, you understand?

Q. That may corroborate him as to the killing, but not as to the defendant Buchalter's connection with the killing—[fol. 2706] that is a vital problem for you to decide?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. So when we offer testimony, it is the good faith you want to know of the man who gives it, what is he, who is he, what is the background, what is the motive, what can he hope to gain by giving such testimony; is he telling the truth with respect to Buchalter?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And if at all that there is a reasonable doubt as to the guilt or innocence of Buchalter, you must acquit, will you do that?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And Buchalter will not have to explain anything to you?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Of course if he chooses to take the stand you can judge according to the instructions of his Honor, you will follow that, but I must ask you that now. I have elicited that not to gain your sympathy but to find out whether you are prejudiced against a man who is in that posit'on. You have a right to be if you want to.

A. I am not prejudiced.

Q. Mr. Tarkus wisely said that has nothing to do with this case, nevertheless it may prejudice some people, but if you have any, that has no place in the jury room. You say you have no prejudice?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. If others take the stand and he does not take the stand, that still would not affect his guilt or innocence?

A. No, sir.

Q. If he chooses to remain off. So, before you find out whether he is part and parcel of the group combination you [fol. 2707] will have to see whether or not that is brought out from the evidence—not from anything anyone says from here but from there (indicating witness stand)?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. You shall hear again as you heard before that one accomplice cannot corrborate another nor one hundred cannot corroborate each other. If they are accomplices they have no greater force with respect to corroboration. You know that?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, some man may come here and say that he is not an accomplice—I do not know what the evidence will be—but if the Court shall leave it to you to decide whether he is or is not, will you follow the standard outlined by his Honor in deciding whether he is or is not?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. On the other hand, if the Court tells you as a matter of law someone is an accomplice with respect to him, you have a rule to follow and you must accept him as an accomplice if the Court tells you he is?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you must then look for other evidence tending to corroborate him?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Can Mr. Buchalter as an individual depend on you and entrust to you his keeping and preservation?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Without any sympathy or bias or prejudice?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. I take it you will consider your oath on that?

A. Yes, sir.

By Mr. Cuff:

Q. You told Mr. Barshay that as a result of reading which [fol. 2708] you indulged in concerning the case here you did not form any extraordinary impression?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. I did not get what that impression was, I would like you to tell me whether you formed any impression or not?

A. When I said extraordinary impression, I meant my impression would be an ordinary impression.

Q. What I am trying to find out is whether you did form any impression respecting the case of the defendants?

A. No, sir.

Q. So when you said you did not form any extraordinary impression, you meant you did not form any impression?

A. Yes, sir, that is correct.

Q. What papers do you usually read?

A. The World Telegram and the Tribune.

Q. Do you read the Mirror?

A. No, sir.

Q. Now?

A. No, sir.

Q. Did you read articles in the World Telegram?

A. Not many of them but just the headlines and probably two or three lines below.

Q. As a result of those readings did you form any impression with respect to this case of the defendants?

A. None.

Q. And if you are selected as a juror, I assume you understand that you with the other eleven men who will make up the jury have the sole right to determine what the facts are and where the truth lies in the case?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And if his Honor should instruct you, and I think he [fol. 2709] will, that each juror must make up his mind after considering the evidence under the rules of law that his Honor will give for your guidance as to what the facts are and then find accordingly, will you do that?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. If, after giving careful scrutiny to the evidence which you will be instructed to give, you reach the conclusion that there is a reasonable doubt in your mind, a doubt which is based upon evidence or lack of evidence, will you have any hesitancy in reflecting that doubt in your verdict of not guilty in so far as the defendant or defendants are concerned?

A. No, sir.

Q. Do you realize that if you are selected as a juror, under your oath you must determine and find according to the way you regard the facts?

A. That is right.

Q. Without fear or favor or prejudice or bias.

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And can you do that?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. You were asked if you had any hesitation under certain given circumstances of returning a verdict of guilty, I ask you if you would have any hesitancy, any fear, any reluctance, in returning a verdict of not guilty if you found, after careful consideration of the evidence and a discussion with your other jurors that the prosecution had failed to establish to your satisfaction beyond a reasonable doubt that the defendants are guilty?

A. No, sir.

Q. Assuming that you have a reasonable doubt and his Honor should instruct you that it is your duty to reflect [fol. 2710] that reasonable doubt by your vote in the verdict, would you, unless you were convinced by reasonable argument and careful consideration of the evidence, give up your determination by reason of the fact that there were several more men against you, or would you by reason of the lateness of the hour or the length of time give it up?

A. No, sir.

Q. You would stick to it so long as you were not convinced that you were in error?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. I have your assurance that you will do that?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. His Honor will instruct you that these defendants, any of them, have a perfect right to remain silent; that the presumption of innocence inures to their benefit and the prosecution must establish their guilt of this crime charged in this indictment beyond a reasonable doubt. Assuming they do not take the witness stand will you draw any unfavorable inference against them by reason of that fact?

A. No, sir.

Q. You will follow the Court's instructions?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. You will give to them the benefit of that presumption, that substantial right, presumption of innocence all through this trial, every minute of the time you are deliberating and until you twelve men agree the prosecution has sustained the burden beyond a reasonable doubt?

A. Yes, sir.

By Mr. Rosenthal:

Q. I have addressed you before when you were in the jury box in another case—have you had any actual jury service? [fol. 2711] A. None whatever.

Q. So that this is the first time, if you are accepted, that you shall have actually served on a jury?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, you understand that just the same as I am an advocate for a cause, Mr. Turkus is an advocate at present for the State of New York—the District Attorney?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you know him when he was a lawyer practicing criminal law?

Mr. Turkus: I object to that. Mr. Rosenthal seems to want to make a record that I do not want.

The Court: You should be proud of it. Objection overruled.

Q. Now, let us be serious, you understand that in the presentation of a criminal case it is never the duty of a defendant to explain anything?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, the law, of course, you will have to take from the judge; will you do that?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. It may be that you may differ in your conception of what the law is, but whether you differ or do not differ your province is not to invade the judge's province, which is to tell you what the law in this case is?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. You feel you will be able to do that?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, then, on the other hand, just as the judge is supreme on the law, you are supreme on the facts and your interpretation of the same, and what weight you will give to [fol. 2712] any fact?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. I might tell you when I sum up, if the case goes that far, what I think the facts are; and, in contradiction to what I may say, Mr. Turkus will get up and tell you an entirely different story about what he thinks. The judge of course will tell you he has no right to comment whatever on the facts and has no opinion whatever. But irrespective of that, no matter what anybody may say, you are—and when I say "you", I mean the entire jury—you are the ones who will determine what value you will give to testimony of any witness on the stand. Is that clear?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And that you will do?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, although you will be told that the law is that a defendant need never take the stand or need never offer any proof in order to establish his innocence, nevertheless, on behalf of the defendant whom I represent, together with my associate, it may be that I will offer it and that the defendant will take the stand, and in addition to the defendant taking the stand that witnesses will take the stand on his behalf. With that thought in mind and with that knowledge, do you feel that really because the defendant is charged with crime and offers himself as a witness that the truth from him has any less weight or value than the truth from any other source?

A. No, sir.

Q. Of course, you will, like with any other witness, in [fol. 2713] determining what weight you will give to the defendant's testimony, take into consideration that he is a defendant and has an interest at stake, but after weighing whatever interest that may be, and his actions and his demeanor, and whatever may transpire when he is on the stand, if you feel he is telling you the truth, then in your mind it is established that the truth from him has just as much weight as the truth from any other source. Am I right?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Some of these questions might be repetitious because I do not know how many of the questions were asked when you were in the court room. Proof may be offered in this case of what is termed in law as an alibi. There is no mysterious meaning as to that word, either in law or outside of law. It means that a witness will take the stand who will adduce to the fact where the defendant was at the time this crime was said to have occurred. Now, if you are told by the Court that a reasonable doubt is a doubt that arises in your mind from any circumstance that develops in the case—it may arise by the offer of evidence of an alibi—if that alibi evidence raises a doubt in your mind as to whether the defendant participated in the crime—am I clear so far?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Will you follow the instructions?

A. Yes, sir

Q. Now, you understand, sir, if that instruction is given you by the Court that it is not incumbent upon the defendant because he offers evidence to establish the fact to your [fol. 2714] satisfaction beyond a doubt, that the burden does not shift from that side of the table at any time, you understand?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. So in determining the question of witnesses who are called by the defense will you keep in mind the fact that when you are testing what weight you will give to their testimony that all that is required upon the part of the defendant is not to prove that he was somewhere else but to prove sufficiently to your mind which will raise a reasonable doubt where, in the absence of such proof, maybe a reasonable doubt would not arise. Is that clear?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. You would have no difficulty in following the judge's instruction, if it was given by the Court?

A. No, sir.

Q. The mere fact that I have examined you before in some other case has no weight of any character?

A. No, sir.

Q. It may appear to be silly, but sometimes jurymen get the impression one way or another—but I think you were excused by the People and another gentleman was excused by the defendant—were you excused by the People?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. I meant whether you were excused by the People or by the defendant—Mr. Turkus and myself are not on trial—we are presenting the evidence, one on behalf of the People, that which has been given to him by witnesses whom he will produce, and me on behalf of the defendant on what he has told me and what evidence I have to produce.

A. Yes, sir.

[fol. 2715] Q. And our entity should not enter into the mind of any juror?

A. Yes, sir.

By the Court:

Q. When you were with WNYC, I take it you were employed by the City and not by advertisers?

A. By the City.

Q. Did you go out the same time as Mr. Bohnsack?

A. I went out a few months before he did.

Q. Well now, have you any prejudice against the present City Administration?

A. None whatever.

Q. Nothing that would make you conduct yourself in favor of Judge O'Dwyer in this case?

A. No, sir, my mind is absolutely free.

By Mr. Rosenthal:

Q. I was just going to ask a question whether or not you have any intention of actively participating in the forthcoming political campaign?

A. No, sir.

Q. No broadcasting?

A. No, sir.

The Court:

Q. You have never broadcasted on the crime cases?

A. No, sir.

By Mr. Rosenthal:

Q. So I can abbreviate this, were you in court when the question was discussed with the other jurymen about the fact that no man can be convicted on the uncorroborated testimony of an accomplice?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. When the explanation was made as to the fact that [fol. 2716] even though a man may go on the stand and say I am an accomplice, he may be telling the truth concerning himself, but that is not the issue you have to decide. The issue is whether he is telling the truth about the defendant?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, in taking into consideration not only the testimony of the so-called accomplice but any witness who may be called, whether it be for the defense or for the prosecution, will you scrutinize his testimony to such an extent that you yourself will first formulate in your own mind whether or not he has a motive for testifying falsely in this court about the defendant?

A. I will.

Q. Now, if that would not be sufficient, once having established, if you do so establish, the fact that he has, will you then scrutinize sufficiently to ascertain whether in your opinion that motive is of such a character as would lead him to falsify?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now then, to go further than that, if you determine after those two premise that motive is of such a character as would lead him to falsity, so you would be unable to place credence on his testimony, will you, in determining what weight, if any, you will give his testimony, take these facts into consideration?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, in considering not only that, you understand you also have a right to consider whether any particular individual called to the stand has been previously on the stand [fol. 2717] under oath and questioned, and committed deliberate perjury in respect to certain matters, or falsified under oath?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. In a court of similar jurisdiction to this, in determining what weight you will give this testimony?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. In other words, if you found a man has lied, putting it bluntly, under oath, under similar circumstances, to what he has testified to now under oath, you would consider that carefully?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Merely because the District Attorney may get up and tell you that the man is not an accomplice, or merely because the Court does not charge you as a matter of law that the man is not an accomplice—you see that is how I am in difficulty as to whether you heard these things discussed—that does not preclude you, if the Judge tells you under certain circumstances you may. So that there may come a time when the judge will tell you, "I charge you, Mr. Juryman," or "Gentlemen of the jury, this man is an accomplice as a matter of law," if he charges you that way you will definitely view his testimony as an accomplice.

Now then, there may come a time when the judge may say to you, "Gentlemen of the jury, there is a question here that is left to you to determine as to whether or not this man is an accomplice." In other words, it is a disputed question, "so I leave it to you to determine." Then it will be the province of the jury to go into the jury room and before going over the testimony of this man and determining what [fol. 2718] weight they will give to it, determine to themselves whether under all the circumstances he is or is not an accomplice?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. The judge will probably charge you that once you have determined whether by virtue of the fact he has said the man is an accomplice as a matter of law or you find him an accomplice as a matter of fact, once you determine that fact that he is an accomplice, then, whether believed or not, no man can be convicted on his testimony or their testimony unless there is other independent evidence tending to connect the defendant?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Never having sat on a jury before, that is a juror sitting in a jury room, do you understand that your duty as a juror is to view the evidence as you see it, as your mind reasons it?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. But that does not mean that after once having come to a determination in your mind that you should foreclose other people from discussing that and their reasons?

A. That is right.

Q. However, your duty as a juryman is that after listening attentively and trying to have your ideas agree with others, argument pro and con, discussing reasons why you have come to determination and listening to reasons which they make, if after all of that discussion you have not been convinced that the foundation of your reasoning is wrong, it is your absolute duty to retain that opinion?

A. Yes, sir.

[fol. 2719] Q. If perchance such a circumstance does arise, have you the fortitude to retain your opinion irrespective of your inexperience in a jury room, irrespective of the lateness of the hour, business, numbers against you or any other outside extraneous cause, have you that fortitude?

A. Yes, sir.

By the Court:

Q. Do you live at 36 Remsen Street?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. That is between Montague Terrace and Hicks?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. Now some of those houses are still private dwellings?
A. Quite a few.
Q. Others have been made into apartments?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. Others are rooming or boarding houses?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. Do you live alone?
A. No, sir, I live with my wife. We live in a renovated house which was a private house, turned into an eight unit apartment.
Q. You occupy one of the apartments in one of the houses that have been reconstructed?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. There have been no home discussions about this case?
A. None whatever.
Q. Of course you have entered into boarding house table discussions?
A. I never lived in a boarding house.
Q. I asked you that because some of those are boarding houses?
A. I realize that.
Q. Where such topics are discussed at the table?
A. Yes.

[fol. 2720] By Mr. Rosenthal:

Q. Of course it is ridiculous to attempt to say this case has not had some publicity—you have read headlines?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. Now, do you understand these defendants—I am not referring to that purposely—but these defendants are not being tried because Judge O'Dwyer is trying to become Mayor—that is not the issue. Have you the power—and I only ask you this question because of what the District Attorney has said—have you the power not to consider whatever publicity may have been given to this case, if when you raise your hand and take an oath to act as a conscientious juror you are unable in your own mind to say that the People have established these defendants or defendant whom I represent or all of them—to come in here without any fear of hesitation, without any worry, without any criticism that someone might try to make light of your verdict—and say "Not guilty," if the defendant has not been proven guilty beyond a reasonable doubt?

Mr. Turkus: I object, that is summation.
The Court: Objection overruled.

A. I have.

By Mr. Turkus:

Q. Mr. Rosenthal has seen fit to bring out that it was the prosecutor who excused you in the last case.

Mr. Rosenthal: I object to that. Mr. Turkus brought out from the other man who excused them, so what is the [fol. 2721] difference?
The Court: Why argue about it?

Q. At that time I believe you were identified with a program of some sort?
A. Yes.
Q. Do you understand that that may have been a question of propriety at that time?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. In other words, there is no resentment because The People excused you?
A. No, sir.

Mr. Turkus: Mr. Link is satisfactory to The People of the State.
Mr. Rosenthal: We rest on the record.
The Court: Before selecting the alternates, of course, the oath will have to be administered to the jury. This question is asked of all twelve members of the jury: Since you were tentatively accepted by both sides at the conclusion of your examination, you have been repeatedly cautioned by the Court not to discuss the case, not to let anybody talk to you about it, not to read the newspapers or otherwise read about it, not to listen to the radio about it. I am going to ask each one of you gentlemen individually if you have strictly followed those instructions.

(Mr. Stevens, Mr. Prentice, Mr. Murphy, Mr. Day, Mr. Gill, Mr. Cummings, Mr. Hall, Mr. Cross, Mr. Butt, Mr.

Edghill, and Mr. Rorke each answered individually, "I have.")

The Court: Mr. Link, I do not have to ask you; you [fol. 2722] were only accepted this morning.

Mr. Rosenthal: May I suggest to the Court that one other question be asked: Has anything happened in any way that would change any of the answers they have given?

The Court: The question is now: Has anything happened to change your viewpoint in regard to the case in the meantime, to change your attitude as impartial jurors? If so, raise your hand.

(Juror No. 9, Mr. Butt, raises his hand.)

The Court: This will have to be at the bench, and not in the hearing of the jury.

(Counsel for the defense and Mr. Turkus appear before the bench with Mr. Butt.)

(Mr. Butt was questioned by the Court without the hearing of the jury, as follows:)

By the Court:

Q. What has happened?

A. There has just been a great conviction on my part towards prejudice in this case.

Q. Based upon what?

A. Based upon the various questions that have been asked in court.

Q. Nothing outside of the court-room?

A. Nothing outside of the court-room, no, sir.

Q. You know that the questions that are asked jurors or talesmen do not indicate in any way the guilt or innocence of the accused. Are you sure this is not just a design to go [fol. 2723] back to the savings bank?

A. No, sir, it is not. It is more important. I realize it, too. There has been great prejudice in my mind about the case. All last night I thought about it. I have not talked about it to anybody.

Q. Do you mean it would prevent you from rendering a fair and impartial verdict?

A. I am afraid so.

The Court: What do you say, gentlemen? You cannot try this challenge. This has to be done quietly, without the presence of the jury. Do all of you consent?

Mr. Barshay: All of the defendants consent.

Mr. Rosenthal: Of course, reserving any exceptions we have taken heretofore.

The Court: Precisely. This is in fairness to the defense. The man has a feeling in his mind which he has frankly expressed. The Court believes it to be an honest one.

(JOHN E. COLEMAN, called as a talesman, was examined as to his qualifications by Mr. Turkus.)

Q. Where do you live?

A. I live at 308 East 8th Street.

Q. That is in Flatbush?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. I take it you did reside on St. Johns Place?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. You are listed as a business representative. What outfit do you represent?

A. The Brooklyn Edison, eleven years.

Q. Prior to then did you engage in any occupation?

A. Yes.

[fol. 2724] Q. What was your work then?

A. Manager for the Kelvinator Refrigerator.

By the Court:

Q. You live on Nostrand Avenue?

A. I did, your Honor, between New York and Brooklyn.

By Mr. Turkus:

Q. Are you married?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Have you lived in Brooklyn most of your life?

A. Yes, sir, all of my life.

Q. I take it you have listened to the questions and are a little tired of hearing them.

A. I did not.

By the Court:

Q. There is a little church there at Beverley Road near your street?

A. One on the corner of East 8th and Beverley. I am in the middle of the block.

Q. Do you belong to that men's club?

A. No, sir.

Q. Have you attended any meetings?

A. No, sir.

By Mr. Turkus:

Q. Have you been engaged as a juror in the trial of any criminal case?

A. Not heretofore.

Q. Have you been ever called for jury service?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Has it been since Judge O'Dwyer was District Attorney?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was it in any case in which I was prosecutor?

A. No, sir.

Q. Was it in any case in which any of these lawyers were [fol. 2725] defense counsel?

A. I don't believe so.

Q. Have you any conscientious scruples or otherwise against capital punishment?

A. No, sir.

Q. Is there anything in your background that we need know in connection with your possible contact with the garment clothing section or the garment truckers, or the Brownsville-East New York section, or the Brooklyn waterfront?

A. No, sir.

Q. Or with any union officials of the Amalgamated, or the Clothing Truckers Union, have you had any contact with them?

A. No, sir.

Q. I take it you are in sympathy with law enforcement?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you know of any member of the bar who specializes in the defense of criminals?

A. No, sir.

Q. As you are sitting there, is there any reason why you cannot be a fair and impartial juror in the discharge of your duty to the People of the State of New York and to these defendants?

A. No, sir.

Q. You do not get any idea about the trial of a case from questions that are either asked you by the prosecutor or the defense lawyers; you get your ideas and impressions and conclusions when the case starts and you hear the evidence.

A. Yes, sir.

Q. But in order to examine a juror as to his state of mind it is necessary to ask certain questions, for example, have you heard the discussion about accomplice testimony?

A. Yes, sir.

[fol. 2726] Q. Have you heard the discussion about the legal rights which accrue to every man charged with crime?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. In this particular case, will you take the law implicitly from Judge Taylor, the trial judge?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Take the law from him, and your obligation as a juror is to apply it with common sense and understanding to the testimony you get in court?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Will you use your mental faculties in doing that?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. You have had experience as a business representative?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you talked things over with them logically?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Will you use the same common sense and logic when you talk the case over with the other jurors?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Will you give to these defendants on trial the benefit of everything the law of the land says they should have, the presumption of evidence, the doctrine of reasonable doubt, every legal thing that can be given to them and for their benefit? The Judge will tell you about it. Will you give it to them?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Will you, after hearing all the evidence in the case, if then you have a reasonable doubt as to their guilt, acquit them?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, by the same token, when you get all the evidence [fol. 2727] in this case, and your conscience is satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that these are three guilty men, three who played the part in the commission of this crime, a group or combination, which witnesses will tell you about in court, will you say that in your verdict?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. There is one little thing I want to go over very hurriedly and then I will be through. There will be testimony in this case which will emanate or come from accomplices. Do you understand by now what an accomplice is?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. You have no illusion about accomplices?

A. No, sir.

Q. Do you understand that we apply the legal test, the common sense test, in conjunction with the believability or credibility of an accomplice?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And that test, with respect to an accomplice, is a little different. The Judge will tell you what those tests are.

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Will you keep in mind, no matter what the tests you apply are, whether it be, Has he got a motive? or, Has he a past criminal record? Has he been steeped in crime and criminal association all his life? You apply all those tests to find out does he speak the truth, not only about himself but about them?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Will you devote your mental faculties to find out does the accomplice in this case speak the truth about them and the part that each one played as a group or combination in [fol. 2728] killing the victim named in the indictment?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Something has been brought out here by one of the lawyers, and he has very properly said it is not by way of sympathy and certainly not intended to prejudice, but the fact remains the man has been convicted of other crimes and is presently serving another jail term. Having in mind that he is presently in jail, would you relax your duty as a juror in this case simply because he is paying the penalty for other offenses for which he has been convicted?

A. No, sir.

Q. Would you be sympathetic or would you deviate from a proper consideration of the case because of the fact he is in jail?

A. No, sir.

Q. Of course, it has been brought out by a lawyer of the defense that there is an indictment here that the defendants are to meet—the only charge in the indictment; by the same token the District Attorney is permitted by law to put in evidence to establish the guilt of these defendants beyond a reasonable doubt.

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, is there anything that, as prosecutor of this indictment, I should know as to your qualifications to sit here as a juror?

A. No, sir.

Q. Has anything happened in your past experience or in the present manner in which you earn your livelihood which would in any way embarrass you or cause you to hesitate in rendering a verdict of guilty, if that is what you feel should be rendered after hearing the evidence?

[fol. 2729] A. No, sir.

Q. May I leave you with this understanding: that you will discuss the case with common sense and reason with your other jurors, and that you will render a verdict that reflects justice in the case?

A. Yes, sir.

By Mr. Talley:

Q. I was not able to hear your answer with respect to the business you were in.

A. The Brooklyn Edison.

Q. How long have you been with the Brooklyn Edison?

A. Eleven years.

Q. Have you read anything about this case?

A. Yes, sir, read quite extensively about it.

Q. May I ask you what paper you read?

A. The World-Telegram and the News.

Q. Did you read the continued story printed more than one night about this case?

A. No, sir.

Q. Did you discuss this case with anybody?

A. No, sir.

Q. Since you have been called as a prospective juryman, did you talk it over with anybody?

A. No, sir.

Q. With the family or anyone else?

A. No, sir.

Q. As the result of the article you read, have you formed any impression about these defendants?

A. In reference to this case?

Q. In reference to the defendants, apart from this?

A. I have read the paper, my normal course of reading. [fol. 2730] Q. In the normal course of reading and as a result of it, did you form any opinion about the guilt or innocence of these defendants?

A. No, sir.

Q. Did you form any impression about them one way or the other which you think might be a handicap or advantage to them as you sit as a juror in this case?

A. No, sir.

Q. You have no impression unfavorable to them at the start?

A. No, sir.

Q. You have not sat as a juror in a criminal case before?

A. No, sir.

Q. Nor in a civil case?

A. Yes, sir, I have sat in a civil case.

Q. The Court will instruct you as to the law here. You will find the rules of law as far as the conduct of a criminal case is concerned, vastly different than that of a civil case. The Court will instruct you that in the matter of proof there is a difference. In a civil case the jury must be satisfied by the fair preponderance of evidence, and if the scale tips a little bit to one side or the other, that is enough. But the Court in this case will charge you that you cannot bring in a verdict of guilty, for instance, against these defendants or any of them, unless you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt—beyond a reasonable doubt—as to their guilt. And the Court will instruct you as to what a reasonable doubt is. In a word, he will say it is the kind of a doubt a man might [fol. 2731] have about any of the ordinary affairs of life, but it must be based on reason. You must be able to give a reason for it. My question to you is, after hearing all of this testimony and giving it the consideration which you think it deserves, if you have a reasonable doubt in your mind as to the guilt of these defendants, will you give them the benefit of that doubt?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. There is no question in your mind but you will be able to do that?

A. No, sir.

Q. You would not hesitate because of things you read in the newspaper or things that might be said by my friend, the Assistant District Attorney, to bring in a verdict of "Not Guilty" against these men if you were not satisfied they were guilty?

A. No, sir.

Q. Outside of anything you have been asked by either Mr. Trukus or myself, is there any reason you can think of that would prevent you from sitting as a fair and impartial juror in the trial of this case?

A. No, sir.

Q. The District Attorney has made it plain that part of his case, at least, will be made up of testimony of accomplices. That is, men who say they participated in the crime, and they will testify against these defendants. They may be men of bad reputation, crooks, criminals, murderers, and the Court will charge you that it is your duty in scrutinizing or weighing the testimony of that type of witness, an accomplice in the crime, who has testified, the motive he has for testifying against somebody else whom he says is in [fol. 2732] the crime, too; the Court will advise you that that type of testimony must be scrutinized with great care and great caution and suspicion as to whether or not such a man is telling the truth. Will you be extremely careful to apply that test, that acid test, to accomplice testimony when it is produced in this trial?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you will judge for yourself whether or not a man who has committed murders and has committed robberies and admits it, and has perjured himself under oath on previous occasions, whether he is the type of a man you want to believe on anything. Will you regard his testimony in that way?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. You will discuss this matter with your fellow jurors frankly and fairly?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. But if your mind is not changed and your conscience is not satisfied, and you are not satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt of their guilt, you will not be afraid to stand on your opinion, no matter what the other gentlemen in the jury room may do?

A. Yes, sir.

By Mr. Barshay:

Q. While you were sitting here did anything occur in the court-room to cause favor or prejudice to either side?

A. No, sir.

Q. Nothing at all?

A. No, sir.

Q. I take it you realize as well as anyone else the extreme importance of getting an impartial jury?

A. Yes, sir.

[fol. 2733] Q. So that now there is no prejudice in your mind, or anything at all which would preclude you from giving Mr. Buchalter a fair trial?

A. Nothing.

Q. And, above all, the fact that he is now incarcerated for a period, a long term of years, that fact alone would not cause you to relax in your duty to be fair to him?

A. No, sir.

Q. We do not want any sympathy, we simply want to know whether a juror would feel prejudiced against a person because he is in that position.

A. I understand.

Q. Some people would, and they have a right to if they want to. You said you had no prior experience?

A. No.

Q. You did have some experience as a civil juror?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Whatever the instructions on the law are, you will be guided here only by what the judge tells you?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. You can understand it is possible for a Grand Jury to indict an innocent man?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And that the indictment here is an accusation?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And the defendant, by his plea of "Not Guilty," leaves the job for you to decide?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. When he says, "Not Guilty," he means he denies every accusation that the People accuse him of, every single one of them; do you understand?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And no matter who may claim he is an accomplice, [fol. 2734] Mr. Buchalter's plea of not guilty puts that at issue, and then it is for you to decide whether or not that person is telling the truth. Now, in every case, willingly or not, there may creep in atmosphere.

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Sometimes atmosphere results by the procedure in court, by the bringing of these men into court having them handcuffed. That has nothing to do with their guilt or innocence?

A. No, sir.

Q. Sometimes reference to the defendant by a name like Lepke, would that influence you?

A. No, sir.

Q. A man who is charged with crime is presumed to be innocent; that is all you are concerned with. If a man comes here and says, "I am an accomplice of Mr. Buchalter," will you search to find out whether they are hoping to get something for saying it?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Is he one of a group who will come here and try his utmost to put in any kind of testimony, will you look into that?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. The mere raising of his hand and saying, "My conscience is now being cleared; I am telling the truth now," you will not swallow that alone?

A. No, sir.

Q. The rules that apply to accomplice testimony as given by his Honor, you must look upon with care and caution—you will take that seriously?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And if someone else comes and says he is an accomplice and corroborates him, that would not be enough unless [fol. 2735] there is other evidence independent of those people's testimony which tends to connect the defendants with the commission of the crime?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. You will take into consideration, if he declares himself to be an accomplice of Buchalter, that in fact he never saw that accomplice, if that should be the fact?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And if someone comes here and claims he is not an accomplice, and the evidence shows he is, it will be for you to decide whether he is telling the truth?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. It may be that a bad man can tell the truth sometimes, and he may be telling the truth about himself and lying about Buchalter—that is possible?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. That is why the law has said it should be weighed with caution and suspicion; you have heard that, and you agree with that?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. If the other evidence which tends to connect the defendants comes from a polluted source, a criminal source, which may have a motive, you will weigh their testimony with a great deal of care before you accept it?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And do you agree with the proposition of law that the burden of proof is always with the defendant—that he has no burden at all—you understand that? It is for the District Attorney to establish; it never shifts. Do you agree with that?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And that no accusation made against Buchalter need [fol. 2736] be explained by him under our law, and that is the law, and you say you are in sympathy with it?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. He may take the stand—it will be up to his lawyer—but if he does not you may not hold that against him. If others do take the stand and he will choose to remain silent, that would not influence you with respect to him?

A. No, sir.

Q. He is getting a separate trial here, you understand?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Whatever is binding upon him you will consider being binding upon him, and if it is not, you will not consider it?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Mr. Turkus, by full evidence, competent evidence, will have to prove he is part and parcel of any scheme—that will be his job—mere association alone is not sufficient, you understand, and if the proof is subject to two interpretations, one of guilt and one of innocence, the Court will give you instructions on the law with respect to that, and will you follow the same?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. The law says that every defendant is entitled to a fair trial at your hands. Will you give it to Mr. Buchalter?

A. Yes, sir.

By Mr Rosenthal:

Q. Have you ever sat in a jury?

A. No, sir.

Q. You say you were called?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. When is the last time?

A. The last one, Judge Leibowitz.

[fol. 2737] Q. Were you excused after you got in the jury box?

A. I was asked and I answered.

Q. Have you had any discussion at all about this case?

A. No, sir.

Q. Have you formed any impression of any character in the court-room?

A. No, sir.

Q. Your mind is clear now as to the fact that you can sit here as a fair and impartial juryman and take the evidence from the witnesses?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And the law from the Court as he gives it?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Were you seated in a part of the court-room where you could hear the questions I addressed to the other jurors?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you follow the questions in your own mind as to whether your answers would be similar ones?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And would they?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. There is no necessity for repeating them then. Your answers, if all of those questions were addressed to you, would be similar to the answers given by the others?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, is there any reason at all that has not been urged by my questioning on the part of anyone, by the Court, Mr. Turkus, or any member of the defense, which would in any wise incapacitate you from sitting as a fair and impartial juror?

A. The only thing is it might be inconvenient at home.

Q. That is something you will have to talk to the Judge [fol. 2738] about. Let me ask you this: When you say "inconvenient," what does your family consist of?

A. My wife.

Q. Is your condition at home of such a nature that if you were sworn as a juryman here your mind would be at home with your wife, and thereby detract your mind from the consideration of the testimony?

A. No, sir.

Mr. Rosenthal: The juror stated his wife was alone at home, but I asked him the legal question, which, of course, he answered properly, so anything your Honor may want to do is up to your Honor.

By the Court:

Q. You mean you cannot serve because you will have to be home?

A. I would not use that expression. My wife is living home. I am janitor of the house. We have no oil burner. It would mean somebody would have to take care of that.

Q. You could have saved a lot of time if you had stated that at first.

A. In the first place, it was never asked of me. It was asked about the defendants and the case. I could not say that would have some bearing.

Q. Is there anybody else home?

A. No, sir.

Q. When you say "janitor," do you mean you take care of an apartment?

A. I live in a two family house; there is a tenant on the second floor.

Q. You own the house?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Is there anybody else living there?

[fol. 2739] A. There are people upstairs, tenants, and my wife.

Q. The oil burner requires no attention.
A. I said I haven't any oil burner.
Q. You have nobody to go down to attend to the coal?
A. No, sir.
Q. Who attends to it during the day?
A. It is of the type that in the morning it is sufficiently set until I am home in the evening.
Q. Your wife never attends to it?
A. No, sir. We have only been in the house a little over two months.
Q. Well, most of those two-family houses are in localities where there are people who attend to furnaces.
A. I believe there is such a thing in the neighborhood, but I would have to make some arrangements, if I were to serve, to have him take care of it.
Q. We want to know if you can do it; we want to know now.
A. Yes, sir, I can do that.
Q. There is a man who can come in and do it?
A. Yes, sir.

By Mr Turkus:

Q. Are you going to be worried about home conditions?
A. No.

Mr. Turkus: Satisfactory to the People of the State.
Mr. Rosenthal: We rest on the record.

(The twelve jurymen were then sworn by the Clerk.)

The Court: It appearing to the satisfaction of the Court that a statutory ground exists, the Court directs that two [fol. 2740] alternate jurors be impaneled and sworn.

Now, the Court will permit Counsel for the defense to try to agree on whether they desire that the challenges as to each of the alternates be applied as against each separately or be used as a whole against both. The Court will be agreeable to whichever decision counsel for defense shall make. The statute is capable of either interpretation.

Mr. Barshay: If your interpretation is that we may take it as a whole, we would like to do so.

The Court: That is a total of six challenges on these two, collectively.

(Frank C. Moffat, No. 3106, and Thomas C. Smith, No. 3109, were then called as alternate jurors.)

The Court: Now, these two gentlemen are at present regarded as No. 1 and No. 2 in the order in which they were called, but should No. 1 be excused and No. 2 remain, No. 2 will become No. 1. Is that understood? Is it agreeable?

Mr. Rosenthal: Yes, sir, that is very agreeable to the defendants.

The Court: Because, should the alternates have to be used, they will have to be used in the order in which they are so designated—No. 1 first, No. 2 second.

[fol. 2741] (Mr. Moffat and Mr. Smith were then examined collectively as to their qualifications.)

By Mr. Turkus:

Q. Mr. Moffat, you are in the insurance business?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And Mr. Smith, you reside on East 23rd Street?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Are you a salesman?

A. I am a manager, vice-president.

Q. Your jobs may be, more or less, to go right along with the entire case and then, I hope there will be no casualty, you may go home after hearing the case.

Mr. Moffat, how long have you lived at your present address?

A. Eighteen years.

Q. You have been in the insurance business a number of years.

A. Thirty-odd.

Q. In business for yourself?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Mr. Smith, have you lived in Flatbush for a number of years?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Have you been in business for a number of years?

A. Twenty-one years.

Q. Nothing about your knowledge of the crime that the District Attorney should know about?

A. No, sir.

Q. Do you know any of the officials of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers of America?

A. No, sir.

Q. Have you had any contacts in the Brownsville and East New York areas of Brooklyn or on the Brooklyn waterfront?

A. No, sir, I know people in Brownsville.

[fol. 2742] Q. Do you visit those people socially?

A. A couple of times.

Q. I take it you have listened to the questions put to the other gentlemen who have been examined?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you feel any differently about any responses they made? Would you answer them any different?

A. No, sir.

Q. Or would you, Mr. Smith?

A. No, sir.

Q. Can I go along with the understanding that you have no bias or prejudice either against the prosecution or the prosecutor for using the testimony of an accomplice?

A. Yes.

Q. You have heard me define accomplice testimony?

A. Yes.

Q. And if there is other evidence in the case which tends to connect the defendants with this murder, and the part which each played in this particular homicide, if that is established to your satisfaction beyond a reasonable doubt, will you vote for conviction?

A. Yes.

Q. Will you give the defendants every presumption, every legal right?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And after you hear all the evidence, if you feel then there is a reasonable doubt as to their guilt, will you vote for their acquittal?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. If you feel they have been established guilty beyond a reasonable doubt, is that the kind of a verdict you will render, without fear or hesitation?

A. Yes, sir.

By the Court:

[fol. 2743] Q. Mr. Moffat, you live on the block with that colored church?

A. No, sir, that is between Gates and Putnam.

Q. Is that No. 379 or 279?

A. 379.

Q. You are a block from the Church of the Nazarene?

A. Where the Church of the Nazarene was on Lefferts Place is two short blocks.

Q. Putnam Avenue begins at Grand and Fulton?

A. Fulton and Cambridge.

Q. You are between there and Gates?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. That is a rather long block?

A. Yes, sir.

By Mr. Talley:

Q. I did not hear your business, Mr. Smith.

A. Securities, Gardner, Kelly & Company.

Q. Mr. Moffatt, have you read anything about this case?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Have you also, Mr. Smith?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Mr. Moffatt, as a result of anything you read, have you formed any impression or opinion as to these defendants or as to this case?

A. I would say I got sort of a general impression, it is not anything very definite.

Q. Is the impression you have formed an impression unfavorable to these defendants?

A. As regards this particular case I don't think so. Newspaper stories do not enter into that.

Q. They are not always true?

A. No, sir.

Q. Any impression or opinion that has been created in [fol. 2744] your mind or formed in your mind, which you think would take evidence to remove as the case progresses?

A. No.

Q. These defendants would not start off with a handicap; they would not be carrying weight at the start because of any impression you may have gained from a newspaper?

A. No, sir.

Q. You are sure?

A. Quite sure.

Q. Mr. Smith, what reading—or what papers did you read about this case?

A. The Tribune, the Times, the Sun, the Evening Telegram.

Q. Did you read several articles in which their names were mentioned or in which this case was referred to?

A. Yes.

Q. Did you form any opinion or impression with regard to them or the case, or anything connected with it, as a result of reading these articles?

A. I formed an impression.

Q. Was it an impression unfavorable to these defendants?

A. It was.

Q. Do you think it would take evidence to remove that impression?

A. I do.

Q. So, very frankly, so far as you are concerned, they would start off with a bit of a handicap?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. The only thing that would remove that impression from your mind is evidence in the case?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you would expect that evidence to come from the defendants, wouldn't you?

A. Yes.

Q. Mr. Smith, you have a like impression?

[fol. 2745] A. My impression goes to the character of the defendants.

Q. You mean by character, what you gathered from reading the newspaper?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. On the assumption that what you read in the newspaper was true?

A. I don't know whether the newspapers are true or not, but that was my impression.

Mr. Talley: Challenge for cause.

THOMAS C. SMITH, residing at 714 East 23rd Street, sworn on the challenge.

By Mr. Talley:

Q. You were asked some questions before you were sworn. Now, having been sworn, were the same questions to be asked of you would your answers be the same?

A. They would.

By Mr. Rosenthal:

Q. You have sat in the court-room for a number of days?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. You have heard the instructions to the other jurymen on the law?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. You heard the Court state that at no time does the defendant have to establish anything?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. And, notwithstanding that fact, you have candidly stated the impression you have at this time is of such a nature you could not lay it aside and give these defendants a fair and a square deal?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. That is with full knowledge of the admonition which [fol. 2746] the Court has given to other persons who have preceded you in the box?
A. Yes, sir.

By Mr. Turkus:

Q. Is there anything in the reading matter which you read, as to who was killed in this case?
A. No.
Q. Or where he was killed?
A. No.
Q. Or how he was killed?
A. No.

The Court: Challenge sustained.

By Mr. Talley:

Q. Mr. Moffat, you have heard the questions put to the other gentlemen for the last few days?
A. Only for today.
Q. Have you served before on any criminal case?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. In this court?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. When did you last serve?
A. It was—I don't know the date—about a year ago, I think, was the last jury I was called on.

By the Court:

Q. Where is your insurance place of business?
A. 151 William Street, New York.
Q. Is it general insurance?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. Fire?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. What is the name of the concern?
A. Moffat & Blank.
Q. How long have you been in business?
A. Thirty-three years.
Q. Do you do much business with the garment trade?
[fol. 2747] A. No, sir. Some, not much.
Q. Are you married or unmarried?
A. Married.
Q. Do you live in a flat or a house?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. Will your wife be alone while you are serving?
A. Unless some friends stay with her.
Q. That could be arranged?
A. Yes, sir.

By Mr. Talley:

Q. That service you had with the Amen investigation, that was in the Supreme Court?
A. No, sir. We were there for a couple of days and I think they all pleaded guilty.
Q. You didn't really serve on the jury?
A. No, sir, not in that case; I was called. The jury was called, and the case was dismissed.
Q. Have you ever been called to sit as a juror in a trial in this building, in the County Court?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. How long ago was that?
A. Possibly a year and a half.
Q. Before what judge, if you remember?
A. I don't recall.
Q. Was it a murder case?
A. It was.
Q. Did you hear the instructions from the Court with regard to that case?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. You say that was approximately two years ago?

A. Approximately a year and a half or two years ago.

Q. Was Mr. Turkus, my handsome friend, the District Attorney, in that case?

A. No.

Q. Were any counsel you now see around this court-room [fol. 2748] in that case?

A. Barshay was.

Q. Did you form any impression about Mr. Barshay that was so unfavorable that you could not give the defendants a fair trial in this case?

A. No, sir.

Q. Did you ever serve in a Grand Jury?

A. No, sir.

Q. From your previous service you must know that the Court will charge you, before you can arrive at a verdict of conviction, that you must be satisfied of the guilt of the defendants beyond a reasonable doubt, and that the presumption of innocence always exists in favor of any defendant when he comes in a criminal court?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Will you accord to that defendant and to each of them that presumption of innocence?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Will you require The People to undertake that burden?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Will you require them to satisfy you beyond a reasonable doubt before you vote Guilty against these defendants?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. The burden being always on The People to prove the guilt of the crime which is alleged in the indictment, which you know is nothing more than an accusation in writing and does not import guilt in any respect whatsoever?

A. No, sir.

Q. If, in an endeavor to sustain the indictment, the People produce accomplices here—you know what an accomplice is?

A. Yes, sir.

[fol. 2749] Q. Who will testify with respect to these defendants, will you scrutinize the testimony of a man who admits he is an accomplice?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Not only that, but should he admit he is guilty himself of countless murders, many murders, and has on previous occasions sworn to tell the truth and lied, will you scrutinize that kind of testimony with great care and great caution and great suspicion before you give it credence?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Then the law requires, and it is a protection for the innocent more than it is for the guilty—the law requires, where accomplice testimony is produced, the jury may not convict upon the testimony of an accomplice unless there is some other independent evidence produced apart from the accomplice that tends to connect the defendants with the commission of the crime. Will you require, if selected as a juror, that independent testimony, before you give any attention to the testimony of the accomplice?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And, the burden being always on The People to prove the guilt of a defendant, it is not required that a defendant take the stand in his own behalf or offer any defense; you understand that?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And that it is the law, and you will be so charged by the Court, that if a defendant does not take the stand and testify, that no jury may indulge in any unfavorable inference as to him because he has not taken the stand. Will [fol. 2750] that be your position, if selected?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Is there anything you know of which we have not interrogated you about, is there anything in your mind that you think might in any way interfere with your being a fair and impartial juror in this case?

A. No, sir.

Mr. Turkus: Satisfactory to The People.

(Mr. Moffat was challenged by the defense peremptorily.)

(JOHN J. MCNULTY, No. 3065, was then called and seated as Alternate Talesman No. 1.)

Mr. Talley: I wish to advise the Court that this gentleman is an old friend of mine and my brother. He was a college classmate of my brother, and I wish to advise the Court and the District Attorney of that in advance.

The Court: He still may be fair.

(George A. Fairbrother, No. 3032, was then called as Alternate Talesman No. 2.)

By Mr. Turkus:

Q. Mr. McNulty, do you know Judge Talley for a long time?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Were you interested in his campaign when he wanted to be the Democratic nominee for Mayor?

Mr. Talley: I object; that is absurd. The time of the Court should not be taken up with such questions.

Mr. Turkus: You know it has nothing to do with the case, [fol. 2751] but you put it in in reference to Judge O'Dwyer.

Mr. Talley: It has nothing whatever to do with the case, and I did not put it in.

The Witness: I am always interested in anything Judge Talley is interested in.

Q. If you are called, will you be embarrassed or prejudiced?

A. I would not be embarrassed.

By the Court:

Q. You are in what line of business?

A. Transfer agent in the Guaranty Trust Company.

Q. You have been with the Guaranty Trust Company how long?

A. Thirty-eight years.

Q. Is that a responsible position?

A. It is.

Q. It means that a man who has it is a man of brains, judgment, and a man who also has strength of mind; am I right?

A. Yes.

Q. You can disregard friendship in deciding questions of fact?

A. I can.

Q. It is the same as a banking officer, disregarding friendship in deciding whether to make or not to make loans?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. In other words, have a glass eye?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. You live between Avenue J and K?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. How long have you lived there?

A. Twenty-four years.

Q. Do you belong to any organization that has discussed [fol. 2752] Judge O'Dwyer's activity in the District Attorney's office?

A. No, sir, I do not.

Q. Have you formed any prejudice in the case?

A. No, sir.

Q. Any opinion?

A. I have read about it. I have my opinions, but they have not been fixed.

Q. Have you formed any opinion as to the guilt or innocence of the defendants or any of them on this charge?

A. I could not say on this charge, because I don't know what the charge is.

Q. Is there anything on your mind that, as a man of intelligence and independent thought, you cannot put aside in deciding this issue strictly upon the evidence, as an impartial juror?

A. I could.

By Mr. Turkus:

Q. What is your relationship toward Judge Talley?

A. I went to school with Eddie.

Mr. Talley: That is my brother.

Q. Would the fact that Judge Talley and I had a tilt just now, and we may have more before the case is over, would that be inclined to prejudice you against The People?

A. No, sir.

Q. Is your friendship with his brother such that you would have the slightest embarrassment in rendering the verdict which you think proper on the evidence, even though it affects Judge Talley's client adversely?

A. I don't want to be subject to any criticism. I know him.

Q. I want to know your state of mind.

[fol. 2753] A. My state of mind is that I have read a little about it, and, of course, naturally I have an opinion. I will wait to see what the evidence is and see if that will take the opinion away.

Q. Is that opinion detrimental to the defendants?

A. It is.

Q. You say something will have to take it away? The defendants do not have to do anything.

A. I know that.

Q. Was that opinion formulated by you from reading the press?

A. That is correct.

Q. Have you had any discussion with any member of the bar in regard to the investigations of Judge O'Dwyer?

A. No, sir.

Q. You say you have an opinion which is adverse to the defendants?

A. Adverse, so far as you have to show proof to take it out of my mind.

Q. I am certainly not going to offer any proof that is going to reform jurors.

A. Then it is the opposite of what I said.

Q. You would expect proof from the defendants?

A. Yes, sir, proof from you.

Q. I am the prosecutor. You say your opinion is adverse to the defendants.

A. Of course, I have my opinion about them, but I feel if they are on trial it is up to you to prove them guilty.

Q. Would you expect any evidence from the other side to remove the impression you gathered?

A. Absolutely not.

Q. Were you here when we had a previous discussion [fol. 2754] about the various types of witnesses?

A. I was not listening very carefully.

Q. Mr. Fairbrother, you reside in Coney Island?

A. That is the old Gravesend Section.

Q. Have you lived there for a number of years?

A. Sixteen.

Q. You are listed as assistant dispatcher. Is that with the railroad company?

A. The Brooklyn Edison Company.

Q. Have you been there for a number of years?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Have you heard the questions we have asked the other jurors?

A. Yes.

Q. Would you make any different responses than the jurors who have been accepted?

A. No, sir.

Q. Do you find any fault with the District Attorney of the county, Judge O'Dwyer, in the prosecution of an indictment wherein the testimony of an accomplice is used?

A. No, sir.

Q. Have you served as a juror in connection with criminal cases before?

A. No, sir.

Q. You will receive the law from Judge Taylor, which you will apply with your common sense and understanding to this case?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. You understand we are trying a case of murder. Is there anything I should know about you that I have not asked?

A. No, sir.

By the Court:

Q. What are you a dispatcher for?

A. Workmen and material, Brooklyn Edison Company. [fol. 2755] Q. I don't see how they can get along if they have so many jurors here—How long have you been with them?

A. Fifteen years.

By Mr. Turkus:

Q. Mr. McNulty, is there anything the People of the State of New York should know about your ability to sit as an impartial juror?

A. No, sir. I don't know whether the fact I take care of subpoenas in my office—I have about five on my desk now.

Q. For the criminal court?

A. Yes, sir. I look after forgeries and raised certificates and all this stuff that takes place all over the country.

Q. That brings you in cooperation with the District Attorney?

A. I am called before the Grand Jury and other boards.

Q. Do you mean Mr. Dewey's office?

A. Mr. Dewey's—very few here.

Q. Your work brings you in close contact and association with various courts throughout the country—there is nothing about your friendship with Judge Talley's brother that is going to be at all embarrassing to you?

A. That is right.

Q. Now, both of you gentlemen, if, after hearing the evidence in the case, if you really have a reasonable doubt as to their guilt, turn them out. After I get through with the evidence which Judge O'Dwyer presents, after you hear it all, you talk it over among yourselves, and if you are satisfied yourselves that there are three guilty men, each of them, [fol. 2756] who played a part in this combination or group as charged in the indictment, would you say so by your verdict and without any hesitation?

A. Yes, sir.

Mr. Barshay: We peremptorily challenge Mr. McNulty.

By Mr. Talley:

Q. Mr. Fairbrother, have you sat on a jury in a criminal case before?

A. Conspiracy case.

Q. That was a criminal case, prosecuted by the District Attorney?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. In this court?

A. In the Supreme Court.

Q. In this county?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. How long ago was that?

A. A few years ago.

Q. Have you read anything about this case?

A. No, sir.

Q. In none of the papers?

A. No, sir.

Q. Have you discussed the case about the defendants?

A. No, sir.

Q. With anyone?

A. No, sir.

Q. Have you formed any opinion or impression about the case?

A. No, sir.

Q. Or about these defendants, of any sort whatsoever?

A. No, sir.

Q. So that the case and these defendants are both entirely foreign to you?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. The Court will charge you that The People are required to prove the guilt of any defendant brought into a [fol. 2757] criminal court beyond a reasonable doubt. That means that the defendant is never called upon at any time to make any answer or explanation, because the burden is always on The People to prove guilt.

A. Yes, sir.

Q. If selected, will you require The People to sustain that burden they undertake from the time they file the indictment?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. If you have a reasonable doubt in your mind, after hearing all the case and considering all of the evidence, will you give the benefit of that doubt to the defendants?

A. I will.

Q. If the defendants do not take the stand, or some of them do not take the stand, and the Court instructs you you are not to indulge in any unfavorable inference against them because of their failure to take the stand, will you act accordingly and not hold any inference against them because they do not, under advice of counsel or otherwise, take the stand?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Have you been sitting here for the last two or three days?

A. This is the fourth day.

Q. You have heard the questions asked about accomplice testimony?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you understand generally that proposition?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. If an accomplice, the men who say they are accomplices in this crime, testify against these defendants, will you scrutinize their testimony with care and caution and [fol. 2758] suspicion and try to ascertain whether they are not telling the truth because of any consideration they are expecting from testifying?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. The law requires, in addition to the testimony of such accomplice, corroboration—that there be some evidence independent of the testimony of the accomplice, coming from a good independent source, which will tend to connect the defendants with the commission of the crime, before the jury can possibly find them guilty. Will you strictly abide by that direction as the Court will give it to you?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Are you sure about that?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you know of any reason of any kind why you could not sit as a fair and impartial juror in the trial of this case?

A. No, sir.

By Mr. Barshay:

Q. In the case you sat on, on that jury, was the name Max Silverman prominently mentioned?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. You heard that name often during that case?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Mr. Turkus has made inquiry of the other jurors with respect to the same name many times, so I have a right to assume that he played a part in this case; I don't know. Would the fact that Mr. Turkus was counsel once for Mr. Silverman—does that fact in anywise cause you to be influenced in your judgment in this case?

A. No, sir.

Q. Now, if Mr. Turkus should produce him in this case—[fol. 2759] I don't know whether he will or not, would it embarrass you, or would you be free from prejudice?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Is there any other case where you have sat on a jury?

A. No.

Q. Since 1936 have you been a Grand Juror?

A. No.

Q. Have you formed any impression at all with respect to this case?

A. No.

Q. Did you read about it at all?

A. No, sir, I did not read anything.

Q. Not even about the defendants?

A. No, sir.

Mr. Turkus: Mr. Fairbrother is satisfactory to The People.

(Challenged peremptorily by the defense.)

(William Earle, No. 3091, was then called as Alternate Talesman No. 1, and William R. Shaw, No. 3084, was called as Alternate Talesman No. 2.)

Talesman Shaw: If this trial is going to be a long one, I don't think I have the right mental attitude. I have sickness at home.

The Court: What is the trouble?

Talesman Shaw: Well, my wife and my mother, they are all alone.

The Court: You say there is illness at home?

Talesman Shaw: Yes, sir, my mother is very sick and has been sick for two or three years; I don't know whether she will survive.

[fol. 2760] The Court: Your presence is required?

Talesman Shaw: At night it would help a lot.

The Court: What is it, paralysis?

Talesman Shaw: No, sir, just old age, I guess, she is only eighty-two.

The Court: There is no one else at home except your wife?

Talesman Shaw: No one else.

The Court: We have ten in addition to this gentleman. Will it be agreeable to the defense if this gentleman were returned to the box at another time, holding him in reserve for a possible emergency, to avoid the drawing of another panel?

Mr. Barshay: It is agreeable to me to have him out of the box or to be placed in the box, if necessary.

Mr. Talley: That is agreeable all around.

(Talesman Shaw was then temporarily excused.)

(Mr. J. J. Conaty, No. 3058, was then called and seated as Alternate Talesman No. 2.)

By Mr. Turkus:

Q. Mr. Earle, have you lived at your present address for a number of years?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Are you married?

A. No, sir.

Q. A bachelor?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. You are listed as a clerk.
A. Yes, sir.
Q. Have you been with your employer for a number of years?
A. Twenty years.
[fol. 2761] Q. Mr. Conaty, you live in Flatbush?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. Have you lived there a number of years?
A. Nine.

By the Court:

Q. You are the branch manager of what?
A. The Aetna Casualty Insurance Company, 16 Court Street, Brooklyn.

By Mr. Turkus:

Q. Do you know any of the nine lawyers who represent these defendants, or any member of the bar who specializes in criminal cases?
A. Mr. Price.
Q. How well do you know him?
A. Since 1914.
Q. Have you discussed any of these cases with Mr. Price?
A. No, sir.
Q. Do you know him well enough to let him influence you?
A. It would not influence me.

By the Court:

Q. Mr. Earle, what concern are you with?
A. Metropolitan.
Q. Which branch?
A. The main office.
Q. Madison Avenue?
A. Yes, sir, and 23rd Street.
Q. How long have you been with them?
A. Twenty years.
Q. What particular line of work do you do?
A. Accounting and auditing.
Q. You are living near Kings Highway?
A. Yes, sir.

By Mr. Turkus:

Q. I will address these questions collectively to save time. Have you heard mention of the fact that the District At- [fol. 2762] torney inquired from the other talesmen whether they had any relations or contact in the garment trade, men's clothing or women's clothing, or the clothing trucking? Have either one of you had such contact?

A. No, sir.

Q. Are any of those union officials I inquired about, have you had any connection with them directly or indirectly?

A. No.

Q. Or in the Brownsville or East New York section or the waterfront?

A. I may have some brokers in Brownsville, but I don't know.

Q. Does that bother you?

A. It does not bother me.

Talesman Earle: May I interrupt? I have been under the care of a doctor, and I brought a certificate to the Judge.

Mr. Turkus: This is acute, according to the doctor's certificate.

The Court: You are under a doctor's care now, and taking something for it?

Talesman Earle: No, the care would be that I would have to stay in bed for about three days in order to get rid of it.

The Court: We do not want to draw another panel. Is it agreeable to allow him to step out? This gentleman, if he goes home, will have to go to bed.

Defense Counsel: That is agreeable.

The Court: Mr. Earle, go home and go to bed, and we [fol. 2763] will let you know if you are needed.

(William H. Fullman, No. 3031, was then called as Alternate Talesman No. 2.)

The Court: Gentlemen, we will now take a recess and resume at 2:00 P. M. Please do not discuss the case; let nobody talk to you about it; keep your minds open.

The defendants are remanded.

Mr. Talley: May I be excused at two o'clock?

The Court: Counsel will agree among themselves as to who will be present at two o'clock.

Mr. Talley: Will the opening take place this afternoon?

The Court: The opening address on both sides requires preparation and a little rest over the week-end. It is not to be rushed into.

(Recess taken until 2:00 P. M.)

[fol. 2764] AFTERNOON SESSION—TRIAL RESUMED

(All defendants represented by counsel)

(Examination of William H. Fullman and J. J. Conaty was continued.)

By Mr. Turkus:

Q. Mr. Fullman, just before lunch you wanted to tell me something.

A. I wanted to tell you since the first of September I have been unemployed and prior to that for fifteen years I was with the World-Telegram in the advertising department.

Q. Does that fact——

A. I read all the papers about the case, so I would be prejudiced.

Defense Counsel: Challenge for cause.

The Court: I have not heard a word.

Mr. Turkus: This gentleman was with the World-Telegram for fifteen years in its advertising department, has read all the newspaper articles in connection with the case, and has a prejudice against defendants.

By the Court:

Q. Does it go to the formation of an opinion as to the guilt or innocence?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Of any of the defendants in this case?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. On this charge?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. It cannot be laid aside?
A. No, sir.

The Court: Try the challenge.

[fol. 2765] William H. Fullman, residing at 1497 East 34th Street, Brooklyn, New York, being duly sworn, testified as follows:

By Mr. Fischbein:

Q. Mr. Fullman, certain questions were asked by Mr. Turkus and you made certain responses and then Mr. Turkus made a general statement to His Honor for the record. Then Judge Taylor asked you certain questions. If those questions were asked again, would your answers be substantially the same as you have given?
A. Yes, sir.

Mr. Fischbein: Press the challenge.
The Court: Sustained. Proceed with the examination of the other talesmen.

By Mr. Turkus:

Q. Mr. Conaty, did you follow the questions that were put to the talesmen who were accepted?
A. I did.
Q. You saw what I was driving at when I was questioning them, is there anything I should know about your qualifications?
A. I do not know of anything except that you did ask a question as to Mr. Price.
Q. Mr. Price had been the lawyer in one of the cases I tried against him, and I wanted to know whether there was such a close acquaintanceship as would prejudice you in this case.
A. No.
Q. Did you ever talk to Mr. Price about any of the cases?
[fol. 2766] A. No.
Q. Are you in accord with the other talesmen on the accomplice proposition?
A. Yes.

Q. No bias or prejudice against the District Attorney for the use of that testimony?

A. No.

Q. You will use your mental faculties to find out does the accomplice tell the truth about them?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Have you served as a juror in any criminal case?

A. About sixteen or seventeen years ago.

Q. There is nothing mysterious about it. You have an issue to decide here: Are they established guilty under the evidence, or are they innocent of this murder charge? Do you understand?

A. I do understand.

Q. Will you accord to these defendants every law of the land that the Judge says they should have?

A. Yes.

Q. Burden of proof and so forth?

A. All of them.

Q. If, after you hear all of the evidence in the case, if then you entertain a reasonable doubt about any one of them, give them the benefit of it. Will you do that?

A. Yes.

Q. On the other hand, after you hear everything that Judge O'Dwyer presents to this Court and jury in connection with the Rosen murder case, if you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that they are three guilty men, three of the group who played a part in the commission of this murder, will you say so in your verdict?

A. I shall.

[fol. 2767] Q. Is there anything that could stop you from saying that?

A. Nothing.

By Mr. Cuff:

Q. Mr. Conaty, by the same token, if after you hear all of the evidence and receive the instructions on the law from His Honor, after discussing it with your fellow jurors, you are satisfied that there is a reasonable doubt as to the guilt of the defendants or any one of them, will you have the fortitude and courage to reflect that in your verdict, to report that in your verdict of Not Guilty?

A. I shall.

Q. And if you do entertain such a reasonable doubt as I have described, one that is based upon the evidence or lack of evidence, and his Honor should instruct you, as I think he will, that whenever a juror makes up his mind, after carefully considering the evidence and discussing with his fellow jurors, that he is in doubt or has any reasonable doubt as to the guilt of the defendant, that he must, it is his bounden duty to reflect that by voting "Not Guilty," will you do that?

A. I shall.

Q. You appreciate, do you not, that you are not responsible to any individual for your verdict in this case; is that right?

A. That is right.

Q. And that you owe the same duty, the same obligation, to each side in this case, that is to decide this case fairly on the evidence as you view it. That is true, is that right?

A. That's right.

[fol. 2768] Q. Might I ask, your office is here on Montague Street, is it not?

A. Court and Montague.

Q. Is that the Aetna Casualty & Surety Company?

A. It is.

Q. Have you ever discussed this case or any of its aspects with any of the people in the office of any District Attorneys?

A. I have not.

Q. And I do not know whether anybody asked you, but I should like to know whether you have read any of the articles that have appeared in any of the papers about the case or about the defendants or any of them.

A. When you say an article, do you mean a syndicated article?

Q. I mean the news items.

A. I have read a few news items, but not as a continued proposition.

Q. I appreciate that. In other words, you mean you did not follow it out with any acute interest?

A. That is correct.

Q. So as to look for it from day to day, but you did read news items and the articles as they appeared from day to day as part of your daily reading in the newspaper?

A. No, I did not.

Q. How many papers would you say you read about this case or the defendants?

A. After reading the first or second news items in one of the papers that I read, I decided to refrain from it.

Q. Was that before you were called?

A. Oh, yes.

Q. And you did not know then that you were going to be summoned on this panel?

A. That is right.

[fol. 2769] Q. Did you read any of the articles in the Mirror?

A. I did not.

Q. You do not read the Mirror?

A. No, sir.

Q. Now, as the result of that reading was there any impression formed in your mind?

A. Only the impression that I did not want to continue reading them.

Q. Was there any impression about these defendants that was adverse to them?

A. No, it was the subject-matter.

Q. You did not want to read about it at all. And as you sit here now, can you give me the assurance that if you are selected you will be able to, despite anything you have read, accord to the defendants on trial here to the fullest extent the benefit of the presumption of innocence which the law says must be given to every defendant? You will do that?

A. I will do that.

Q. You appreciate that that is just as much a part of our law as any other part of the Penal Law of the State of New York, do you?

A. I do understand.

Q. And you are in favor, of course, of the enforcement of all law?

A. I am.

Q. And do you also believe that you can, with courage and fortitude consider this evidence under the rules that His Honor will give you for considering the evidence and decide it fairly and squarely as between The People on the one hand and the defendants on the other?

A. I can.

[fol. 2770] Q. Mr. Turkus has referred to accomplice testimony. I do not want to waste much time about it. I assume you know what an accomplice is?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Have you ever served on a jury before?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. In a criminal case?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. How long ago?

A. Sixteen years ago.

Q. Since that time you have not been called on a criminal case?

A. I have been called many times, three or four times a year.

Q. You have not served? Have you been on the special panel all that time?

A. Not a special panel. Just prior to '26 or '27—I would not be positive of it, it may have gone back a little further than that. When I said sixteen or seventeen years, it might have gone a little further than that. Judge Dike was sitting.

Q. Your name is familiar to me. Do you recall ever being called on any panel at a time when I was an Assistant District Attorney trying cases in Judge Dodd's office? I know your name is very familiar to me.

A. I have been around a long time.

Q. But you don't recall being on a panel?

A. I could have been, Mr. Cuff, but I don't recall.

Q. In any event, have you been recently called as a member of the special panel?

A. I was called this spring.

Q. And did you come to court?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you reach the jury box, I mean to be examined? [fol. 2771] A. There have been so many of these cases—just give me a chance.

Q. Take your time.

A. The last case I think Judge Leibowitz was sitting and I think that we were sworn in the chair. I think on that particular case I was excused with the consent of both sides and with the Court's consent, by reason of the fact that my brother had previously qualified on the same jury ahead of me, and I did not ask—he was not asked whether or not he would be embarrassed if I sat on the jury.

Q. Was Mr. Turkus the prosecutor in that case?

A. No, he was not.

Q. Do you remember the name of the prosecutor?
A. No, I would not. It was not Heffernan.

Mr. Turkus: It may have been McGough.
The Talesman: He had a cultured voice.

Q. Mr. Conaty, on any of the other panels where you received a summons were you examined in the Jury box? I am leaving out this last one before Judge Leibowitz.
A. Yes, in many of them.
Q. And in any of those other cases were any of the lawyers who are here today either for the People or for the defendants involved that you can recall?
A. Possibly Mr. Barshay, but I think he was the only one.
Q. As the result of all of those calls, I am sure they did not leave anything in your mind that would prevent you from being absolutely fair and being able to carry out in full your obligation that you would assume when you take [fol. 2772] your oath as a juror if you are selected?
A. Certainly not.
Q. Referring to the accomplices, I am not going to waste much time trying to talk about law, but if His Honor tells you that when an accomplice testifies in a case and you come to consider the evidence of that accomplice, that you must regard it and weigh it with the mental attitude of suspicion, that you must accept it with care and caution, will you do that?
A. I shall do it.
Q. And if it shall develop during the course of the trial that the accomplice is a man of depraved character, who has committed numerous crimes, will you consider that in weighing his credibility, or his ability in your mind to tell the truth in any case or in this case? Will you do that?
A. I shall.
Q. You understand, do you not, Mr. Conaty, that no defendant can be convicted of any crime upon the testimony of an accomplice alone?
A. I understand that.
Q. You know that the rule of law is that before there can be a conviction on the testimony of an accomplice there must be independent evidence, and I mean by that evidence coming from someone who is not an accomplice, which you believe and which tends to connect the defendants with the commission of the crime and if his Honor shall charge that, will you see that that rule of law is adopted and applied to the evidence so far as you are concerned when you are discussing it in the jury room?

A. I shall.

[fol. 2773] Q. As to any witness who may be called, if it should develop that the witness or witnesses who are relied upon for this independent evidence sought to be used as corroborating the accomplice, if it should develop that those witnesses or that witness has committed murder many times, perjury, extortion, and almost every other crime mentioned in the law, and His Honor tells you that it is your duty to take into account the character of that witness as thus shown and to weigh his evidence with great care, caution, and suspicion, will you do it?

A. I will.

Q. You appreciate, do you not, Mr. Conaty, that where there is testimony by men of that type, men whose characters are utterly depraved, that you may find a reasonable doubt based upon the type and character of witnesses of that kind? Is that the fact? Maybe my question is a little complicated.

Mr. Turkus: I object to that.

Mr. Cuff: I withdraw it.

Q. If the witnesses, including the accomplice and corroborating witness, are men of depraved character, that you find unworthy of belief, and that raises a reasonable doubt in your mind as to the guilt of the defendants or any one of them, will you reflect that?

A. You are asking two questions, I think Mr. Cuff.

Q. No, just one. There are two classes of witness-.

Mr. Turkus: I am going to object to it. That is a legal question.

[fol. 2774] By the Court:

Q. Suppose you put it this way: Mr. Conaty, you are a practical man and a man of wide experience. You deal with people every day, and you are accustomed to judging whether people tell the truth or not. Will you take into consideration anything and everything that has to bear with the credibility of a witness?

A. I shall, your Honor.

Q. Including his criminal career, the fact that he is a criminal; is that one of the elements you will take into consideration?

A. Yes, that is one of the elements.

Q. And if he has been convicted, the fact of previous conviction?

A. That will be another one.

Q. Anything and everything?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. That makes common sense in determining if the man tells the truth?

A. That is right.

By Mr. Cuff:

Q. Now may I ask this question as supplementing what his Honor asked: Let us assume that it develops on the trial that a witness or witnesses admit the commission of many murders for which they have not been convicted. Will you take that into consideration too?

A. Yes, because I think that is one of the elements to test a man's character and believability.

Q. That is right; that is a perfect answer. And my question before was a little long, but it meant just this: That I am going to ask you simply now: If that type of witness [fol. 2775] and testimony raises a reasonable doubt in your mind, will you reflect it in your vote? If the character of the witness?

A. No, Mr. Cuff, I am not getting you right. Perhaps their credibility might be tested or perhaps weighed with care and caution, as you said.

Q. That is right.

A. Just because of that, should not raise in my mind a reasonable doubt, because the witnesses are a type that I would have to go to the extreme to weigh.

Q. I don't mean that. I mean if, after considering that they testified to and then considering their character, their depraved character, there arises in your mind a reasonable doubt as to the truth of their testimony, will you reflect that in your verdict?

A. Yes.

Q. I may not have made myself very clear, but that is just what I meant. You appreciate, do you not, that your responsibility when you take an oath as a juror in a criminal case is to weigh the evidence carefully, discuss it reasonably with your fellow jurors, and then to reflect in your vote your conscientious view of the evidence as to guilt or innocence; is that right?

A. Yes.

Q. And if you arrive at the conclusion, after giving all that consideration that I referred to and discussing with your fellow jurors that there is a reasonable doubt as to the guilt of the defendants or any of them, can I rely upon your assurance that you have the courage and the fortitude [fol. 2776] to abide by that determination until such time as you are convinced by reasonable argument based upon the evidence in the case, or the lack of it, that you are wrong?

A. Yes, you have that assurance.

Mr. Cuff: Thank you.

By Mr. Fischbein:

Q. Mr. Conaty, when was the last time that you were questioned other than the time you were questioned before his Honor Sam Leibowitz?

A. Three months or four months.

Q. Was it during the time that Judge O'Dwyer or after the time Judge O'Dwyer became the District Attorney of this county?

A. I think it must have been.

Q. It was after he became District Attorney?

A. After he became District Attorney.

Q. Did you ever hear mentioned the names of Maione or Abbandando during the time that you were in the courtroom while other jurors were being questioned?

A. No, sir.

Q. And you say that you read certain newspaper articles, but you did not follow the syndicated articles, is that correct?

A. That is correct.

Q. What newspapers have you been reading those articles in?

A. I read the Times in the morning, Sun and Eagle at night.

Q. And you read the Daily Eagle or the Brooklyn Daily Eagle regularly?

A. I do.

Q. And have you followed with interest any of the work [fol. 2777] of Judge O'Dwyer?

A. Only in a general way.

Q. And you, of course, realize and appreciate the fact that these three defendants are entitled to a fair and impartial jury of their peers?

A. I do understand.

Q. And you also appreciate the fact that even if a person has the slightest doubt in their mind as to their ability to be a fair and impartial juror, they should tell us that?

A. That is right.

Q. And there is no law that could compel any man to serve if he has any sort of a doubt as to his ability to render a fair and impartial verdict on the evidence in this case, uninfluenced by any bias or prejudice or any sympathy?

A. I understand.

Q. That is right, too. And by reading of these articles you say that in a general way you got a general impression or formed some general idea as to the defendants or any of the elements of this case?

A. I think I was more specific than that. I said it did not take me long to find out that it was a subject-matter I did not care to continue reading.

Q. Was that because you expected to become a juror in this case?

A. That did contribute to it.

Q. That was one of the reasons?

A. Yes.

Q. Will you tell me when you stopped reading these articles?

A. Shortly after they appeared.

Q. In this case?

A. In this case.

[fol. 2778] Q. And you appeared, I believe, on Monday?

A. Tuesday.

Q. And you say that shortly after you appeared?

A. No, I did not; I said after they appeared, the articles.

Q. In other words, after the articles started to appear in the newspapers, you read a few articles, then you stopped reading them?

A. That is right.

By the Court:

Q. Was that because you knew you were on the special panel and you knew you might be called?

A. No, not alone, your Honor. That did contribute to it, but it was because I don't care to read subjects of this kind. It is very discouraging home.

Q. Do you belong to any man's club?

A. I do not, sir, not as such, I mean not as a men's club of any church. I belong to a men's club.

Q. That is Holy Cross, isn't it?

A. No, St. Francis of Assisi.

Q. I think you are at Holy Cross parish.

A. No, I am on this side of it. I am north of it. I am nearer Maple Street than Midwood.

Q. You are near Rogers Avenue?

A. It is nearer Bedford; it is between Bedford and Rogers, but it is one door east of Bedford.

Q. Then you must be on the north.

A. Northeast.

Q. On the northeast side of the street.

A. On the north side of Midwood Street.

[fol. 2779] Q. But nothing has been discussed in connection with Judge O'Dwyer's work at any of those meetings at St. Francis of Assisi?

A. I cannot answer that because I have not attended any of them.

Q. You have not heard any of them?

A. I have heard nothing.

Q. Do you know Mr. Kopf?

A. I do not know Mr. Kopf, no.

Mr. Fischbein: That is all.

Mr. Turkus: Satisfactory to the People of the State.

Mr. Climenko: Challenge peremptorily.

(The following talesmen were called and examined: Frank J. Melke, of 386 Bergen Street, and Charles D. Hertz, of 1121 Lafayette Avenue.)

By Mr. Turkus:

Q. Mr. Melke, were you in another case where I was prosecutor?

A. That is right.

Q. You gave me a response that required a challenge for cause?

A. That is right.

Q. And that was sustained by Judge Taylor?

A. Yes, sir.

Mr. Turkus: This juror was in another case that I tried. The response that he gave required a challenge for cause, which was sustained by your Honor.

The Court: I cannot be expected to remember the details of that challenge.

Mr. Turkus: I don't want anything said that is going to [fol. 2780] make any trouble. Excuse me; I think it was Judge Fitzgerald who sustained the challenge.

The Talesman: Last September.

The Court: That has nothing to do with this.

Mr. Turkus: If you do not want to entertain a challenge for cause, I will exercise a peremptory. He cannot serve.

The Court: Do you know the reason? Do you remember it?

Mr. Turkus: Sure.

The Court: Has it anything to do with this case?

Mr. Turkus: Absolutely.

The Court: All right; it is up to you.

Mr. Turkus: I don't care how you count it, whether it is cause or peremptory.

The Court: I will count it against you.

Mr. Turkus: All right, fine.

The Court: Call another gentleman.

(Carl M. Gilt, of 108 East 39th Street, was called and took Seat No. 2 as an alternate juror.)

By Mr. Turkus:

Q. Mr. Hertz, do you live at 1121 Lafayette Avenue?

A. That is so.

Q. What do they call that section?

A. Bushwick.

Q. Are you in the investment business?

A. That is right, investment counsel.

Q. In other words, you counsel people on securities and [fol. 2781] bonds?

A. That is correct.

Q. Are you in business for yourself?
A. That is correct.
Q. Have you been in this business for years?
A. Five years.
Q. Prior to that what was your occupation?
A. Worked for a brokerage house.
Q. What was the name?
A. E. A. Pierce & Company.
Q. Are they still in business?
A. Consolidation.

By the Court:

Q. Where is your office?
A. 1121 Lafayette Avenue, my home.
Q. At your home?
A. That is correct.
Q. You are not downtown?
A. No, sir, my home.
Q. You are near what avenue?
A. Lafayette Avenue between Broadway and Bushwick.
Q. You are near the hospital?
A. Yes. Yes.
Q. The hospital is north of you and the Episcopal Church is south of you?
A. North.
Q. North, too.

By Mr. Turkus:

Q. Mr. Hertz, have you been called for jury service since Judge O'Dwyer was District Attorney?
A. Yes, several times.
Q. And you reached the box, did you not?
A. In the Halpin case I was challenged by Assistant District Attorney Cohen, because he had been a customer in one of the concerns where I was employed, one of the brokerage houses. That was in 1929, and for that reason, why, he excused me.
[fol. 2782] Q. And were you in another panel in another case?
A. Oh, yes.
Mr. Fischbein: Your Honor, will the Court instruct this juror not to mention the name of the case?
The Court: Yes.

Q. Were you impaneled as a juror in another case?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And were you examined by the District Attorney and counsel for the defense?

A. No, I did not get to the box.

By the Court:

Q. Mr. Hertz, have you an office there or is that just your home?

A. It is my residence and office, for the last twenty-eight years.

Q. Have you mortgage investor broker?

A. No, securities and bonds.

Q. I was wondering how you get customers.

A. I am an investment counselor in an advisory capacity.

Q. Have you a sign out?

A. No. I have my own clientele over a number of years.

Q. You mean that people you know come to your home?

A. Private clients; that is correct.

Q. And you attend to investments for them?

A. That is correct.

Q. Have you a business card?

A. I don't think I have one with me. I might have. I have my own personal card, but I have not got a business card with me.

[fol. 2783] Q. I am trying to figure out, because you are not in the financial district. Is your method of business to advise as to speculations on a commission basis?

A. On a fee.

Q. That is, if there is a profit you get a part of it?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And that applies to both listed and unlisted securities?

A. That is correct.

Q. New issues?

A. Sometimes.

Q. Securities listed on both boards?

A. On the Curb and on the Stock Exchange mostly.

Q. Lafayette Avenue between Broadway and Bushwick, that is a street of private homes, isn't it?

A. One or two apartments. Majority of them are private homes.

Q. Do you occupy a private home?

A. I own a private home for the last twenty-eight years, my own home.

Q. I am trying to place the block. Aren't those a number of three-story, frame fronts?

A. That is correct.

Q. With bay windows that come out to a point?

A. There is one or two on the block, one or two, not more.

Q. And the Episcopal Church is to the left on the north?

A. That is right.

Q. On Bushwick Avenue?

A. That is right.

Q. And the late Mayor Hylan lived very close?

A. Two blocks away.

Q. On Bushwick Avenue?

A. That is correct.

[fol. 2784] Q. On the west side of the street. And if you go far enough north of Bushwick Avenue you find a brewery. I was thinking of the Frank Brewery.

By Mr. Turkus:

Q. Mr. Hertz, were you on a jury panel in the spring of this year?

A. Yes.

Q. Did you reach the jury box?

A. No.

Q. Do you recall who the District Attorney was in that case?

A. Cohen was the District Attorney in one, and I think Mr. Barshay in the other.

Q. Do you know him?

A. Only from court. Weren't you the attorney in the Hicks case?

Mr. Barshay: No.

Q. Have you any prejudice in this case one way or the other?

A. To be honest with you, I have.

Q. Is it a prejudice that inures to the detriment of the defendants?

A. I imagine so.

Q. You see, defendants, no matter who they are, are entitled to have a jury that is going to deal with their case fairly and squarely. If you have a prejudice against them, let me know, and we will know what to do.

A. I have a prejudice that I don't think can be removed.

Mr. Barshay: Challenge the juror, to save time.

CHARLES D. HERTZ, of 1121 Lafayette Avenue, Brooklyn, New York, being duly sworn, testified as follows:

[fol. 2785] By Mr. Barshay:

Q. When questioned by Mr. Turkus, you made certain answers. Now, under oath, sir, will you make the same answers?

A. Yes, sir.

Mr. Barshay: That is all.

The Court: I did not hear those answers.

Mr. Turkus: He said he had a prejudice against the defendants which he could not set aside.

Mr. Cuff: Could not be removed.

The Court: Sustained.

Mr. Turkus: May we take another one?

The Court: No.

By Mr. Turkus:

Q. Mr. Gilt, you are an electrical engineer?

A. Yes.

Q. Employed by yourself or some utility?

A. Consolidated Edison.

Q. I take it you have been with them a number of years?

A. Five years.

Q. May I go along with the understanding that engineering has been your profession since you have been employed?

A. That is right.

Q. You live in East 39th Street. That is Flatbush?

A. Vanderveer Park section.

Q. You heard questions I addressed to the other talesmen about the garment industry, clothing truckers, Brownsville-

[fol. 2786] East New York, Brooklyn waterfront?

A. Yes.

Q. Anything I should know about any possible contact you have there?

By the Court:

Q. What concern are you with, Mr. Gilt?
A. Consolidated Edison.
Q. How long have you been with them?
A. About five years. Prior to that I was with the Brooklyn Edison.
Q. How long have you been with the Brooklyn Edison?
A. About fourteen years.
Q. You live not far from the Kings County Hospital?
A. Quite a long ways. I am near the new Brooklyn College. Between Glenwood and H.
Q. I must have the wrong address. What address are you?
A. 1008 East 39th Street.
Q. I have 108. You live in Vanderveer Park?
A. That is right.
Q. Near Glenwood Road?
A. Between Glenwood and H.

By Mr. Turkus:

Q. To make this very snappy, Mr. Gilt, do you understand that part of the testimony in this case will come from accomplices?
A. Yes.
Q. Have you understood from the instructions given by the lawyers that you cannot have a conviction upon unsupported or uncorroborated testimony of an accomplice?
A. Yes.
[fol. 2787] Q. Do you have any bias or prejudice against a case which includes the testimony of an accomplice, or against a prosecutor for employing it in the prosecution?
A. No, sir.
Q. Will you use common sense and understanding to arrive at the facts in this murder case?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. Do you understand that you may not meet people in this room that you ordinarily meet in every-day business?

By the Court:

Q. You do not belong to St. Stephens?
A. What is that?
Q. The club of St. Stephens?
A. No, I do not.

By Mr. Turkus:

Q. Do you understand that there are various tests that you apply, tests that the Judge gives you and tests that you use your common sense about to see whether a witness tells the truth; do you understand that?

A. Yes.

Q. With respect to an accomplice, because he himself was one of the perpetrators of the crime, the law goes further and gives you the tests of care, caution and suspicion. The Judge will tell you about that. Will you keep your mental faculties alert to the effect that every test you apply to an accomplice witness is applied to test is he speaking the truth, not only about his own participation but the part that they played in the commission of the alleged murder; do you understand that?

A. Yes.

Q. Is there any reason now, as to why you cannot do that [fol. 2788] with common sense and understanding?

A. Not that I know of.

Q. Is there anything I should know as prosecutor about your ability to be a just and conscientious juror?

A. Not that I know of.

Q. In this case, if after you hear all the evidence, if then you have a reasonable doubt about the guilt of these defendants or any one of them, give him the benefit of it, or whoever you have the reasonable doubt about. Will you do that?

A. Yes.

Q. On the other hand, after you hear what Judge O'Dwyer presents in this court-room and you are satisfied that these three men in a group or combination together with others killed the victim named in this indictment and you believe it beyond a reasonable doubt, will you say it in your verdict without fear or hesitation?

A. Yes, sir.

By Mr. Fischbein:

Q. Mr. Gilt, have you read any newspaper accounts with respect to this case?

A. Very little.

Q. Or with respect to any one of the defendants?

A. No.

Q. By reason of the reading of these newspapers have you gained any sort of impression or opinion with reference to this case?

A. No, sir.

Q. May I know what newspaper you read generally?

A. Times and Sun and to a small extent Eagle.

Q. When you say to a small extent the Eagle, do you read it two or three times a week?

[fol. 2789] A. We take it regularly, but I don't read it for news items.

Q. In other words, the news items that appeared in respect to this case in the Eagle——

A. I don't recall that I read any of them.

Q. You, of course, appreciate, Mr. Gilt, that these defendants are entitled to twelve men or fourteen men, two alternates, who will fairly and honestly decide the issues in this case on the evidence?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And these twelve men, of course, must be convinced beyond a reasonable doubt only as to the guilt, not the innocence, only as to the guilt of the defendants or any one of them, before they can vote for a conviction. You appreciate that? You, of course, being a college man, I take it, you know that a man who has any sort of an opinion, regardless of how slight the opinion may be, that opinion may subconsciously creep into the deliberations, may interfere with the calm, cool, deliberations of the juror after all the evidence has been submitted. That is true, is it not? With respect to the slight reading that you have indulged in in regards to this case, have you any opinion at all which may in any way at all interfere with your calm, cool deliberation of the facts in this case?

A. I believe not.

Q. Mr. Turkus spoke about accomplice testimony. You, of course, know what an accomplice is?

A. I do.

Q. In other words, some man is going to come in here and [fol. 2790] say, "I am the murderer," or, "I participated in the killing of the man mentioned in the indictment." Will you take that one fact alone into consideration, the fact that he admits under oath that he is a murderer? Would you take that fact into consideration in determining whether or not that man speaks the truth with respect to people that he seeks to involve?

A. Yes.

Q. In his testimony. I have your word as to that?

A. Yes.

Q. And as you go down the line of the years, of his background, you find out he has committed murder after murder, and has committed perjury time and time again, and he has committed larcenies and burglaries and robberies with a gun—will you take those facts into consideration?

A. Yes.

Q. And with each vicious act of his life you will feel that his testimony should be more carefully scrutinized than the testimony of any other witness who may take the stand in this case?

A. Yes.

Q. The worse a man is, the worse his background may be, the more you will carefully weigh the testimony that that man offers to you, which he is expecting you to accept as evidence in this case. Will you not do that?

A. Yes.

Q. His Honor will tell you that on the uncorroborated testimony of an accomplice you cannot convict. You will follow that rule of law, I take it?

A. Yes.

Q. And of course, assuming, for the sake of argument, [fol. 2791] that you believe, after listening to the testimony of a man who says, "I am a murderer, or one of the murderers of Joseph Rosen," assuming you believe that witness, and, that witness being an accomplice, and assuming that the other evidence that is introduced to corroborate the testimony of the accomplice by way of the other evidence that is required by law, and you don't believe that corroborating evidence, and his Honor will tell you that if you don't believe the corroborating evidence which tends to connect the defendants or any one of them with the commission of the crime, you must acquit, even if you believe the testimony of the accomplice, will you have the courage to do just that?

A. Yes.

Q. Is there anything that has happened in the court-room since you have been here—and I believe you have been here since Tuesday——

A. Yes, sir.

Q. —which would interfere with your calm and cool deliberation of the facts in this case?

A. Not that I know of.

Q. You realize, do you not, Mr. Gilt, the fact that you are the 13th juror. You are not superstitious, are you?

A. No.

Q. I did not believe you were. But, you know, sometimes it has happened, it has happened in the past when the 13th juror move right into the box and becomes one of the jurors, he is called upon to deliberate upon the facts in this case, and that is why we are just as careful with the selection of [fol. 2792] the 13th and 14th jurors as we are with any other juror who has qualified up to the present time. By reason of having been in this court-room, has anything occurred which may in the slightest way interfere with your cool and calm deliberation of the facts in this case?

A. Not that I know of.

Q. You realize and appreciate the fact that no juror should permit prejudice to enter into his verdict; is that correct?

A. Yes.

Q. And you will agree with me, will you not, that we must as jurors, disregard any attempt to influence the jurors' verdict by the use of any innuendoes or any gesture which may create a prejudicial atmosphere in the court-room or prejudice the minds of the juror?

Mr. Turkus: That is objected to.

Mr. Fischbein: That is only a preamble to what I expect to lead up to, Mr. Turkus. I am going to lead up to it now.

Q. The fact of Mr. Turkus, by a gesture of his thumb and refers to the defendants as "they," that would not be part of the testimony to be considered in this case?

Mr. Turkus: Not the thumb.

Mr. Fischbein: All right.

Q. I have your word, have I not, Mr. Gilt, that if you are selected, you will unhesitatingly, if convinced only beyond a reasonable doubt, bring in a verdict of Guilty?

A. That is right.

[fol. 2793] Q. And, by the same token, if the proof offered to you, if after separating the wheat from the chaff, so to speak, in this case, and you come down to the bone of the testimony which you consider is the evidence, you find that the proof does not persuade your mind beyond a reasonable doubt as to the guilt of any one of these defendants, you would not hesitate to acquit?

A. No, sir.

By Mr. Cuff:

Q. Mr. Gilt, if the corroborating evidence offered by the prosecution in this case—and by that I mean, I think you know now that independent evidence that does not come from anyone who is an accomplice—you understand that, do you?

A. Yes.

Q. If that corroborating evidence comes from witnesses whose character is proved out of their own mouths to be depraved to the last degree, if it is shown that they have committed murders, robberies, burglaries, extortion, and even perjury, that is, swearing falsely in a court of record under oath, and if, by reason of that depraved character you have doubt about their ability to tell the truth in this case, and his Honor should instruct you that it is your duty to give the defendant or the defendants the benefit of that doubt, and to acquit them, will you have any hesitation in doing so?

A. Say that again.

Mr. Turkus: That is a long, complicated, legal question.

Mr. Cuff: It is not half as long as some that you ask.

Mr. Turkus: All right, I am sorry.

[fol. 2794] Mr. Cuff: If the witness does not understand it, I will try to reframe it so as to make it clear. I won't use that preamble again that I used first, but I say:

Q. If the corroborating evidence—you know what I mean by that?

A. Yes.

Q. —comes from men of utterly depraved character, who have admittde out of their own mouths that they are guilty of many murders, that they have committed robbery, burglary, extortion and even perjury, that in swearing falsely in another court of record under oath, and that raises in your mind a doubt as to their ability to tell the truth, or that they are telling the truth in this case, and his Honor should instruct you that in that case it is your bounden duty to acquit, will you hesitate?

Mr. Turkus: That is objectionable. That is not a proper question.

By the Court:

Q. Will you, in event of the Court giving you instruction to that or any other effect, follow the instruction of the Court?

A. I will follow the instruction of the Court.

By Mr. Cuff:

Q. Now, Mister, I am going to ask you again: If that sort of testimony so impresses you that you cannot believe it, and his Honor should instruct you that it is your duty to acquit; will you do so?

A. Yes.

[fol. 2795] Q. That is all I wanted to find out, and I think that is what my question intended to convey.

You were asked by Mr. Turkus whether you had, if you were convinced of the guilt of these defendants beyond a reasonable doubt, whether you would without hesitation, fear, or reluctance, return a verdict of guilty. On the other hand, if you are not satisfied of their guilt or the guilt of any one of them beyond a reasonable doubt, that is, if you have a doubt based upon the evidence or the lack of it as to the guilt of any one or all three of these defendants, do you have the courage, the fortitude, and the will power to reflect that in a "Not guilty" verdict?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. I understood you had no impression about this case from any reading; is that right?

A. That is right.

Q. And you know what the presumption of innocence is, by this time, I believe?

A. I believe so.

Q. You do know, too, do you not, that it is a very, very substantial right of every defendant in a criminal case under our law; is that right?

A. Yes.

Q. And that if his Honor so instructs you, as I am sure he will, that it is your duty, and every juror's, to give to each one of these defendants the full benefit of that presumption of innocence, that substantial right, will you do so?

A. I will.

Q. And will you so regard these defendants from the [fol. 2796] time you are sworn as a juror, throughout the trial, taking the evidence while you are deliberating on it in your jury room and until twelve of you agree that guilt has been established beyond a reasonable doubt—will you do that?

A. Yes.

Q. Because I think his Honor will charge you that is the law of this state and that is a part of our Penal Law, our Code of Criminal Procedure, under which we try these criminal cases. You realize, do you not, Mr. Gilt, that each juror must decide for himself, after weighing the evidence, all the facts and circumstances connected with the witness who gives the testimony, after discussing it reasonable with his fellow jurors, that it is the individual obligation of each juror to make up for himself, under his oath, his mind as to what is the truth? You realize that?

A. Yes.

Q. If after giving that consideration and after that discussion and after applying the rules of law that his Honor will give you for your guidance, you are satisfied that there is a reasonable doubt as to the guilt of a defendant or all three defendants, and if his Honor should charge you in that event that you must reflect that in a "Not guilty" verdict despite the number that may be opposed to you, despite the lateness of hour, despite any other consideration except the evidence in this case, will you do so?

A. Yes.

Q. And you will not be swayed from that decision by any consideration, fear, or circumstance except such as you [fol. 2797] find in the evidence in this case that you believe; is that right?

A. Yes.

Q. And I have your assurance on that solemnly?

A. Yes.

Mr. Cuff: Thank you.

By Mr. Climenko:

Q. I understand that you work for the Consolidated Edison?

A. That is right.

Q. And I heard that it was in the capacity as an engineer, but I do not know just what that means. Do you map out projects for them?

A. I have the designing and planning for the present distribution system.

Q. Is that the industrial?

A. Generally in industrial system, our own system.

Q. Are you the department head?

A. Borough head.

Q. Were you to serve here, that would not cause any embarrassment to your company, even though you are so well staffed?

A. I have a good assistant.

Q. The work could go on, even though you hold that kind of position?

A. It has to.

Q. You were asked some question about your reading as to this case, and I understand it has been purely casual; is that right?

A. That is correct.

Q. But of necessity you did see something in the papers somewhere, sometime about this case or about some of the people named in this indictment; is that true?

A. Yes.

[fol. 2798] Q. And that would be in one of the regular newspapers, because you do not read the tabloids; is that right?

A. Yes.

Q. Even though you may have seen several such articles, I have the impression from what you told me other lawyers who examined you that you were not sufficiently interested in those articles to read them through; is that correct?

A. I think that is correct.

Q. Whatever is the fact.

A. I cannot recall reading any articles.

Q. You understand that if in any sense questions are deemed personal, I cannot apologize to you for making them, because it hapens to be my duty, you understand?

A. Yes.

Q. Is it your recollection that you did not read these articles through?

A. That is my recollection.

Q. Because at no time when they came to your attention, so to speak, at no time were you sufficiently interested in the story that they purported to tell?

A. That is right.

Q. And nothing that you have read has made so clear an impression at the time, or do you have so clear a recollection of anything you may have seen as to have caused you to form an impression about this case or about any of the persons now in this indictment?

A. That is correct.

Q. That is clear? So that so far as reading is concerned, you have no preconceived notion?

Mr. Turkus: Objected to. That has been answered three [fol. 2799] times now.

Mr. Climenko: Your Honor, I am trying to do it in an omnibus form.

The Court: Overruled.

Q. You have no impression?

A. No.

Q. I ask these questions on behalf of my client, Mr. Louis Buchalter. You have heard his name before, have you not?

A. Yes.

Q. I am distinguishing now between your reading and what you may have heard. Have you heard his name before, before you came into this court?

A. No, not before I came into court.

Q. You never heard his name before?

A. Not that I know of.

Q. So now I may take it that at no time have you either yourself participated in a conversation in which his name was mentioned, nor, if you did not participate, did you overhear such a conversation; is that correct?

A. That is correct.

Q. If there is by any chance any inaccuracy about that, I can form the impression that the conversation that you might have heard was of such slight consequence that it made no impression upon you whatsoever. That is clear?

A. Yes.

Q. So neither by reading nor through conversation nor through listening to a conversation do you come here,—you got your notice to appear in this court-room,—with any preconceived notion about the case or any of the defendants?

A. That is correct.

[fol. 2800] Q. You realize, of course, even though you don't have an impression from any of those sources, that this is a case which, in a sense, received public attention—you realize that?

A. Yes.

Q. And do you realize also that the District Attorney of this county is a gentleman who at the present time is the recipient of a great deal of public attention by reason of the circumstance that his name is brought to the public in a capacity other than that of his holding that office? You know that, don't you?

A. Yes.

Q. And Mr. Turkus has referred to the possibility of the submission of evidence in this court-room by the District Attorney, whom he names as Judge O'Dwyer. You heard that?

A. Yes.

Q. So that the District Attorney is the District Attorney, he holds the title of Judge by reason of the fact that he once was a judge and he is a candidate of his party for the high position of Mayor of this great city. You know all of those things?

A. Yes.

Q. You realize also, do you not, that if you were to act as a juror here you would have to deal impartially as between the defendants on the one hand and the District Attorney on the other; is that correct?

A. That is correct.

Q. And may I understand, without going into the details or breaking up the question, that it is your notion that in no sense are you to place upon the credibility or the be-[fol. 2801] lievability or the honesty of any witness called by the District Attorney, a larger degree of value than you would ordinarily give him, simply because, as it happens, the District Attorney at the moment is a man who holds that job, once was a judge, and now is a candidate for Mayor?

A. That is right.

Q. You understand that that has got nothing to do with the consideration by a juror of the issues in a capital case?

A. Right.

Q. And that would not for one moment enter into your consideration?

A. No.

Q. Of the merits of the honesty of the witnesses who were produced here?

A. Correct.

Q. Do you understand that? The question has been asked before. So as to finish with it once and for all: The mere fact that Mr. Turkus says that Judge O'Dwyer will call a witness does not for one instant confuse you about the integrity of the witness as contrasted with the integrity of Judge O'Dwyer; is that so?

A. That is right.

Q. Because the witness is one man and Mr. O'Dwyer is another is that right?

A. That is.

Q. And it is very clear to you that Mr. O'Dwyer does not for one moment say to you, "Take my word for it the fellow is telling the truth"?

A. That is right.

Q. So you won't be confused at all by the unusual, unique and pleasant position that the District Attorney of Kings [fol. 2802] County occupies at this moment; is that right?

A. That is right.

Q. Nor would you for a moment permit the fact that there is an impending City election on our hands to becloud your notion as a juror; is that correct?

A. That is correct.

Q. Are you acquainted with any member of the police force?

A. I just have a speaking acquaintance with a policeman on our block.

Q. I don't mean it in that sense, as perhaps you may have gathered. Do you number among your friends, those that you cherish as friends, members of the police force?

A. No.

Q. Are you acquainted with any members of the District Attorney's staff?

A. No, not that I know of.

Q. Neither here nor in New York?

A. No.

Q. Is that correct?

A. Yes.

Q. Have you at any time in the past served as a juror in a criminal case?

A. Not in a criminal case.

Q. Only in a civil case?

A. Civil case.

Q. You realize, without going into the differences, that there are differences in the duties of a juror in a civil case as contrasted with a criminal case?

A. Yes.

Q. You understand that. Now, without bringing it to your attention specifically, if you were instructed by the Court as a matter of law that under your oath as a juror you could not return a verdict of guilty unless you were satisfied of guilt as against the defendants or any of them [fol. 2803] beyond a reasonable doubt, would you have any difficulty in following that instruction of law?

A. No.

Q. In other words, if the matter were put to you the other way, would you as a juror, under your oath, would you be under an obligation as sacred as the oath itself, as sacred as the gravity of the issues which are presented in a capital case—that is not language to you, either, is it, you understand what I mean by it—that you would be under that kind of obligation to return a verdict of Not Guilty if after hearing all of the testimony and after hearing the learned and able Assistant District Attorney argue what he considers the merits of his case, if after all that you entertained a reasonable doubt about the guilt of the defendants or any of them, then as to the defendants or any of them you would be under an obligation to say "Not Guilty," would you have any difficulty in following that instruction of law?

A. No.

Q. Now, even though in this particular case you know that you are dealing with a case which has public attention, you would not have any such inability or any trace of inability to return such a verdict if you entertained such a reasonable doubt as to the guilt; is that right?

A. That is right.

Q. And you understand, do you not, that that is the approach that if after hearing everything you do entertain a doubt, a reasonable doubt based on the evidence, you must return a verdict of Not Guilty? That is the way your mind [fol. 2804] must approach the proof in this case. You have no quarrel with that, because that means that you may not as a juror sit here and anticipate or expect proof of innocence; you may not require that of the defense; is that right?

A. That is right.

Q. So far as you are able to search your own mind, you know of no disability or impediment, you have no reservation about your ability along the lines of the law as you have heard it referred to in these various questions both by Mr. Turkus and the other lawyers, you have no hesitation about your ability to act fairly, without prejudice, without sympathy, be fair as a juror in this case?

A. That is right.

Mr. Climenko: Thank you, sir.

Mr. Turkus: Satisfactory.

Mr. Fischbein: Will your Honor permit me to ask one or two more questions?

The Court: All right.

By Mr. Fischbein:

Q. In view of the fact, Mr. Gilt, that the burden of proof in a criminal case never shifts, if we as the lawyers representing Louis Capone, put in a defense of alibi, and if that alibi creates a reasonable doubt in your mind, will you resolve that doubt in favor of the defendant?

Mr. Turkus: If the Judge tells him that.

Q. Would you do that? Would you follow that instruction of law?

A. A reasonable doubt as to guilt?

[fol. 2805] Q. As to his guilt.

A. Yes.

Q. In other words, you would not demand of the defendant to sustain the burden of establishing to your satisfaction beyond a reasonable doubt the alibi that may or may not be interposed?

A. No.

Mr. Fischbein: That is all.

Mr. Turkus: Still satisfactory.

Mr. Barshay: Satisfactory.

The Court: Take Seat 1. (To the Clerk): Give the regular jury oath.

(Carl M. Gilt, of 108 East 39th Street, was sworn as Alternate Juror No. 1.)

(George K. Ormond, of 1190 East 34th Street, was called and examined as to his qualifications.)

By Mr. Turkus:

Q. Mr. Ormond, you live at East 34th Street?

A. Yes.

Q. That is Flatbush. You are an electrical contractor?

A. Yes.

Q. In business for yourself?

A. Yes.

Q. Do you have anything to do with Brownsville, East New York, the garment district, the clothing district, the Brooklyn waterfront?

A. No.

Q. In any way in which you earn your livelihood, do you come in contact with anybody in those industries or in those districts?

A. No.

[fol. 2806] Q. Is there anything as prosecutor that I should know about your qualification to be a fair and impartial juror?

A. No.

By the Court:

Q. Where is your place of business?

A. 1609 Flatbush Avenue.

By Mr. Turkus:

Q. Are you in business for yourself, Mr. Ormond?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you know any of the lawyers in the case?

A. No.

Q. Do you know the District Attorney of the County, Judge O'Dwyer, or any member of his staff?

A. No.

Q. Do you have any bias or prejudice about accomplice testimony that I should know about?

A. No.

Q. If accepted in the case, will you use common sense and understanding in weighing the believability of an accomplice witness and of the proof that you hear in the case?

A. Yes.

By the Court:

Q. You have a retail store, too, haven't you?

A. Well, I had. I simply have desk room at the present in this other store, radio store. I have nothing to do with the store. I had a radio shop in Newkirk Plaza. Maybe you remember the place.

Q. That is Eisenberg's?

A. I was up the street a few doors for about fifteen years.

Q. Competition drove you out?

A. Eisenberg was too much for me.

[fol. 2807] By Mr. Turkus:

Q. Do you understand it is not whether you like or dislike the accomplice; does he speak the truth about the defendants? Do you understand that is what you are here for?

A. Yes.

Q. That you are going to devote your mental faculties to find out are they guilty of this charge, or are they not? You will get the rules from the Judge, apply them to the facts in the case, use common sense and understanding, talk the case over. Is there anything I should know about your ability to be fair?

A. I don't think so.

Q. Have you served as a juror before?

A. I have.

Q. Have you been here while we went over all these discussions?

A. No, I just came in today. I was out of town.

Q. All right. You have been around for a long time. Will you use common sense in this case and do justice with your verdict in the case?

A. Yes.

Q. Give the defendants everything the law of the land says they should have. The Judge will tell you what it is, the presumption of innocence, the doctrine of reasonable doubt, the burden of proof, give them everything the law of the land says they should have. Of course, no more and no less; is that right? Give them everything they are entitled to. And if after you hear all the evidence in this case, if then you have a reasonable doubt about their guilt, come right in and say so. Will you do that?

[fol. 2808] A. Yes.

Q. Now, on the other hand, by the time all this evidence comes before you that is in this case and you hear it all and you hear the law and you talk it over with the other jurors, if then your mind tells you these are three of a group or combination that played a part in killing the victim named in this indictment, can I count on you to come in here and say so?

A. Yes.

Q. Nothing in the world to stop you, is there?

A. No.

By Mr. Cuff:

Q. Mr. Ormond, have you ever served on a jury in a criminal case—actually served?

A. Yes.

Q. How long since the last time?

A. A year ago last August. It was just a robbery case.

Q. Any of the lawyers that are here now in that case?

A. None.

Q. As the result of anything you read or any talk you had with anybody about the defendants or this case, have you formed any impression?

A. I have not read anything about it.

Q. You do not know a thing about it?

A. Nothing.

Q. So, if you are selected, you are going to start off at scratch, you are going to be able to listen to the evidence in this case with an open mind, and with a mind that is directed toward deciding where the truth lies?

A. Yes.

Q. And I can rely on it? I understand, then, that there [fol. 2809] is nothing in the world that would sway you from serving in this case and rendering a verdict that you under your oath of office and on your conscience would regard as a just verdict; is that right?

A. Yes.

Mr. Cuff: Thank you.

By Mr. Fischbein:

Q. Mr. Ormond, I am going to ask you just one question. Do you feel that if you are accepted as a juror in this case the defendant whom I represent together with my associates, Mr. Louis Capone, could depend upon you to give him a fair and impartial trial?

A. Yes.

Q. You realize further, do you not, that once I sit down now I am not going to ask you any more questions, nor will the lawyers ever speak to you until the conclusion of the case. Do you feel now any reluctance to serve as a juror in this case?

A. No.

Q. Is there any reason in the recesses of your mind which may interfere with your calm and cool deliberation of the facts in this case?

A. No.

Q. Have you ever served in a capital case as a juror?

A. No, I have not.

Mr. Fischbein: That is all.

By Mr. Barshay:

Q. Sir, have you read about this case?

A. No, I have not.

Q. Have you heard about it?

A. (Answer inaudible.)

[fol. 2810] Q. Have you read about the defendants?

A. No. I might have seen his name in print.

Q. You have formed no impression?

A. No.

Q. So Mr. Buchalter can leave in your hands to preserve, every legal right given to him by law?

Mr. Turkus: There is one question I am required to ask.

By Mr. Turkus:

Q. Have you any scruple, conscientious or otherwise, against capital punishment?

A. No.

Mr. Turkus: Satisfactory.

Mr. Barshay: Satisfactory.

The Court: Swear the gentleman. The same oath as the jury.

(George K. Ormond, of 1190 East 34th Street, sworn as Alternate Juror No. 2.)

The Court: The other members of the panel are excused with thanks.

(To the jury): Gentlemen, of course, there has been a great deal said about this case being a very lengthy case. It may not be as long as you are afraid it will be, but from now on, having taken the oath and in order to prevent the jury from obtaining any impressions from outside, it will be necessary to house the jury. Instructions concerning the housing of jurors are in form which is in the possession of the captain of court attendants. That will be given to the stenographer to make a part of the record in this case. The captain of court attendants will inform you as to what those instructions are.

[fol. 2811] So far as this afternoon is concerned, those who have been chosen will have to, of course, get certain equipment from their own homes. You can take that up with the captain of the court attendants. Where it is feasible to do so, you may send home for such things as you need. Where it is necessary that you go home and pick out the things that you need, a Court officer will accompany you. This will take some time. There will be an abundance of time in which to get settled. In the meantime, you get acquainted. But I must caution you above all things, do not at any time in conversation discuss this case. Do not at any time in conversation even discuss, critically or otherwise, the procedure or anybody connected with the case. The important thing to do is to keep your brains and consciences on the evidence and give a fair and impartial verdict.

Ample and reasonable recreations will be provided, of course. You will be advised later as to what these are. If there is any difficulty in connection with the housing because it comes suddenly, then take it up through the captain of the court attendants and he, in turn, will take it up with the Court. In the meantime you may leave the box, and from now on the captain of the court attendants will take care of the jury.

Mr. Cuff: May I ask your Honor to say to the jury——

[fol. 2812] The Court: Yes.

Mr. Cuff: The fact that they are put to this inconvenience is not to be considered as against either the people or the defendants.

The Court: Not at all. It is in fairness to the defendants that your mind shall remain in its present condition. Nobody at home, no one you shall meet, nothing that you shall read, nothing that you shall hear on the radio, shall be permitted by any possible chance to have any effect on the condition of your verdict.

You may retire, gentlemen.

(The jury retired from the court-room.)

The Court: Monday morning at ten o'clock. Counsel have had a long and strenuous battle, lasting five weeks. This will allow a breathing spell for come-back, and also for the preparation of the opening addresses concerning the evidence to be presented. The Court intends from now on to see that counsel are not overtaxed. The working hours will be from 10 to 4. That will allow time for conference without the necessity of counsel going over to Manhattan to the House of Detention or to the Tombs. It will not be too great a strain on any of the defendants, and I will allow them to return to their respective institutions in time for the regular evening meal. It is important throughout the [fol. 2813] case that nobody shall become so overworked that quality of the work will be impaired.

The defendants are remanded.

Mr. Cuff: Judge, may I, now that the selection is over, ask that the wife of the defendant and his brother be permitted to see him here?

The Court: No. The Court is not a jailer. I said that repeatedly. So that it won't be sensationalized as a news set-up, they have ample opportunity to continue their visits at these institutions, and it is not necessary that they shall ask the Court to take over the duties of a jailer.

Mr. Cuff: No, they did not think that, Judge.

The Court: I am trying the case. I am not preventing them from seeing their relatives. They can see them ad lib. but they will see them the same as anybody else when they are under confinement.

(Whereupon an adjournment was taken to Monday, October 20, 1941, at 10:00 A. M.)

[fol. 2814] Rules and Regulations Governing the Custody of Jurors While at Hotels During the Progress of a Trial

1. All Jurors must be kept together at all times and their rooms must be so located that they may be kept segregated at all times from other guests.

2. All Room Telephone service must be discontinued while Jurors are in their rooms.

3. All urgent telephone calls for any juror must be transmitted by the Attendant in charge.

4. All packages or letters must be censored by the Attendant in Charge.

5. All urgent conversations with friends or relatives must be in the presence and hearing of the Attendant in Charge.

6. All newspapers (or magazines which are allowed by permission of the court) must be deleted of all references to the case on trial or other matter that might unduly influence the Juror.

7. Radio will be allowed only in the room set aside as a recreation room and will be under the supervision of an attendant.

8. There must be an attendant on watch at all times in the corridor of the hotel where the jurors are segregated and allow no one to enter the room of any juror unless by special permission of the Court of the Attendant in Charge. [fol. 2815] 9. All requests or complaints made by the jurors must be submitted in writing and presented to the Court.

10. No attendant will allow any extra privilege to any juror unless specifically ordered by the Court or the Chief Court Attendant.

11. Medical requirements shall be met. An attendant shall as needed accompany a juryman on visits to his own physician.

(Sgd.) John F. Lantry, Chief Clerk.

(Sgd.) Thomas F. Gannon, Chief Court Attendant.

IN THE

Supreme Court of the United States

OCTOBER TERM, 1912

No. [illegible]

LOUIS BUCHALTER,

Petitioner,

v.

PEOPLE OF THE STATE OF NEW YORK.

PETITION FOR A WRIT OF CERTIORARI TO THE COUNTY COURT OF KINGS COUNTY, STATE OF NEW YORK, AND BRIEF IN SUPPORT THEREOF

I. MAURICE WORMSER,
J. BERTRAM WOLFSON,
JESSE CLEMENTS,
Counsel for Petitioner.

INDEX

PAGE

PETITION:

Statement 1

Jurisdiction 39

Questions Presented 39

Reasons Relied On for Granting the Writ 41

BRIEF:

Opinions Below 43

Jurisdiction, Questions Presented, etc. 43

Summary of Argument 44

Argument—

I—"Due process of law" as guaranteed by the the Fourteenth Amendment encompasses the assurance of a fair trial in the courts of a State 45

II—Due process of law was denied by the refusal to change the place of trial or, at the very least, to postpone the time of trial 47

III—A fair and impartial jury was not impaneled. A fair and impartial Judge did not preside at the trial 49

IV—The Trial Judge deliberately invaded the province of the jury and misled it 53

V—Depriving the petitioner of an opportunity to offer evidence in his defense was a denial of due process 55

VI—Requirements of due process of law were ignored in the decision of the New York State Court of Appeals 56

PAGE

Conclusion 58

Appendix:

Constitution of the United States—
Amendment XIV 60

New York State Constitution:
Article I, Section 2 60
Article VI, Section 7 61

New York Judiciary Law—Section 749-aa 61

Judicial Code of the United States—
Section 237, as amended, 28 U. S. C. Section 344 62

CASES CITED

	PAGE
Berger v. United States, 295 U. S. 78	54
Brown v. New Jersey, 175 U. S. 172	51
Commonwealth v. Petrillo, 338 Penna. 65, 12 Atl. (2d) 317	52, 54, 58
Hill v. State of Texas, 316 U. S. 400	59
Mooney v. Holohan, 294 U. S. 103	56
Norris v. Alabama, 294 U. S. 587	51
Palko v. Connecticut, 302 U. S. 319	47
People v. Barbato, 254 N. Y. 170	58
People ex rel. Battista v. Christian, 249 N. Y. 314	51
People v. Crum, 272 N. Y. 348	51, 57
People v. McLaughlin, 150 N. Y. 365	49
People v. Ohanian, 245 N. Y. 227	53
People v. Sharp, 107 N. Y. 427	58
Pyle v. Kansas, 87 L. Ed. 154, Adv. Op., Dec. 21, 1942	57
Quinn v. State, 54 Okla. Cr. 179, 16 Pac. (2d) 591	49
Saunders v. Shaw, 244 U. S. 317	56
Snyder v Massachusetts, 291 U. S. 97	46, 53, 57
Tumey v. Ohio, 273 U. S. 510	49
Whitney v. California, 274 U. S. 357	51

CONSTITUTIONAL PROVISIONS AND STATUTES CITED

Page

(These are printed in the Appendix.)

Constitution of the United States:
14th Amendment, 1st Section 58, 60

Constitution of New York State:
Art. I, Sec. 2 ..... 51, 60
Art. VI, Sec. 7 ..... 50, 51, 57, 61

Judicial Code (U. S.):
Sec. 237 as amended (Sec. 344(b), Title 28, U. S. C.) 39, 62

N. Y. State Judiciary Law:
Sec. 749aa, subd. 7 ..... 50, 61

TEXT

54 Harvard Law Review 679 49

IN THE

Supreme Court of the United States

OCTOBER TERM, 1942

No.

LOUIS BUCHALTER,

Petitioner,

v.

PEOPLE OF THE STATE OF NEW YORK.

PETITION FOR A WRIT OF CERTIORARI TO THE COUNTY COURT OF KINGS COUNTY, STATE OF NEW YORK

LOUIS BUCHALTER prays that a writ of certiorari issue to review the judgment of the County Court of Kings County of the State of New York entered December 2, 1941, convicting petitioner of the crime of Murder in the First Degree. On October 30, 1942, that judgment was affirmed by the Court of Appeals of New York, which is the Court of last resort of that State. Petitioner moved for a reargument in the Court of Appeals, which, on November 25, 1942, was denied.

Statement

In April, 1940, while petitioner was a prisoner of the Federal Government, incarcerated in the United States Penitentiary at Leavenworth, Kansas, serving a sentence of imprisonment for a term of fourteen years, which had been imposed upon him in the United States District Court for the Southern District of New York in December, 1939, an indictment was returned in the County Court of the County of Kings, State of New York, wherein petitioner, with others, was charged with the murder of Joseph Rosen on September 13, 1936. In addition to the sentence which he was then serving, petitioner was under sentence for a term of thirty years to life, imposed upon him by the Court of General Sessions of the County of New York, State of New York, in March, 1940, the service of which sentence was to commence upon the expiration of the Federal sentence.

In May, 1941, petitioner was transferred from the Federal penitentiary at Leavenworth, Kansas, to the Federal Detention Headquarters in the City of New York, and thence taken into the County Court of the County of Kings for arraignment on the indictment, charging him with Murder.

Simultaneously with the announcement of the indictment against him, the prosecutor commenced the use of every available method to have him prejudged by the community in which ultimately, in September 1941, he was brought to trial. So successful were these efforts that, when the trial actually began, it was only a pretense of a trial. By September 1941, he had been characterized repeatedly in every important newspaper circulated in the City of New York as society's most vicious enemy, the arch criminal of his time, a racketeer who had extorted millions and was intent on extorting billions from the business and industrial community of New York, as the arch assassin who employed the members of a notorious group of murderers, first to kill all who opposed his unbounded predatory schemes, and then all who, however innocently, might have been witnesses of his acts of violence (see newspaper clips submitted herewith). The District Attorney permitted himself to be quoted repeatedly by the most staid of the metropolitan papers, The Times, The Sun, The Herald-Tribune, to the effect that he, the District Attorney, was jubilant because he had an iron clad case of murder against the petitioner. Newspaper articles which assumed petitioner's guilt of murder as charged by the indictment, quoted the District Attorney in discussing the case. The attack on petitioner, the complete devastation of the presumption of innocence to which he was entitled even during the trial, let alone before its beginning, was carried by the prosecution to the point of releasing announcements to the press to the effect that petitioner had actually acknowledged his guilt of the crime charged in the indictment and, in order to avoid execution, was bargaining with the District Attorney to turn state's witness against men who held high office in the Governments of the City of New York and the United States.

While these attacks on petitioner were proceeding, newspaper propaganda, especially in Brooklyn, idolized the District Attorney for his attack on petitioner. These separate newspaper campaigns, one in attack upon petitioner, the other in praise of the prosecutor, reached their climax in September, 1941, when petitioner's trial began. The prosecutor had then become the Democratic candidate for the office of Mayor of the City of New York. His political opponent, the incumbent Mayor, Mr. LaGuardia, was supported by the American Labor Party, in whose membership the Amalgamated Clothing Workers' Union was an important factor. In at least one of its aspects, petitioner's trial represented an attack upon that Union. Petitioner contends here, as he contended below in the Courts of New York, that the prosecutor succeeded in creating assurance of his guilt in the minds of the community in which he was to be tried before his trial began, and that in consequence he received not a fair trial, but only a simulacrum thereof.

In an effort to obtain a fair trial, petitioner applied (R. 76 et seq.) to the Supreme Court of New York for a change of venue, and in support of that application submitted a few of the many hundreds of inflammatory, prejudicial articles which had been circulated against him. These, therefore, are part of the record and quick reference is here made to some of them (the articles themselves forming a part of the record are submitted in the same photostatic forms in which they were presented at nisi prius). While inclusion of these excerpts will extend the length of this petition, counsel does so in the hope that the effect will be to serve the convenience of the Court.

The Sunday edition of the New York Daily News published April 7, 1940, printed a three-page resumé of the alleged scope of the activities of a group of professional murderers. Purporting to quote the District Attorney, the paper said:

> "All in all, O'Dwyer figures, Crime Corp. eliminated seven of the 11 witnesses against Louis (Lepke) Buchalter and Jacob (Gurrah) Shapiro in District Attorney Dewey's investigation of their racket activities."

The paper said of the crime charged in this case:

> "Joseph Rosen, slain in his Brooklyn candy store in September, 1937. Rosen had been a truck fleet operator, but was driven from business by rackets. The Lepke-Gurrah combination was said to fear his testimony in front of District Attorney Dewey and for that reason contracted to have him killed. Pittsburgh Phil Strauss and Happy Maione were arrested in this case, and soon were freed."

Much of the article purports to quote the District Attorney. It carries his disclaimer of political ambition (sic). At about the same time, the News revealed that the District Attorney had been informed by the Federal Bureau of Investigation that petitioner employed the same murder syndicate, that witnesses "delivered murder contracts from Lepke (petitioner) to Albert Anastasio, also a fugitive. 'If Workman can be induced to talk', an official said, 'both Lepke and Anastasio will die in the electric chair'." Then one month after the indictment, in May, 1940, prosecutors of both Kings County and Bronx County in metropolitan

New York began to be quoted as being certain of petitioner's guilt of many murders. On January 3, 1941, the New York Herald-Tribune quoted Samuel J. Foley, District Attorney of the Bronx, about the murder of one Pean: "We now have a clear picture of the entire set-up", Mr. Foley said. "I believe Lepke ordered the disposition of Orlovsky and the job was bungled. There is no doubt the murder was done on the order of the gang chieftain."

On June 4, 1940, the Daily Mirror, after stating that the District Attorney of Kings County was at Monticello, New York, where he had brought witnesses to testify about the murder of one Yuran, said:

> "Yuran, a wealthy dress manufacturer, whose body buried in quicklime, was found at Loch Sheldrake in April, was killed on orders of Louis (Lepke) Buchalter with whom he had been indicted in New York for industrial racketeering, authorities said."

On May 16, 1940, the New York Times, after referring to Mr. O'Dwyer's presence in Sullivan County at the excavation of Yuran's body, said:

> "Yuran is believed to have been slain by the murder ring at the behest of Lepke in the summer of 1938, at which time Lepke allegedly was directing a 'war of extermination' against all potential witnesses in Mr. Dewey's inquiry."

Petitioner was removed from the Federal Penitentiary at Leavenworth, to the Federal Detention Headquarters at New York City in May, 1941, pursuant to a writ ad prosequendum sought by the District Attorney of Kings County and consented to by the Attorney General of the United States. This was made the subject of new, completely artificial, propaganda circulated even by the most conservative elements of the press. On May 25, 1941, the New York Sun said:

"Reles is Taken to Hospital.

Fear of Accusing Lepke as Witness at Trial Blamed for Pleurisy Attack.

The prospect of testifying against such an underworld big shot as Louis (Lepke) Buchalter has made Brooklyn's star informer, Abe (Kid Twist) Reles, severely ill.

Reles, whose testimony has already sent four men to the death house at Sing Sing, has become so unnerved by the realization that he soon will be required to accuse Lepke in the same way that he has had to be taken to a private sanitarium in Manhattan, seriously ill of pleurisy, The New York Sun was informed today.

There can be no doubt that it was fear of facing Lepke in open court that brought on Reles's relapse, it was said. He has been suffering from a serious disease for several years and six months ago doctors gave him only two years to live. It is said that for this reason District Attorney William O'Dwyer speeded up prosecution of the murder syndicate and made swift moves to get Lepke back from the Federal Penitentiary at Leavenworth, Kan., to stand trial for the murder of Joseph Rosen, a Brooklyn shopkeeper, in 1936. Reles is the kingpin of the District Attorney's case against Lepke.

* * * * * *

Reles has been District Attorney O'Dwyer's star witness both in the trial of Harry (Happy) Maione and Frank (The Dasher) Abbandando, and in the trial of Harry (Pittsburgh Phil) Strauss and Martin (Buggsy) Goldstein, all of whom are now awaiting death at Sing Sing.

Reles showed no particular compunction about testifying against Maione, Strauss, Abbandando and Goldstein. He was of their caste in gangland, but when he takes the stand against Lepke he faces the czar of the underworld realm. It was Lepke, according to the testimony, who ordered the killings which the murder syndicate did for a price, based on a very elaborate scale of rates.

One informant of The New York Sun said that it was like the office boy testifying against the boss. The mere thought of the ordeal was too much for Reles, he asserted."

The same newspaper account, certainly by advisement, since it could not have been through inspiration, said of the charge confronting petitioner:

"Lepke is under indictment for the shooting of Rosen in front of the latter's stationery store at 725 Sutter Avenue, the Bronx, on September 13, 1936. Rosen had written a letter to District Attorney Thomas E. Dewey in New York county offering to give evidence in the prosecution of the trucking racket of which Lepke was the czar. Rosen was struck down by twenty-two bullets."

The District Attorney of Kings County assured the newspapers, who in turn assured the public, that petitioner was guilty not only of the crime of murder in contriving the assassination of Joseph Rosen, but of other murders. On April 14, 1940, the Daily News said of petitioner:

"Prison to Chair, Plan for Lepke.

Aids of Kings County District Attorney William O'Dwyer revealed yesterday they will move to rescue Louis (Lepke) Buchalter from his lifetime sentence in prison. They hope to electrocute him instead.

The deposed industrial racketeer, they declared, has now been linked definitely to two killings perpetrated by Brooklyn's murder ring. On the strength of the evidence, O'Dwyer will move to have Lepke brought back from the Federal Penitentiary in Lewisburg, Pa., to stand trial for his life.

The final tie-up between Lepke and the murder mobsters has been provided, according to O'Dwyer's men, by a former member of the gang. Significantly, Assistant District Attorneys Louis Aldino and Edward A. Hefferman went to Sing Sing late in the afternoon to interview a prisoner. This was the third time they had been closeted with the convict, who is said to be talking freely.

The murders for which Lepke will be called upon to stand trial are those of Morris Diamond, business manager of Local 138 of the Teamsters Union, and Joseph Rosen, candy store proprietor, who had been forced out of the trucking business by the Buchalter combine.

Diamond was fatally shot at 69th St. and 18th Ave., Brooklyn, last May 25, after he had been questioned about truck racketeering at the offices of the Manhattan District Attorney. He was under subpoena for a second appearance when he was slain.

Rosen also had been quizzed by the authorities and was to be interrogated again when four gunmen entered his store at 725 Sutter Ave., Brooklyn, on Sept. 13, 1936. They pumped bullets into him and fled."

The prosecutor not only assured the public of petitioner's guilt, but proceeded to quote a purported acknowledgment by him of guilt. On October 31, 1940, the New York World-Telegram said that Mr. O'Dwyer announced to the press that he had developed an iron-clad case of murder against petitioner; that he had discussed the facts of the case with petitioner at Leavenworth, and that petitioner having acknowledged his guilt to the District Attorney had agreed "to buy his life by turning state's evidence as the far lesser Abe Reles and small fry of Murder, Inc. already have done". The article continued:

"It is known that Mr. O'Dwyer and Captain Frank C. Bals, who commands detectives working on the Murder, Inc., case, left Brooklyn together on Oct. 22 for Kansas City.

And today it was reported that Mr. O'Dwyer made two secret journeys to Leavenworth to talk with Lepke before he and Captain Bals returned to the city last Monday.

Previous Report.

It had been previously reported that Lepke probably would talk if that was the only way he could escape the chair, but today's information is the first definite report from a source of such reliability that Lepke's singing was assured.

The argument that convinced Lepke to spill all he knows, to bring to light the deepest secrets of the big shots of the underworld and their alliances with politics, is reported to have been the first degree murder indictment obtained against him by Mr. O'Dwyer.

Mr. O'Dwyer's investigation of Murder, Inc., revealed evidence that Lepke had given 11 murder contracts to this syndicate of retailers of homicide and that seven of the murder orders had been executed satisfactorily.

The indictment against Lepke was for one of these crimes—the slaying of Joseph Rosen to shut his mouth so he could not testify against Lepke.

Victim of Extortionists.

Rosen was forced out of the trucking business by Lepke's extortionists. He was reduced to running a small candy shop at 725 Sutter Ave., Brooklyn. That was where he was killed Sept. 13, 1936. He had a subpoena to appear before the Dewey grand jury in his pocket when gunmen walked in and fired 22 bullets into his body.

Even this did not shake Lepke's silence, as far as could be learned. But then Assistant District Attorney Louis Aldino obtained important corroborative evidence against Lepke and the five men indicted with him for the Rosen Murder. The nature of this evidence is still a closely guarded secret, but it was important enough to cause Mr. O'Dwyer, to exclaim jubilantly:

'At last I've got Lepke and Capone on their way to the chair;'

And whatever the evidence was, it is reported, it was enough to convince Lepke that his only chance to escape frying in the hot seat was to sing—and sing loud."

The World-Telegram story of October 31, 1940, was not a reporter's "scoop". The same story appeared that evening in the conservative New York Sun under these headlines:

"Lepke to Blow Underworld's Lid Off Soon.

Racket Boss Is Reported as Fearful of Death in Electric Chair.

O'Dwyer Shapes His Case.

Brooklyn District Attorney is Gathering Evidence About Candy Shop Murder."

The Mirror, a tabloid, on the same day carried this headline:

"Report Lepke Will 'Sing' to Escape Chair."

And said:

"Louis (Lepke) Buchalter was officially reported last night to be ready to buy his life by revealing to District Attorney O'Dwyer of Brooklyn all he knows about the underworld.

The report became public following disclosure that O'Dwyer and a high police official have made two secret trips to Leavenworth prison to talk with Lepke.

O'Dwyer recently had the racketeer indicted on the charge of directing the murder of Joseph Rosen in Brooklyn in 1936, one of the 'contract' slayings of the Brooklyn Murder Syndicate. Rosen, formerly in the trucking business but later owner of a small candy store at 725 Sutter Avenue, had been subpoenaed by a Dewey Grand Jury investigating Lepke's activities, when gunmen entered his store and shot him 22 times.

Lepke, under a Federal sentence of 14 years for smuggling dope, and facing an additional 30 years as a trucking racketeer, was declared ready to break his stubborn silence after learning O'Dwyer has obtained important evidence against him in the Rosen murder. Realizing that O'Dwyer is determined to send him to the chair, Lepke decided to follow the example of Abe Reles, former executive of the Murder Syndicate, and 'sing'.

He is said to be ready to tell the inside story of crime as Big Business. 'Big Shots' hitherto immune may be exposed. Officials who have made integrated criminal operations possible on a nation-wide scale are to be identified publicly, Lepke is said to have promised.

Indicted with Lepke in the Rosen murder was Louis Capone, now in Raymond St. jail, Brooklyn.

'At last I've got Lepke and Capone on their way to the chair,' O'Dwyer was reported to have declared before Lepke decided to talk. No hint was forthcoming from O'Dwyer's office last night whether he is willing to bargain with the kingpin racketeer.

Capone is described as the go-between who handed out the Lepke 'contracts' to the Brooklyn syndicate. According to one report, he contributed the corroborative evidence in the Rosen murder."

On April 15, 1940, the New York Mirror said of a then current murder trial, that the crime had been committed at petitioner's direction. The article said in part:

"The specific charge is the slaying of George Rudnick, a police informer, found stabbed 54 times with an ice pick, in his car on Jefferson Ave. between Central and Evergreen Aves., Brooklyn. In a pocket of Rudnick's coat was a letter, signed by an investigator, thanking Rudnick for 'the information your gave me'. Authorities assert Louis (Lepke) Buchalter ordered the killing and that the letter was put there on Lepke's order as a threat to other informers."

On April 15, 1940, the Times, in an article based on an interview with the District Attorney of Kings County, referred to petitioner's co-defendant in this case, Capone, as "the go-between who accepted orders from Lepke and other gangsters for murders they wanted performed and passed the orders on to the actual killers". The article said that Penn had been murdered because gangsters had confused him with Orlovsky, "a witness against Louis (Lepke) Buchalter in District Attorney Thomas E. Dewey's investigation of Lepke's racket empire".

On April 13, 1940, the New York Mirror said:

"Lepke Linked to Syndicate Killing.

Louis (Lepke) Buchalter was directly implicated yesterday in a Brooklyn murder syndicate execution, according to an announcement from District Attorney O'Dwyer's office."

The article quoted an affidavit supposedly in the possession of the prosecutor which charged petitioner with the murder of one Diamond.

On April 16, 1940, the New York press again purported to relate secret proceedings in the office of the District Attorney of Kings County, and said in part:

"Meanwhile, the puppet-master Louis (Lepke) Buchalter was spot-lighted today in new developments in the Brooklyn probe into Murder, Inc., when a 'singing' ghost linked the racketeer to still another murder.

Now Linked to Three.

Buchalter was connected Saturday with two killings, either of which may lead to first degree murder indictments and eventually to the Sing Sing death house. A third was uncovered yesterday and linked to the arch-plotter and today the whole force of Kings County District Attorney William F. O'Dwyer's inquiry was turned on strengthening his case against Lepke.

Mr. O'Dwyer's men were out today to locate two key witnesses to fill in the details in the picture painted of Lepke's homicidal past. One of the witnesses is a former school teacher turned racketeer and the other one of Lepke's former errand boys.

* * * * * *

Teacher-Gangster.

The first witness sought by Mr. O'Dwyer's men, the former school teacher, abandoned his profession to turn racketeer and link himself with Lepke. He turned on Lepke after a friend of his was slain.

The second man was a bail bondsman who served Lepke as an errand boy."

Petitioner asserts that the references, in this and many similar articles, to missing witnesses were falsely and calculatedly made for the purpose not only of preparing public sentiment against him, but as a prelude to the introduction upon his trial of the witness Rubin whose perjury was important in the establishment of a prima facie case against petitioner.

On May 20, 1940, the New York Mirror quoted an official as asserting that the authorities had received conclusive proof of "a direct tie-up between the Brooklyn Murder Syndicate and Louis Lepke Buchalter * * * ."

On August 6, 1940, the Mirror quoted the trial assistant for the District Attorney as assuring a Supreme Court Justice that a female witness could not be released for fear that "she too might be executed on orders from Lepke". Petitioner was then, as he had at all times since 1939 been, in the custody of Federal authorities.

On May 16, 1941, petitioner was arraigned upon the indictment on which he was subsequently tried. On that same day the New York World-Telegram said of him:

"LEPKE WOULD TELL OF U. S. CRIME RING.

Official, Labor Chief Might
Be Implicated.

Louis (Lepke) Buchalter is negotiating to turn informer and betray the inmost secrets of the magnates of crime who dominate the rackets of America, the World-Telegram learned today.

This newspaper learned that squealers have informed District Attorney William O'Dwyer that Lepke was in a position to deliver a nationally prominent labor leader on a murder charge, a noted public official of New York City on a conspiracy charge, and a close relative of a very high federal office holder as a front man for at least two of the six men credited with controlling racketeering throughout the United States.

Before he was laid by the heels on a federal dope ring conviction Lepke was one of the most powerful racketeers in the country, a member of the highest council of the rackets industry. And if Lepke really talks, the lid's off the underworld.

The status of the negotiations remained a closely guarded secret today, but the World-Telegram learned that already there have been a series of conferences between representatives of District Attorney William O'Dwyer of Brooklyn and Lepke's relatives and attorneys.

Lepke's price is freedom from prosecution on the murder charge he now faces in the Murder, Inc., debacle in Brooklyn and commutation of the 30-to-60-year sentence hanging over him for extortion in the flour-trucking industry in Manhattan, the World-Telegram is informed.

If he got his price Lepke would be a free man when he finished his federal term at Leavenworth. He will be eligible for parole from Leavenworth in about nine years.

Calls Price Too High.

However, District Attorney O'Dwyer is understood to feel that Lepke's price is too high. It is understood that it has been suggested to his representatives that the best deal Lepke could hope to get would allow him to plead guilty to murder in the second degree in the Brooklyn case and serve the 20-to-life term on his plea concurrently with the 30-to-60-year term in the flour-trucking racket. This would make Lepke eligible for parole in about 17 years. He is now about 43" (R. 83-4).

The Mirror and the News carried the same story the next day.

Thus the prosecutor's office, on the very eve of the date originally set for his trial, falsely claimed that petitioner had confessed to the prosecutor his guilt of this murder, and as being willing to implicate high City and Government officials in an effort to avoid the punishment of death which, according to all the newspapers, he acknowledged was his own due.

Public sentiment and prejudice were thus deliberately and wrongfully aroused.

When petitioner was brought in for arraignment in the Kings County Court, he was manacled, and a cordon of police had been placed around the Court House, as well as in the corridors, and in the courtroom. Newspaper photographers were admitted in the courtroom and were permitted to take photographs throughout the actual arraignment. Naturally, all this resulted in sensational publicity. The arraignment was adjourned so that petitioner might confer with members of his family in an effort to obtain counsel. But the nature of the custody in which petitioner was held was such that the courtroom resembled an arsenal, and even the Court was moved to express criticism on the score that the measures were so extreme as to prevent him from having any consultation with members of his family (S. M., Arraignment, May 9, 1941, 3-6).

On the adjourned date, the dramatic performance was repeated, except that this time counsel appeared with defendant, and the number of armed guards had been reduced somewhat. But the newspaper photographers were again present in force and again permitted to take photographs of the actual proceedings. Perhaps in fear that the reduction of the number of guards might diminish the extent of the publicity, the Assistant District Attorney took the occasion to make a speech, wholly irrelevant to the arraignment, in which he said, obviously for the benefit of the many newspaper reporters present, that a "milestone" had been reached in law enforcement and that petitioner whom he described by an alias ("Lepke") used throughout the newspaper publicity, had at last been brought before the bar of justice to answer for his crimes (S. M., Arraignment, May 16, 1941, 4). The result sought for was achieved: widespread and prejudicial publicity continued.

In July, 1941, petitioner was advised that the trial would begin on August 4, 1941. By that time, it was apparent that Mr. William O'Dwyer, the then District Attorney of Kings County, would be nominated by the Democratic party as its candidate for Mayor of the City of New York.

In this situation, and believing that because of the unprecedented inflammatory publicity directed against him, he could not obtain a fair trial in Kings County, and that the probability of the candidacy of the District Attorney for the office of Mayor would further minimize the possibility of a fair trial by casting the entire case into the arena of local politics, petitioner's attorneys moved for a change of venue (R. 76 et seq.). The motion was denied (R. 167, 168). No separate, intermediate appeal from that decision was available under the New York Criminal Code. The reason assigned by the Justice of the Kings County Supreme Court for the denial of the motion was (R. 165, 166) that it was to be assumed that the publicity adverse to petitioner was state-wide, and, therefore, ran the implication, no less prejudiced vicinage than Kings County could be found. The motion was denied, although out of two hundred residents of Kings County interviewed at random by a trained investigator, a member of the Bar whose integrity was beyond dispute, one hundred and sixty-four said unhesitantly that they believed petitioner guilty, only two professed to hold the opinion that he was not guilty, and only thirty-four asserted that they had no set opinion of his guilt or innocence (R. 112 et seq.). The names and addresses of the persons interviewed were given (R. 116 et seq.).

On August 4, 1941, the case was called for trial at the County Court of Kings County before Hon. Franklin Taylor, a Judge of that Court (S. M. 2). A Special or "Blue Ribbon" Panel of two hundred and fifty talesmen had been called. By this time, the District Attorney had been nominated for the office of Mayor. Judge Taylor, who was to preside at the trial, also was a candidate for re-election. Had the case proceeded to trial at that time, it might well have been concluded before the political campaign had actively begun. Before the District Attorney's candidacy for Mayor had become a fact, the District Attorney had desired the case to be tried in August. When, in August, however, his candidacy had become a fact, he preferred to begin the trial in September. When application was made by the District Attorney for adjournment of the trial until September 15, 1941 (S. M. 35), counsel for defendants, including petitioner, objected (S. M. 38 et seq.), and stated pointedly to the Court that they were ready to proceed with the trial on that day (S. M. 38, 39); that they feared that, if the case was adjourned until the middle of September, the time of beginning the active political campaign, it would become a "political football" (S. M. 39-45); and that, if the Court desired to serve the convenience of jurors by adjourning the trial until after the heat of the summer, it ought, in fairness to the Court's own reputation, postpone it until the first day after the Election (S. M. 43). The sincerity of counsel was matched by the dissimulation of the presiding Judge who said, in words eloquent for their superficial aspect of fairness and memorable for their complete lack of it (S. M. 54):

> "The Court will grant the motion for a continuance of the trial until after Labor Day, but it cannot go over until after election as that would subordinate the trial to the exigencies of a political campaign, which is unthinkable."

On August 5, 1941, at the time when petitioner's counsel protested against further delay, they indicated to the Court that more delay involved the risk of more newspaper attacks upon defendants, and particularly upon petitioner (S. M. 50-53). The Judge assured counsel that the delay would be helpful because it would give the community an opportunity to forget the prejudice engendered by newspaper hostility. This was belied at once by immediately succeeding events.

On August 25, 1941, a tabloid newspaper, the New York Mirror, began the publication on a page specially devoted to residents of Kings County, of a "series" of daily articles which asserted that petitioner had been guilty of twenty-seven murders, including the murder of Rosen, the victim referred to in this indictment. They described petitioner in lurid terms, as the leader of a notorious group of murderers, who had made countless millions of dollars from his criminal activities. These articles completely destroyed any possibility that a fair trial could be accorded petitioner in Kings County. Their circulation was restricted to Kings County; they appeared in a special edition procurable only in Brooklyn. The degree of their prejudicial quality, the extent to which the reader would be incensed against petitioner by them, cannot be described. But since they comprise a part of the record, they are available for the inspection of the Court.

Some excerpts from this series are included here, for the convenience of the Court. The headline and the introductory paragraph, which constitutes the sub-title, of the opening article on August 25, 1941, said:

> "Murder, Inc. Expires as Lepke Goes on Trial.
>
> Today, Arthur Mefford presents the first installment of a thrilling new series of true-fact articles divulging the behind-the-scene workings of 'Murder, Inc.' the Brooklyn Killers—who murdered to order for rates as low as a dollar—and the crime-packed life story of the gang's boss Louis 'Lepke' Buchalter, who goes on trial for murder on Sept. 15. The murderous crew's deadly power has been broken by Brooklyn's crusading district attorney, William O'Dwyer, but the complete story of their machinations is revealed here for the first time in complete, authentic detail:"

The article said in part:

> "For weeks the underworld had been buzzing with reports that Lepke feared for his life. That $50,000 reward was real money, and most of the fugitive's pals were rats of his own kind, men who would kill even one of their own for far less than that.
>
> The underworld, too, said that Lepke feared he might eventually fall before the barking guns of law enforcement officers, just as Dillinger and many others of the nation's public enemies had died.

Former racket associates—triggermen and muscle men—knew that Lepke was not near as tough—personally—as he was reputed to be. He was a man whom the New York police accused of 27 murders, cold-blooded gangland assassinations, but never had they been able actually to place him on the scene with a gun in his hand.

'Lepke hires his killing done,' had always been the police excuse for turning him loose.

* * * * * *

Everybody knew that Lepke was on the spot, and nobody knew it better than the fugitive himself. For months it had been whispered that prison bars would look like a sanctuary to the man who had drained millions from industry through labor strikes and countless millions more from vast dope-peddling interests.

All that bothered Lepke at this stage of his evil career was the possibility he would not be given the opportunity to make his way safely into some official haven."

The second article started with this paragraph:

"'Big Shot' Surrenders to Tinkle of Broken Glass.

Murder, Inc., the bloody handed ring of New York mobsters which made killing a profession, is as dead as any of its 83-known victims. Brooklyn's crusading District Attorney William O'Dwyer, has seen to that. And Louis (Lepke) Buchalter, erstwhile Public Enemy No. 1, who employed the mob to handle his cruel 'trigger work,' soon stands trial for the murder of an honest, hard working candy store owner. In yesterday's instalment of this intimate, complete story of 'Lepke's' amazing rise to gangland's throne, was told of the intricate underworld arrangements made through Walter Winchell, Daily Mirror columnist, for his surrender."

This article ended with these questions in bold-face type:

"Who is this Lepke? Where did he come from? How did he get the name Lepke; rise to an underworld throne? The answer to these questions are in tomorrow's issue of the Daily Mirror's Brooklyn Section. Don't miss it!"

Other headlines in the series read:

"LEPKE PUTS LABOR RACKETS ON BIG BUSINESS BASIS.

Louis (Lepke) Buchalter, big boss gangster who never raised his voice, but whose soft-spoken orders packed a terrific wallop—and death if they were disobeyed—was a Lower East Side graduate of the Prohibition Era Crime School. How he started his deadly reign, first clashed with the law and formed his unholy alliance with Jacob (Gurrah) Shapiro, skimpy-brained but strong-muscled ghetto hoodlum; and how he virtually defied the authorities for two decades until he surrendered to head G-Man J. Edgar Hoover, through the collaboration of Walter Winchell, famous Daily Mirror columnist, has been related in three earlier instalments of this intimate, inside-fact article."

"LEATHER TRADE DRIVEN OUT OF CITY BY LEPKE GREED.

How Louis (Lepke) Buchalter, soft-spoken big-shot racketeer, rose from his humble Lower East Side tenement home to New York's underworld throne on a ladder runged with bloodshed and terrorism, and how as America's Public Enemy No. 1—with a reward of $50,000, dead or alive—on his head, he surrendered to G-Men through Walter Winchell, famous Daily Mirror columnist, have been related earlier in this true fact narrative. Yesterday's instalment told of his tie-up with 'Little Augie' Orgen, once powerful East Side mob leader, and of Little Augie's sudden death in a rain of lead while walking along a ghetto street with his bodyguard, the later gang-slain Jack (Legs) Diamond."

The installment on August 30th began with the headline:

"LEPKE BRINGS MURDER AND VIOLENCE TO FUR TRADE."

And proceeded in part as follows:

"Louis (Lepke) Buchalter, described by New York's famous racket buster, Tom Dewey, as America's No. 1 Public Enemy; a hoodlum who, through widespread bloodshed and terrorism extorted millions of dollars annually from the city's legitimate business men, soon will go on trial in Brooklyn on a first degree murder indictment. He is charged with hiring killers to slay Joseph Rosen, fur trucker whom he forced out of business, in Rosen's humble candy store. Lepke feared Rosen might appear as a witness against him in connection with the trucking racket—one of the many he dominated. Brooklyn's fighting District Attorney, William O'Dwyer, will try to prove Lepke hired the infamous crime syndicate, Murder, Inc., to kill Rosen. The story continues:

By Arthur Mefford.

So long as Brooklyn's fighting District Attorney William O'Dwyer is not worried about the eventual outcome of Louis (Lepke) Buchalter's forthcoming trial for the murder of Joseph Rosen, we shall drop the subject for the time being to get back to Lepke's earlier racket activities."

On September 1st, two weeks before the opening of the trial, an article in the series was printed under the headline:

"'Bath of Lye' Persuaded Furrier to Bow to Lepke.

The entrance of Louis (Lepke) Buchalter, boss hoodlum, into New York's multi million dollar fur industry, and the reign of slashings and bludgeoning and acid throwing which he inspired, has already been related in earlier instalments of this inside story of the gangster once described as America's Public Enemy No. 1. Only a few of the legitimate business men ruined by Lepke and his mob had the courage to defy him. And of these, old Julius Bernfeld was the bravest. How Lepke, now facing the electric chair on a murder indictment, singled out old Julius to make an example of, was related yesterday."

The headline and introductory paragraph on September 2nd said:

"Lepke, Freed in Fur Plot, Moved In on Truck Union.

Louis (Lepke) Buchalter's bid to dominate the entire New York business world hit a snag, temporarily, after his ruthless gangsters had seared the eyes out of old Julius Bernfeld. Greatly to his surprise, Lepke now facing trial on a first degree murder indictment in Brooklyn, found himself and his pal, 'Gurrah' Shapiro, on trial in Federal Court for conspiracy in the fur racket. But he knew all the answers—he thought. Government witnesses were terrorized to the point where even Judge Knox, presiding, called them liars from the bench. Lepke grinned at the Court's discomfiture."

The September 4th story, referring to itself as "factual", began:

"With Greed as Creed Lepke Peddled Snow.

Louis (Lepke) Buchalter, soon to face a jury in Brooklyn on a first-degree murder indictment, made one very disastrous failure during his long career as boss of New York's underworld union rackets. That was when his hired killers failed to make sure ex-schoolteacher Max Rubin was dead when they shot him through the brain as he emerged from a Bronx subway station. Rubin, who had served Lepke faithfully for almost two years, recovered, though surgeons said he was doomed to die. A bullet through his brain didn't still his tongue, however. He told District Attorney Dewey all he knew of Lepke's racket activities, and gave the Federal authorities their first tip that Lepke was in the drug racket."

And ended:

"Lepke imported dope, not by the ounce, but by tons. How the Government finally proved Max Rubin's revelations of this comes as a big surprise—a literal 'bang,' in tomorrow's installment, exclusive in the Daily Mirror."

On September 5th, Mefford's article began:

"Blast in Dope Plant Bares Lepke's Ties to Smugglers.

Lepke wasn't satisfied with having extorted millions out of unions and employers alike in the city's vast garment manufacturing and trucking trades. Even after the first disastrous failure of his entire career of crime—the recovery of ex-schoolteacher Max Rubin from the effects of a bullet through the brain he didn't worry, so powerful were his political connections. Rubin revealed many of his racket operations, including Lepke's venture into counterfeiting, and then dope smuggling, but couldn't furnish proof. How his story was corroborated follows:"

And ended:

"How did Lepke corrupt U. S. officials to make his dream empire of dope come true? Read the answer in tomorrow's Daily Mirror."

The series proceeded to quote witnesses in the custody of the prosecutor as about to testify to petitioner's guilt in his impending trial. These articles are not only lurid beyond description, but convey to the public the assurance of petitioner's guilt at the same time that they depict him, altogether untruthfully, of having committed many other crimes. The fact that he had never been convicted of any of those crimes is acknowledged only insofar as the acknowledgment is urged as a tribute to the ability and honesty of the Brooklyn prosecutor whose assurance of his own ability to convict petitioner of the crime of murder was broadcast.

Because the Mirror stories removed all possibility of a fair hearing for petitioner in Brooklyn at a time when the articles were still being published, a new motion for a change of venue was made because of their publication, and because their circulation was limited to Kings County (R. 155 et seq.). The motion was denied, without opinion (R. 175, 176).

The very application for a change of venue received only the pretense of a hearing, not even the pretense of consideration. The petitioner was compelled to proceed to trial at a time when the issues in the case would—as the prosecutor well knew—become subordinated to the issues of a political campaign in which both the prosecutor and the presiding Judge were candidates for election. Time and place were manipulated by the prosecution to prevent a fair trial—to afford only the "form" of one.

On September 15, 1942, the "trial" began in the sense that the process of impanelling a jury was started (S. M. 58, 65, 66). Five weeks passed before a jury was impaneled (R. 181-192). When a jury was impaneled, it was neither fair nor impartial. Although the case had been ordered tried before a "Blue Ribbon" panel which is supposedly composed only of talesmen who have sworn to their ability to disregard newspaper impressions, yet an original panel of 250 was exhausted and a new panel of 100 was required before the selection process had been completed (S. M. 2019-2024). In the course of their interrogation, at least one-half of the talesmen called readily admitted that so fixed was their opinion, so strong their prejudice against petitioner in consequence of hostile newspaper propaganda, that they could not sit as impartial jurors. Petitioner asserts here, as he did in the Court of Appeals of New York, that those talesmen, who ultimately were selected as impartial, were prohibited by the Court from expressing their true state of mind, were inhibited by the Trial Judge from admitting the prejudice against petitioner and his co-defendants which had been instilled in their minds by newspaper and local hostility.

Talesmen were threatened with excoriation by the Trial Judge if they admitted prejudice against petitioner.

The process of selecting a jury began at a slow pace. Most of the talesmen said that they were prejudiced and could not sit impartially in the hearing of the case. The Judge himself said that the Mirror articles, particularly, were "RAISING HAVOC WITH THE JURY" (S. M. 614). Suddenly the Court apparently became aware that the leisurely pace of selecting a jury was the subject of adverse newspaper comment. The tempo at once changed. When talesmen asserted that they could not sit impartially because they were prejudiced against defendants the Judge said to the defense that the mere fact of asking about the talesmen's prejudices "is clearly establishing an escape medium for the juror if he does not want to serve. You are putting the words in his mouth. * * * You are doing the thinking for the talesmen" (see Fitzgerald, S. M. 335-6; also Kendy, S. M. 430). A talesman who asserted his inability to be fair was charged with "unwillingness to serve". Another heard himself thus described by the Judge: "i don't think this man is mentally fitted to sit on a jury" (Cone, S. M. 439). This same characterization was also applied to still another talesman who was ordered by the Court to "get out" (Herrick, S. M. 542). Defense counsel remonstrated that these remarks were calculated to intimidate talesmen and prevent a free revelation of their prejudices (Herrick, S. M. 543), but similar judicial comment was repeated in the presence of the panel. Talesmen who said that they would be embarrassed to serve because of friendship with the prosecution or defense counsel were berated as "wholly unfit to have a job as a juror", and as being hostile "to the Court's questions" (Rosenthal, S. M. 726-7). When a talesman was peremptorily challenged by the prosecution the Judge read into the record some prepared remarks on the abuse of the exercise of peremptory challenges (Cleary, S. M. 1295-6; also Kendy, S. M. 426), and his comments were so worded as to furnish the basis for a newspaper story, which sounded as though he was criticizing the defense for deliberately delaying the process of selection, and was so reported.

During the course of the jury selection all thirty peremptory challenges accorded to petitioner and his co-defendants were exhausted before the tenth juror was selected. The Trial Judge erroneously overruled ten challenges for cause tendered by the defense against talesmen who obviously had been prejudiced against petitioner and his co-defendants. (The Trial Judge invoked a completely different standard in relation to the challenges proffered by the prosecution and erroneously sustained at least six challenges for cause offered by the prosecution.) In consequence petitioner and his co-defendants were prevented from offering peremptory challenges against the two talesmen, Rorke and Link. They were obviously prejudiced against petitioner and his co-defendants. Link had been on the "Mr. District Attorney" radio series (S. M. 2689); Rorke was the nephew of a prominent local police official (S. M. 2063).

Link had been excused by Mr. Turkus, the trial assistant (S. M. 2688, 2689), in an earlier murder trial, because at that time Mr. Turkus said that he thought that Link's employment by the radio program "Mr. District Attorney" would make it unfair as against defendants in that case for him to sit as a juror. In the voir dire examination of Link in this case Mr. Turkus, interrogating Link at a time when Mr. Turkus knew that defendants had exhausted their peremptory challenges, said in effect to Link: "Would you be prejudiced against me because in the earlier case I thought that you would be unfit as a juror since you might not have been able to be fair to the defendants?" (S. M. 2689). Link said that he would not be prejudiced against the prosecutor and so he was seated.

Rorke was chosen against the background of the knowledge of the trial assistant that in that same earlier case, Rorke, too, had been a talesman (S. M. 2603, 2610), had there heard the name of Capone, one of petitioner's co-defendants in this case, and had been excused on a peremptory challenge (S. M. 2612) by defendants in that case because of his close relationship with a high police official.

Petitioner asserts that, in consequence of the unwarranted insistence by the prosecution that the case be tried at a place where it was impossible for him to obtain a fair trial since the community had been conditioned against giving him that, and at a time when the issues in the case were deliberately subordinated to the exigencies of a political campaign, the effort to obtain an impartial jury became a laborious futility. Five weeks were spent in the meaningless mouthing of fine phrases about lack of prejudice when, in reality, every talesman called was obsessed by a prejudice springing from his own literacy, originating in attacks sponsored by the prosecution and so ingeniously conveyed, so dramatically expressed, that no human being could fail to be affected. Though all the trappings of a fair trial were present in the examination and selection of the jury, the effort to select an impartial jury, assuming that such men existed, was successfully subverted by the Trial Judge, who used exhibitions of simulated temper to stop talesmen from admitting the prejudice they entertained and who spoke in terms of helpless self-righteousness against the exercise by defense counsel of that minimum degree of acumen which showed itself in the use of peremptory challenges. And by unjustly overruling challenges for cause the Trial Judge ultimately set the stage for the seating as jurors of men who, because exposed to the influence of professional association and family relationship, should never have sat upon the trial of a capital case.

Petitioner asserts that a fair jury was not impanelled because it could not have been impanelled in the County of Kings in September, 1941.

The trial itself deteriorated into a mere sham. Before it started the trial assistant, Mr. Turkus, had assured petitioner's brother, Dr. Emanuel Buchalter, that petitioner ought to make a "deal" with the prosecution. Mr. Turkus said to Dr. Buchalter (R. 11): "I don't need any evidence or witnesses to try this case, all I need is the indictment and a summation." He assured him that local prejudice against petitioner was so strong that the mere making of the charge against petitioner would result in his conviction. It is true that Mr. Turkus denied (R. 123, 124) that he had made that statement, but it is significant that he contented himself with a mere denial; he did not cause any investigation of the incident; no charge of perjury was lodged against petitioner's brother. Mr. Turkus later became a candidate for County Judge, and largely based his own campaign on the conviction of petitioner.

In proving a prima facie case against petitioner the People relied only on witnesses who, with one exception, had confessed to the prosecutor participation in the murder of the victim or in other murders committed in Kings County. Despite the confessions by these witnesses of murder, they had not been indicted. For more than a year before the trial they had been in police custody, not at a jail, but at first-rate hotels (R. 761, 762, 1776, 1876, 1877, 2230, 2231), and some of them had been kept together (R. 1023-7). They were, therefore, witnesses who took the stand under the heaviest possible dominance; they knew that upon satisfactory performance as witnesses depended their lives. Each expressed the hope that the prosecution would spare his life; all denied that any promise had been made to them. They had received only a threat from the prosecution, and the threat was that should they tell ever so small a lie they would certainly be sent to the electric chair. So the prosecution presented those witnesses as men who could not tell a lie (R. 797, 799, 2343) because they had been assured of death were they to fabricate. These witnesses were Berger, Tannenbaum and Bernstein,—all three notorious professional malefactors.

The witness Rubin was the exception. He had not confessed murder to the District Attorney. But he admitted, as he took the stand, that such was his hatred of petitioner that his sole purpose in life was to live for the day when petitioner would be executed (R. 1494, 2399-2401).

In substance the People's case charged that petitioner had directed Berger to identify the victim Rosen to the defendant Weiss (R. 1804-5, 1807, 1811, 1964, 1974, 2053) and that Weiss, through defendant Capone, had arranged for Bernstein to steal an automobile and, after Weiss and others had shot Rosen, drive the assassins from the place of the shooting. Bernstein, who was on the stand for about a week, never mentioned petitioner. He said that instructions to steal an automobile were given him by Capone, in the company of Weiss, on Friday, September 11, 1936 (R. 702-3, 1166-8), at one o'clock in the afternoon (R. 1160-4). Berger testified that he had not been directed by petitioner to identify the victim to Weiss, the alleged assailant, until six o'clock on that same day (R. 1962-4), and that it was nine or ten o'clock in the evening before Weiss traveled with Berger from Manhattan to Brooklyn in order to see Rosen (R. 1971-4), and that it was not until about ten o'clock that night that Weiss spoke to Capone (R. 2182), presumably for the purpose of having Capone instruct Bernstein to steal an automobile.

There was, therefore, grave and irreconcilable inconsistency between the testimony of these two key witnesses, Bernstein and Berger. The Trial Judge in his charge in effect instructed the jury to disregard the inconsistency and to assume that petitioner had done earlier preparatory work (R. 3975-7, 3989-90).

Other inconsistencies in the testimony of prosecution witnesses were nullified by the Court's charge in which the jury was told to disregard cross-examination because it was "hit or miss stuff" (R. 3903).

These witnesses, who were ready to testify to anything under the impulse of self-preservation, frequently were confronted with prior contradictions from the records of other cases in which they had testified. They apparently had been schooled to acknowledge earlier testimony at the same time that they refused to recall what it was. Each of them, when his attention was directed to earlier testimony, anticipated the question with the same pat answer: "If it's in the book, I said it." The Trial Judge told the jury that that answer ought to be accepted as frank and truthful for the reason that even defense counsel found it necessary to refer to the stenographic transcript for the exact language of the proceedings of the previous day (R. 3894). Thus the jury was told that memory should not be expected to be better for experienced facts than for narrated matter. And this consciously false psychological instruction was given for the purpose of extricating the prosecutor's witnesses from their many past and present perjuries.

Since the prosecution admitted that petitioner had no part in the actual commission of the alleged murder (R. 240), it became important to attempt to prove motive. For that purpose the prosecution called the witness Rubin, who testified (R. 1284 et seq.) about the reputed assistance rendered to the Amalgamated Clothing Workers Union by gangsters (R. 1290, 1296-1300, 1306), and then to petitioner's alleged motive as against the victim Rosen (R. 1322-67). On his direct examination he ascribed to petitioner fear that the alleged victim, Rosen, might incriminate petitioner in the commission of a misdemeanor (R. 1364-5), and that, therefore, petitioner had expressed impatience with Rosen (R. 1365) and that by innuendo petitioner had threatened Rosen. Throughout a long cross-examination of that witness, the prosecution suppressed a prior contradictory statement of the witness. It made a veiled reference to the possibility that a prior statement might have been given, by the question as to whether, on a prior occasion, Rubin had told the truth to other prosecutors (R. 1486). The form of the question was objectionable and objection to it was sustained. No further effort was made by the prosecution to reveal the existence of such a prior contradictory statement. But such a prior contradictory statement did exist, which completely exculpated petitioner from the guilt asserted against him by Rubin's testimony on his direct examination when first called as a witness, and in which statement Rubin had assured the authorities that petitioner was not implicated in this crime. And that statement had been made at a time when Rubin was accusing petitioner of many other crimes, and had conceived his hatred of petitioner. About a week after he had first been called, Rubin was recalled as a prosecution witness (R. 2371), and then as a slight concession to petitioner's demand (R. 2377) the fact of the existence of this prior statement was revealed, and a portion of the statement was dictated by the Trial Judge into the record (R. 2381-8).

Then, to avoid the whole force of this proof, the Trial Judge assured the jury that it could assume that the prior exculpatory statement was a lie and that the witness' testimony incriminatory of petitioner, was true (R. 3947). He told the jury that the "lie" was excusable, citing "Les Miserables" as a parallel (R. 2404-6). He did not permit the jury to consider whether the exculpation might have been truthful, and the testimony false.

As the prosecution witnesses were called, it developed that they were in custody at local hotels, some of them at the same hotel (R. 1022-7, 2338-40, 2349), and although they said they were denied an opportunity to confer with each other in advance of their testimony, yet the factual situation, as developed on cross-examination, indicated the possibility, even the probability, of such preparatory conferences. The Trial Judge instructed the jury that they must assume that such opportunity did not exist; that they must assume that such conferences did not take place (R. 3956).

The credibility of these witnesses depended greatly on whether they had been promised rewards for their testimony. Despite their denial of such promises, the jury might have assumed that such promises had been made, and to a not negligible extent might have resulted in an effort on the part of these confessed murderers to shape their testimony in a way which would satisfy the prosecution.

The District Attorney, in summation, which counsel for the defendants were restrained from interrupting under penalty of being held in contempt of court (R. 3860), was permitted to pledge his personal integrity on his assurance to the jury that such promises had not been made, that rewards would not be forthcoming (R. 3829, 3830). Aside from the impropriety implicit in such a personal pledge, the fact is that it was false, for rewards were made soon after the end of the trial. Each of the murderers was turned loose,—scot free—free of any charge; each was given substantial sums from the public funds.

The prosecutor also was permitted to tell the jury in summation, and when defense counsel were under the same restraint, that everybody knew that the defense was false, and no one knew it better than defense counsel, who were the recipients of tainted money which they had received from their clients as fees (R. 3803), and that if defense counsel would not acknowledge it, at least every lawyer spectator in the courtroom was sure of it (R. 3804). Again, by the technique of referring to his opening to the jury and repeating portions of that opening and asking the jury to answer for themselves whether the defendants had brought anyone to court to dispute portions of prosecution testimony (R. 3785, 3786 et seq.), the trial assistant was permitted to destroy the constitutional immunity, which is the same in New York as in the federal courts.

Petitioner should have been afforded at least an opportunity to offer a defense. He, however, was denied even the pretense of such an opportunity.

The murder alleged in the indictment was said to have occurred on September 13, 1936. Before that date, petitioner had already been indicted for alleged violation of the Sherman Anti-Trust Act, for which he was tried in the United States District Court for the Southern District of New York, in October and November, 1936. Petitioner, at that time, and for several months before September, 1936, had been the subject of continuous surveillance by police officers of the City of New York. It was the theory of the prosecution, in the present case, that petitioner had contrived the murder of the victim by directing Berger to identify the victim to the co-defendant Weiss (R. 1804-5, 1807, 1811, 1964, 1974, 2053). It was further contended that petitioner received an oral report of the murder from Weiss in the presence of Tannenbaum (R. 2223-4). These alleged conversations, in direction of the murder and in expression of approval of the murder, were said to have been carried on by petitioner immediately before and after the date of the murder, at an office at 200 Fifth Avenue, New York City.

Petitioner contended, upon the trial, that official police reports existed, regularly kept by police officers of the City of New York, recording their surveillance of petitioner during this period, and that reference to the contents of those reports (if unexpurgated) would demonstrate that, as police officers of the City of New York knew and recorded at that time, petitioner did not see or talk with the witnesses thus produced against him upon the trial (R. 2140-56). Petitioner caused these official police reports, known as "D.D.4's", to be subpoenaed, and produced at the court (R. 2155-6), and requested an opportunity for his counsel to offer them in evidence or at least to examine them so that the names of the police officers could be learned and their identity established, to the end that they could be subpoenaed and caused to testify as to their knowledge of petitioner's activities during the period in question (R. 2140-56). Upon the objection and opposition of the prosecutor, the Trial Judge refused to permit petitioner's counsel to see these reports (R. 2152) and refused himself to look at them even for the limited purpose of revealing to petitioner's counsel the identity of the police officers (R. 2149-50). As a main reason for the refusal, the Court said that the reports were "confidential", and that to reveal their contents would result in communicating to defense counsel confidential information about other crimes (R. 2149).

The Trial Court's charge to the jury was so unfair that it was characterized by Judge Loughran, in his opinion in the Court of Appeals review of this case, as an argument and summation for the prosecution.

In the State of New York, appeals to the court of last resort, the Court of Appeals, in capital cases, are mandatory, and that tribunal is obligated by the New York State Constitution to review the facts as well as the law in a capital case.

That review was not afforded petitioner by the majority of that Court.

The vote for affirmance in the Court of Appeals was four to three. Two opinions were written for affirmance, one by Judge Conway in which Judges Finch and Lewis concurred, the other by Chief Judge Lehman. The Chief Judge did not concur in Judge Conway's opinion.

Judge Conway's opinion contains not a judicial review of the facts, but a review, as Chief Judge Lehman said in a part of his opinion which he himself italicized, of the "facts which the people claim were established by the testimony of these witnesses". Judge Rippey (dissenting) said that Judge Conway's opinion was "a summary of the contentions of the people".

The opinion of Judge Conway became an opinion for affirmance because Chief Judge Lehman cast his vote for affirmance. But, in doing that, Chief Judge Lehman admitted that the errors itemized by Judge Loughran in his dissenting opinion had been stated "with characteristic restraint". Those errors received no consideration in the opinion of Judge Conway.

Chief Judge Lehman acknowledged the gravity of the many errors and defects in the case, and said that Judge Loughran had set forth "some". He wrote: "I might have been unwilling if I had been a member of the jury to concur in the result", saying, flatly, that "Evidence coming from a polluted source has failed to remove reasonable doubt of the defendant's guilt from my mind."

The three dissenting Judges expressed their grave doubt of petitioner's guilt. Thus affirmance followed expression of doubt by an actual majority of the Court, in a State where it has always been considered the sacred duty of the Court (in accord with all civilized procedure) to reverse if a majority of the Court entertained doubt of guilt.

Thus, although petitioner's appeal resulted in the publication of extensive opinions by the Court and he was accorded all the outward indicia of a review, he was in fact given only a semblance of it.

Lest this be thought an extravagant commentary on the review accorded petitioner in the State Court of Appeals, petitioner refers to some of those errors analyzed in the opinion of Judge Loughran, the existence of which were acknowledged by the Chief Judge, and the content of which was nowhere refuted in the opinion of the other three Judges who voted to affirm. Judge Loughran said, among other things, that the Trial Judge's comments on the discrepancies between the testimony of Bernstein on the one hand, and Berger and Rubin on the other, invaded the province of the jury. "Thus the last word of the judge withdrew from the jury a vital issue of fact and disposed of it in favor of the people as matter of law. This was obvious error." He said that the Trial Judge invaded the province of the jury by assuring the jury that it could accept Bernstein's testimony that "witnesses were not" afforded preliminary opportunity to confer about their testimony. "The Judge was without power so to invade the province of the jury." He said that the Trial Judge erred in permitting the prosecutor to ask the jury to consider whether the defendants had testified in contradiction of prosecution witnesses. "Since none of the defendants was a witness, the whole point of that argumentation was its erroneous accent upon the assertion by them of their constitutional privilege against compulsory self-incrimination. In our judgment, the exception taken thereto was valid."

He said that the Trial Judge erred in permitting the prosecutor to lend his personal integrity to the support of prosecution witnesses. "A majority of this Court is gravely apprehensive that such diffuse departures by the trial prosecutor from legitimate argument might have unduly prejudiced the jury against the defendants." He said that, although the Judge was obligated to deal fairly with all facts, he had expressly disavowed any intention so to do, at the same time that he instructed the jury to disregard cross-examination, and that "as an inevitable consequence of these conceptions of his function, the Judge's treatment of the proof took on the character of a summation for the people. We will not say such a charge was right." He noted that defendant had proved lack of motive, but that the Trial Judge disregarded defendant's proof and instructed the jury that there was adequate proof of motive as against petitioner, and said: "The Judge was without power so to deal with the effect of evidence as proving the case against Buchalter. At this point again there should have been a presentation of both sides of the issue—and the question of the weight of the evidence also should have been submitted to the jury."

Judge Loughran said that the Trial Judge in consequence of his errors, in consequence of his invasion of the jury's function, had in effect extorted from the jury a finding of petitioner's guilt. "On the whole we find ourselves unable to perceive how the basic finding of Buchalter's distant connection with the actual shooting of Rosen can be taken to have been made by the jury alone. • • • We do not see how the conviction of the defendants can be affirmed without annulling the statute which makes the jury in a criminal case the exclusive judges of questions of fact. Nor do we see how an affirmance is possible without deciding that in a criminal case the Trial Judge in his charge may entirely ignore the evidence and the contentions of the accused unless in the end some request is made for a different handling of the issues."

Judge Rippey, who came to the Court of Appeals with the profound experience of a Federal District Judge's latitude in the trial of criminal cases, thus characterized petitioner's "trial":

> "I also agree with Judge Loughran that the trial was unfair. In my opinion, the conduct of the trial throughout was so grossly unfair as to leave the defendants without even a remote outside chance of any free consideration by the jury of their defenses, so unfair in fact as to render utterly without force the presumption of innocence to which every person charged with a criminal offense is entitled until his guilt is established by legal evidence beyond a reasonable doubt. It does not follow that a new trial should be ordered. There was insufficient legal evidence at the close of the People's case upon which to base a conviction of Capone and the indictment against him should have been dismissed. In spite of the summary of the contentions of the People contained in one of the opinions for affirmance, an analysis of the whole record persuades me that the evidence was insufficient as matter of law to sustain the conviction of any of the defendants of murder in the first degree beyond a reasonable doubt." (Italics supplied.)

Of all this Chief Judge Lehman said:

"As Judge Loughran has, in my opinion, completely demonstrated, the Trial Judge erred at times in ruling on evidence and at times usurped the function of the jury to draw inferences from the evidence and to determine facts. * * * The errors and defects in this case are, it seems clear to me, many. Judge Loughran has set forth some which in his opinion cannot be disregarded. * * * I might wish that the charge had been different * * * I regret many incidents that occurred at the trial. I regret the summation of the prosecuting attorney and his remarks in the course of the trial. I regret some of the rulings of the Trial Judge."

And the Court of Appeals refused to review the question of whether petitioner had been tried before a fair and impartial jury, and whether a change of venue should have been granted.

The widespread attack against petitioner generated by the prosecution before he was brought to trial thus also prevented him from obtaining a fair review of the judgment of conviction.

Petitioner does not here assert that the mere incidence of these errors as such or even their collective existence as mistaken legal rulings in the course of a single trial constitutes the basis for the granting of this petition. Importance is attached to them only to show that in a case where, because of the contrivance of its being held in a hostile community, at a time when hostility originally engendered by newspaper attacks of unprecedented fury was, if anything, exaggerated by the projection of a political campaign into the case, what seemed inevitable at the beginning of the trial—the impossibility of a fair hearing—became the manifest fact during the course of the trial and attended the case even upon its consideration in the State Court of last resort.

There never was even a remote chance that petitioner could secure a fair trial in Kings County in the Fall of 1941. In the selection of the jury there was the first proof that all petitioner could secure would be the outward mechanics of a trial,—not a fair trial. When, during the course of the trial, the Trial Judge by his rulings prevented petitioner from recourse to official records in order to present his defense, usurped the functions of the jury in appraising the credibility of witnesses, substituted unfounded and unwarranted inferences for evidence, and belittled the defense, the unfairness of the Trial Judge became self-evident. When, further, in the course of the case, the Trial Judge prevented so much as a protest against the prosecutor's accusation that the defense was a fraudulent fantasy and that defendants' counsel had consciously accepted tainted money and, at the same time, assured the jury that no promises had been made to prosecution witnesses, further proof was furnished that the trial was conducted only as a mere matter of form. When the Judge, instead of charging the jury on the law, used the function of a charge to argue that the record proved petitioner's guilt, even the outer pretense of a fair trial had collapsed.

Jurisdiction

The jurisdiction of this Court is invoked under Section 344(b), Title 28, U. S. C. (Sec. 237 of the Judicial Code as amended).

The judgment of the County Court of Kings County of the State of New York, as affirmed by the Court of Appeals in that State, is a final judgment, not further reviewable in any Court of the State of New York. The Federal questions herein presented and urged were raised in the State courts, as is evidenced by the statement in the remittitur of the Court of Appeals of the State of New York, as follows:

> "Appellant, in his brief and argument, raised the point that he had been denied his constitutional rights under the Fourteenth Amendment to the Constitution of the United States, and this point was considered and necessarily decided by this Court."

These Federal questions are succinctly set forth in petitioner's brief in support of his motion for a reargument in the Court of Appeals, which is a part of the record before this Court, and which shows that these points were all urged below in the first instance and at first opportunity.

These Federal questions are of substance, and as the brief in support of this petition will develop, were decided in a manner not in accord with the applicable decisions of this Court (Rule 38, subd. 5[a] of the Supreme Court of the United States).

Questions Presented

1. Whether petitioner has been deprived of due process of law by a denial of motions for a change of venue from a place where public opinion had been irrevocably prejudiced against him by a lengthy series of newspaper articles and interviews, and where local passions were inflamed and where prospective jurors had been conditioned to assume his guilt;

2. Whether petitioner was denied due process of law by the refusal of the Court of Appeals of New York to review the rulings of the Trial Judge upon the challenges to prospective jurors and to jurors impaneled, where, by the State Constitution, the Court of Appeals is required to review the facts as well as the law upon an appeal in a capital case; and whether a State statute declaring that the rulings of the Trial Judge upon the challenges to special jurors are not reviewable is constitutional.

3. Whether petitioner was denied due process of law by the refusal to make available to him certain official records of the Police Department of the City of New York so as to permit him to call as witnesses police officers of the City of New York, to the end that such officers might be examined concerning their observations at a time and place vitally material to the charges against petitioner.

4. Whether petitioner was denied due process of law by the repeated unfair rulings and comments of the Trial Court during the cross-examination of witnesses for the prosecution, and by the rulings, comments, charge and conduct of the Trial Court, belittling the defense and improperly construing for the jury the probative force of evidence adduced, so that the jury was misled.

5. Whether petitioner was deprived of due process of law by the refusal of the Trial Court to rebuke and repress improper, prejudicial and untrue statements by the prosecuting attorney in his summation to the jury.

Reasons Relied On for Granting the Writ

Petitioner submits that, although he entered the trial burdened by the reputation of being a notorious enemy of society, yet civilized society, as represented by the State of New York, could well have afforded him a fair and impartial trial, pursuant to due process of law,—the more so because petitioner came into court already under prison sentences extending over his natural life.

Petitioner was deprived of a fair trial because, although there was no need for it, he was tried in a county whose residents had been astutely conditioned to believe him guilty before the trial began. He was tried at a carefully selected time when the trial itself could be exploited in the interests of a local political campaign in which both the prosecutor and the Trial Judge were candidates for high elective offices. He was tried before a jury which was not impartial. During the course of his trial, the prosecutor was permitted to make untrue representations of fact. At the conclusion of the trial, the Judge delivered a summation in the guise of a so-called charge, which, in the opinion of at least three Judges of the Court of Appeals of New York, constituted a vigorous and unfair argument for conviction. On review, the Court of Appeals of New York declined even to consider the question of whether the jury had been impartial. It declined also to consider whether petitioner had been deprived of an opportunity to present his defense out of documents in the possession of the prosecution itself, and which petitioner asserted, if unexpurgated, would conclusively prove his innocence.

All of the reasons why this petition ought be granted can be reduced to this:

That it is a paradox of the administration of the criminal law that the security of good and honest men against abusive persecution is only so strong as their insistence that bad men charged with the commission of heinous crimes be accorded a fair hearing before conviction. Petitioner was denied a fair hearing, and it is no answer to say that he came to court with an ominous past record. He was entitled to a fair trial on this charge, for which his life was at stake. He was deprived of that fair hearing, denied the due process of law. Unless the answer to each of the Questions Presented is "No", this Court should rule that, under the Federal Constitution, sinner as well as saint is entitled to the benefit of the basic constitutional securities and guaranties when he comes to judgment.

WHEREFORE, it is respectfully submitted that this petition for a writ of certiorari should be granted.

LOUIS BUCHALTER,
Petitioner,
By I. MAURICE WORMSER,
J. BERTRAM WEGMAN,
JESSE CLIMENKO,
Counsel for Petitioner.

IN THE

Supreme Court of the United States

OCTOBER TERM, 1942

No.

LOUIS BUCHALTER,

Petitioner,

v.

PEOPLE OF THE STATE OF NEW YORK.

BRIEF IN SUPPORT OF PETITION FOR WRIT OF CERTIORARI

Opinions Below

The four (4) opinions of the Court of Appeals of the State of New York upon the appeal to that Court are reported officially in Weekly Adv. Sheets No. 189, Dec. 12, 1942, 289 N. Y. 181. The per curiam opinion of that Court denying the motion for reargument of the appeal, has not yet been reported officially.

Jurisdiction, Questions Presented, Etc.

Reference to the statute under which the jurisdiction of this Court is invoked, and a statement of the questions presented, as well as a statement of the case, will be found in the petition.

Summary of Argument

Forcing the petitioner to trial at a place where and a time when a fair trial was impossible violated due process of law. Motions for a change of venue were timely made, and should have been granted. Failing that, the motion for an adjournment of the time of trial until after the election campaign should have been granted. The public clamor for the conviction of the petitioner, which undoubtedly was instituted and engineered by the prosecution, and thereafter uncontrolled, was aggravated by requiring the trial to proceed during the course of the campaign of the Trial Judge for re-election and the heated campaign of the prosecuting District Attorney for election to the office of Mayor of the City of New York.

The petitioner was denied due process of law by the overruling of challenges to prospective jurors and to jurors impaneled, which were based upon the bias, the lack of impartiality, and the preconceived opinions of such prospective jurors and jurors impaneled. The refusal of the Court of Appeals of New York to review such rulings by the Trial Court was a denial of due process of law, because under the Constitution of the State of New York, a defendant in a capital case, as this was, is entitled to a review by the Court of Appeals of the facts as well as the law; furthermore, since the petitioner raised the question that he had been denied due process of law by the failure to impanel a fair and impartial jury it was the duty of the State Court of Appeals to examine the substance of rulings of the Trial Judge upon the challenges, as well as the form thereof, to ascertain whether, in fact, due process of law was denied.

The petitioner was denied due process of law by the rulings of the Trial Judge, sanctioned by the majority of the State Court of Appeals, which removed from the consideration of the jury certain fundamental questions of fact and substituted for the judgment of the jury thereon the opinions and views of the Trial Judge, to the end that the jury was misled and the Trial Judge became the arbiter of facts as well as law.

Petitioner was denied due process of law by the refusal of the Trial Judge to rebuke the prosecutor and instruct the jury to disregard improper statements by him in his summation, and by the implied approval by the Trial Judge of the injection by the prosecuting attorney, in his summation, of the issue of his personal integrity and his untruthful assurance to the jury that no promises or inducements were or would be given to the witnesses for the prosecution in return for their testimony.

The petitioner was denied due process of law by the refusal of the Trial Judge, sustained by the majority of the Court of Appeals, to accord the petitioner access to official records of the Police Department of the City of New York which had been produced at the trial.

Petitioner was denied due process of law by the failure of the Chief Judge of the New York State Court of Appeals to vote for a reversal of the conviction although the Chief Judge had, as he expressed in his opinion, a reasonable doubt of the guilt of the defendants, since under the precedents and authority of the Court of Appeals, a judgment of conviction in a capital case must be reversed if there is a reasonable doubt of guilt.

ARGUMENT

I

"Due process of law" as guaranteed by the Fourteenth Amendment encompasses the assurance of a fair trial in the courts of a State.

The questions presented upon the facts, as stated in the petition, must be examined in the light of basic principles. These principles are here enunciated as a preface to the presentation of petitioner's argument.

In Snyder v. Massachusetts, 291 U. S. 97, Mr. Justice Cardozo, speaking for the majority, held that the procedure there involved did not offend "due process" because in accord with State law, and that the possibility of prejudice to a defendant from that State law was "gossamer". It will be here urged that the procedure below was offensive to local law as well as to the concept of due process of law under the Fourteenth Amendment of the Constitution which Mr. Justice Cardozo described (loc. cit., p. 122):

> "Privileges so fundamental as to be inherent in every concept of a fair trial that could be acceptable to the thought of reasonable men will be kept inviolate and inviolable, however crushing may be the pressure of incriminating proof."

How much the more so when the pressure of the proof in this case was so light that an actual majority of the State Court of Appeals expressed their own reasonable doubt of guilt, and one of the Judges said the proof was so inadequate as in his opinion to require a dismissal of the indictment!

Mr. Justice Roberts in his dissenting opinion in the case cited, speaking for the minority, expressed the rule thus (p. 127):

> "In whatsoever proceeding, whether it affect property or liberty or life, the Fourteenth Amendment commands the observance of that standard of common fairness, the failure to observe which would offend men's sense of the decencies and proprieties of civilized life."

And at page 137:

> "But where the conduct of a trial is involved, the guaranty of the Fourteenth Amendment is not that a just result shall have been obtained, but that the result, whatever it be, shall be reached in a fair way. Procedural due process has to do with the manner of the trial; dictates that in the conduct of judicial inquiry certain fundamental rules of fairness be observed; forbids the disregard of those rules, and is not satisfied, if, though the hearing was unfair, the result is just."

The Fourteenth Amendment in its guaranty of due process against invasion by the States, covers those cases where privileges and immunities which are of the essence of liberty and justice have been invaded. Palko v. Connecticut, 302 U. S. 319.

II

Due process of law was denied by the refusal to change the place of trial or, at the very least, to postpone the time of trial.

It has been shown in the petition that the indictment of petitioner was obtained in April, 1940, of a murder alleged to have been committed in September, 1936. For more than a year there was a deliberate, studied effort to inflame the prejudices of the populace of Kings County against petitioner. This cannot be doubted by one who examines the samples of the newspaper articles which are part of the record.

In a county with a populace exceeding two and a half million persons, it might well be assumed that there were some who might not have been familiar with the name and reputation of a particular alleged malefactor; here it was shown that a trained investigator of unimpeachable integrity questioned 200 persons chosen at random in that community. Every one of them was familiar with the charges against petitioner. Every talesman who was examined had heard and read of the alleged activities of petitioner, and was familiar with the charge against him in the instant case.

Thus, there was accomplished, in this cosmopolitan and extensive community, a result as insidious as the incitement to violence in a village. And this was not a result unlooked for by the prosecuting attorney; it is beyond cavil that he was responsible for this propaganda.

When the stage had been sufficiently set, when over a long period of time the collective mind of the community had been sufficiently conditioned,—more than a year after the indictment was obtained,—the application was made to bring petitioner from the Federal Penitentiary at Leavenworth, Kansas, to the County Court of Kings County to answer the charge of the indictment.

It had been reported earlier in the press that petitioner had acknowledged to the District Attorney his guilt of this crime. That, of course, was a lie. As the time of trial approached, the District Attorney undertook to make assurance doubly sure that none might consider the possibility of petitioner's innocence. He caused to be circulated fresh stories of attempted bargaining by petitioner for the privilege of pleading guilty to a lesser degree of murder, for which privilege he would pay by giving evidence against prominent people. That was a lie.

The "wild-west" atmosphere of the courtroom on the first arraignment was calculated to and did create a further impression in the public mind that petitioner was a horrendous creature. The flamboyant utterances of the prosecutor at the second arraignment added further color to the picture.

The pressure of the fixed opinion of an entire city is not much different in its effect upon jurors, at least psychologically, from the presence of a mob.

The time originally fixed for the commencement of the trial was before the active period in the election campaigns of the District Attorney and the Trial Judge. So, although all the defendants asked either that the trial commence immediately or, if adjourned at all, that such adjournment be until after Election Day, a time was set so as to bring the trial into the very midst of the political campaign.

Then the fires of publicity were rekindled, particularly in newspapers extensively circulated within the County of Kings, but not distributed outside its borders.

All of this having been shown, it was a clear abuse of justice and a denial of due process of law to refuse to change the place of trial, or, at the very least, to postpone the time of trial. Quinn v. State, 54 Okl. Cr. 179, 16 Pac. (2d) 591, 593-594; 54 Harvard Law Review 679; People v. McLaughlin, 150 N. Y. 365, at 375-376.

The demeanor, utterances, rulings and charge of the Trial Judge, to which reference has been made in the petition and specific instances of which will hereinafter be discussed, demonstrate that he, too, was imbued with a deep prejudice against petitioner, no doubt enhanced by the coincidence of his own campaign for re-election. Apposite, therefore, is the language of Mr. Chief Justice Taft in Tumey v. Ohio, 273 U. S. 510, at page 532:

> "Every procedure which would offer a possible temptation to the average man as a judge to forget the burden of proof required to convict the defendant, or which might lead him not to hold the balance nice, clear and true between the State and the accused denies the latter due process of law."

III

A fair and impartial jury was not impaneled. A fair and impartial Judge did not preside at the trial.

As petitioner had anticipated and had argued in seeking a change of venue, it did indeed prove impossible to impanel a jury free of prejudice and bias. The facts having been set forth in the petition, they are not reiterated.

The defendants were compelled to exhaust their peremptory challenges to exclude jurors against whom challenges for cause had been erroneously overruled. The State Court of Appeals refused to examine these rulings on the ground that the rulings of the Trial Court upon such challenges were, by statute, not reviewable. But that holding is clearly erroneous and itself a denial of due process of law as well as that due process of law was denied by the original rulings in the Trial Court.

The prosecutor opposed review of these rulings on appeal, and on the appeal, and on the motion for reargument, the Court of Appeals said that because petitioner's counsel had "consented" to the impanelling of a special jury such review was foreclosed.

This was wrong both on the facts and on the law.

Petitioner's counsel had not consented. The papers on that motion are a part of the record; from them it clearly appears that the Court at nisi prius in granting the motion for a special jury misstated the fact in recording that there was consent. All that petitioner's counsel said (Affidavit of Hyman Barshay, par. 6) was that he did not object to so much of the motion as asked that a special jury be summoned.

(And the section of the statute relied on below (Judiciary Law, Sec. 749aa, subd. 7, printed in the appendix) says only that such rulings on challenges for "actual bias" shall be final. The rulings complained of were not upon such challenges, but for "implied bias" and for prejudice.)

If extended to the scope given that section by the State Court of Appeals, then measured against the requirements of the New York State Constitution (Art. VI, Sec. 7, printed in the appendix), that provision of the special jury statute is repugnant to the Fourteenth Amendment. The failure to object to the motion is not a waiver of that privilege of petitioner.

To say that petitioner "consented", because his attorney did not oppose the motion for a Special Jury, to waive his right to a review of the rulings upon the challenges to prospective jurors and to jurors who were actually impanelled, and to rely upon such so-called "consent" to avoid such review, is tantamount not only to an acknowledgment that the rulings were as wrong as petitioner charges, but also to an assertion that petitioner could and did waive his right to a fair and impartial jury.

Even if petitioner himself had formally consented—as he had not—the law does not permit a waiver of so fundamental a right. At least, prior to the decision of this case, that is what the New York State Court of Appeals had held. People ex rel. Battista v. Christian, 249 N. Y. 314, at 318;

> "* * * the rule can be deduced that waiver is not permitted where a question of jurisdiction or fundamental rights is involved and public injury would result. A privilege, merely personal, may be waived; a public, fundamental right, the exercise of which is requisite to jurisdiction to try, condemn and punish, is binding upon the individual and cannot be disregarded by him."

Nothing is more fundamental than the right to trial by an impartial tribunal. The Constitution of the State of New York (Article I, Sec. 2, printed in the Appendix) specifically forbids the waiver of trial by jury in a capital case.

The New York Court of Appeals is required to examine the facts as well as the law on an appeal in a capital case, such as this was, and the right of appeal in a capital case is guaranteed by the New York State Constitution, Article VI, Section 7. People v. Crum, 272 N. Y. 348. Whether the Trial Court has been properly constituted is certainly a question both of fact and law.

Due process of law is not satisfied by a mere adherence to form. The substance must be examined. Norris v. Alabama, 294 U. S. 587; Whitney v. California, 274 U. S. 357.

If the ruling below is correct then due process of law would be satisfied although impaneled upon the jury were close associates of the prosecuting attorney; due process of law would become an empty phrase. Cf. Brown v. New Jersey, 175 U. S. 172.

The strictures of the Trial Judge undoubtedly interfered with a free expression of the prejudice which may have been entertained by many of the jurors impaneled. Perhaps the turn of mind of the Trial Judge may be deduced from his conduct during the impaneling of the jury. It is also shown by his full justification and approbation of an insulting outburst by one of the self-confessed criminals brought to the witness stand by the prosecuting attorney who, from the stand, called one of defense counsel, a distinguished former Judge of the Court of General Sessions of New York, "a filthy swine" (R. 2416). Particularly apt is the opinion of the Supreme Court of Pennsylvania, per Maxey, J., in Commonwealth v. Petrillo, 338 Penna. 65, 12 Atl. (2d) 317, at page 331:

> "The language just quoted is not in keeping with that 'orderly proceeding adapted to the nature of the case', which this court said in Com. v. O'Keefe, 298 Pa. 169, 172, 148 A. 73, 74, was a part of that 'due process of law' which in this country is a traditional safeguard of an accused. In Powell v. Alabama, 287 U. S. 45, 55, 53 S. Ct. 55, 60, 77 L. Ed. 158, 84 A. L. R. 527, the Supreme Court of the United States, in an opinion by Mr. Justice Sutherland, declared that trials for felonies such as charged in this indictment should proceed 'in the calm spirit of regulated justice'.
>
> " * * * There is no other case which calls for such strict impartiality on the part of a trial judge and such fearless adherence by him to these 'fundamental principles of liberty and justice which lie at the base of all our civil and political institutions' (Hebert v. Louisiana, 272 U. S. 312, 316, 47 S. Ct. 103, 104, 71 L. Ed. 270, 48 A. L. R. 1102) as those cases which have been sensationalized in the public press. In all such cases there is much public prejudgment and this is always adverse to any of those at whom the finger of accusation points. Anyone mentioned as in any way connected with those accused is in the public mind already condemned. No trial judge should permit his judgment and sense of good taste to be warped because of his official participation in a 'front page' case." (The emphasis is the Court's.)

IV

The Trial Judge deliberately invaded the province of the jury and misled it.

Due process of law requires that the jury be permitted to decide questions of fact. In New York State, a Trial Judge is required to refrain from expressing an opinion on the facts. People v. Ohanian, 245 N. Y. 227, at 232-233. In deciding whether due process of law was had, this Court may consider whether the proceedings below were consonant with the law of the State. Snyder v. Massachusetts, 291 U. S. 97.

Some few examples of this aspect of the misconduct of the Trial Judge which were not corrected by the Court of Appeals have been indicated in the petition and will not be repeated beyond an enumeration which leads inevitably to the conclusion that these were not just mistakes of law, but something more sinister:

1. The jury was instructed to disregard patent inconsistencies between the testimony of the witness Bernstein on the one hand and the witnesses Berger and Rubin on the other, and to assume that there was no inconsistency; instead of being permitted to treat that inconsistency as impairing the credibility of these witnesses.

2. The jury was instructed to consider as false a prior exculpatory statement by the People's witness Rubin and to take as true his testimony in the case on trial, and even worse, to treat the falsity of the prior statement as justified and as having no impeaching effect upon the witness' credibility; instead of permitting the jury to treat the prior exculpatory statement as true, if it so found, and the testimony in the case on trial as false.

3. The jury was instructed to assume the People's witnesses had not conferred in advance of the trial; considering what was elicited on cross-examination of these witnesses the jury should have been allowed to consider whether there had in fact been such pre-trial conferences, and, if satisfied that there were such, to consider whether that impeached the credibility of the witnesses.

4. The Trial Judge sanctioned grossly improper (and in at least one instance untruthful) statements and arguments by the prosecutor in his summation. Cf. Berger v. United States, 295 U. S. 78.

5. The Trial Court omitted all reference to the facts elicited on cross-examination of the prosecution's witnesses, belittled that cross-examination and communicated to the jury his view that it was entitled to have little, if any, weight in their deliberations.

This experienced Trial Judge knew better than those rulings would indicate. But his judgment was warped. In Commonwealth v. Petrillo, 338 Penna. 65, 12 Atl. (2d) 317, at page 332, it was said:

> "The law confers on no judge the power of pre-judgment. A defendant charged with crime is not likely to receive a fair and impartial trial, if the judge from the beginning exhibits an attitude which conveys to the jury the impression: 'Here is a man guilty of an atrocious murder but of course we have got to go through the form of a trial before we send him to the electric chair.'" (Emphasis is the Court's.)

V

Depriving the petitioner of an opportunity to offer evidence in his defense was a denial of due process.

As shown in the petition, there were certain records of the Police Department of the City of New York which, if unaltered, might have demonstrated that certain meetings which prosecution witnesses testified had occurred, had, in fact, never taken place. If the falsity of the testimony of the prosecution's witnesses regarding these alleged meetings had thus been established, petitioner's innocence of the crime charged would have been demonstrated.

Petitioner had subpoenaed these records. They were produced in Court by the Police Department pursuant to the subpoena, but delivered to the prosecuting attorney who refused to permit petitioner access thereto. The Trial Court refused to permit petitioner to offer these records in evidence, refused to permit petitioner's counsel to examine the same, refused to allow them to be counted, refused himself to examine them, and refused to allow petitioner's counsel to ascertain the identity of the police officers who were engaged in maintaining surveillance of petitioner's whereabouts during the time in question, so that petitioner was denied an opportunity to seek out these officers in order to obtain their testimony to refute the prosecution's witnesses.

Upon the appeal, the opinions of the members of the Court of Appeals omitted all reference to the error alleged by petitioner to have been committed in this respect. Upon the motion for re-argument, however, the per curiam opinion said that the majority of the Court had examined those records and did not believe that they were entitled to much weight as evidence.

It was not for the Court of Appeals, or at least for the majority of the Judges of that Court, to decide whether or not this evidence had or lacked weight; that was a question for the jury to decide. Nor is it explicable how the majority of the Court of Appeals could have known what would be the testimony of the police officers who made those reports, had it been possible for petitioner to summon those officers as witnesses at the trial. The situation is not dissimilar from that in Saunders v. Shaw, 244 U. S. 317, where a defendant had been deprived of an opportunity to offer evidence, and a majority of the State Appellate Court thought the evidence of no force. Mr. Justice Holmes, writing for this Court for reversal, said (p. 319) of this idea that the evidence was of no force:

> "It may turn out so, but we do not see in the record an absolute warrant for the assumption, and therefore cannot be sure that the defendant's rights are protected without giving him a chance to put his evidence in."

The refusal of the State to make available to the defendant evidence in its possession constitutes a denial of due process of law. Mooney v. Holohan, 294 U. S. 103.

VI

Requirements of due process of law were ignored in the decision of the New York State Court of Appeals.

Under this heading it is not intended to review those errors involving a denial of due process of law to which reference has been made in this brief, nor to repeat the argument that the refusal to correct those errors was an abuse of due process of law on the part of the New York State Court of Appeals.

What is here urged is that, upon the very face of the opinions rendered in that Court, controlling and compelling authority requiring a reversal of the conviction even if all other errors are disregarded, was ignored by the learned Chief Judge whose vote was the deciding factor.

Due process of law is denied a defendant if the judgment of a State Court is a departure from the clear requirements of State law. Snyder v. Massachusetts, 291 U. S. 97; Pyle v. Kansas, 87 L. Ed. 154, Adv. Op., Dec. 21, 1942.

The Chief Judge said in his opinion that the incriminating testimony came from "witnesses whose credibility has been irretrievably impeached" and that evidence from so polluted a source had "failed to remove reasonable doubt of the defendants' guilt from my mind".

The most recent interpretation of the pertinent provisions of the Constitution of New York upon this subject is found in People v. Crum, 272 N. Y. 348, in which opinion the present Chief Judge, then an Associate Judge, concurred. The then Chief Judge of the New York Court of Appeals (Crane, J.) there said (p. 350) that the Constitution of New York, Article VI, Sec. 7, requires the Court of Appeals to review the facts in a capital case, and explained:

> "A review of the facts means that we shall examine the evidence to determine whether in our judgment it has been sufficient to make out a case of murder beyond a reasonable doubt. We are obliged to weigh the evidence and form a conclusion as to the facts. It is not sufficient, as in most of the cases with us, to find evidence which presents a question of fact; it is necessary to go further before we can affirm a conviction and find that the evidence is of such weight and credibility as to convince us that the jury was justified in finding the defendant guilty beyond a reasonable doubt.
>
> "A reading of this record causes me to hesitate. I am not convinced. I have a reasonable doubt which I shall attempt to explain and which, in my judgment, compels us to reverse this conviction and grant a new trial." (Emphasis added.)

Being left with a reasonable doubt and doubting the credibility of the prosecution's witnesses—the vote of the Chief Judge for affirmance here, measured against the requirements of his office, as enunciated in People v. Crum, supra, operated to deprive the petitioner of due process of law.

CONCLUSION

In Commonwealth v. Petrillo, supra, from which several quotations have been excerpted, after stating that every accused in an American court of justice is entitled to a fair and impartial trial (p. 332) and "It is the duty of the Appellate Courts to see to it that every defendant gets such a trial", the Court said that the Fourteenth Amendmen of the Constitution of the United States (as well as the Constitution of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania—and it may be noted that that is equally true of the Constitution of the State of New York) guarantees (p. 333) "in substance, to one accused of crime not only the forms but also the fundamentals of a fair trial." Until the present case was decided, the New York State Court of Appeals held true to those principles.

> "Whether a guilty man goes free or not is a small matter compared with the maintenance of principles which still safeguard a person accused of crime" (Pound, J., later Chief Judge, in People v. Barbato, 254 N. Y. 170, at 178).

Those great principles, that Court had said, "must protect all who come within its sphere, whether the person who invokes its protection seems to be sorely pressed by the weight of the inculpatory evidence in the case or not. It cannot alter, for the purpose of securing the conviction of one who may be called or regarded as a great criminal, and yet be invoked for the purpose of sheltering an innocent man. In the eye of the law all are innocent until convicted in accordance with the forms of the law and by a close adherence to its rules" (Peckham, J., in People v. Sharp, 107 N. Y. 427, at 476-477).

But not in this case. Shackled not alone by the manacles with which he was led into the courtroom, burdened not only with prison sentences covering the balance of his natural life, this petitioner carried upon this trial the opprobrium of the carefully manufactured hostility of the community in which he was tried, the onus of having his fate determined by a jury improperly and unfairly selected and predisposed to a belief in his guilt. Tried before a Trial Judge whose prejudice and animus were so deep-rooted as to extend to and impale defense counsel, this petitioner was met even in the New York State Court of Appeals with a departure from the established doctrines of that Court.

As stated recently by Mr. Chief Justice Stone in Hill v. State of Texas (316 U. S. 400):

> "Not the least merit of our constitutional system is that its safeguards extend to all—the least deserving as well as the most virtuous."

In sum, there was no due process of law below. A writ of certiorari should issue.

Respectfully submitted,

J. Maurice Wormser,
J. Bertram Wegman,
Jesse Climenko,
Counsel for Petitioner

APPENDIX

The relevant portions of constitutional and statutory provisions to which reference is made in the foregoing brief:

Constitution of the United States

AMENDMENT XIV.

SECTION 1. All persons born or naturalized in the United States, and subject to the jurisdiction thereof, are citizens of the United States and of the State wherein they reside. No State shall make or enforce any law which shall abridge the privileges or immunities of citizens of the United States; nor shall any State deprive any person of life, liberty, or property, without due process of law; nor deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws.

New York State Constitution

ARTICLE I, SECTION 2

TRIAL BY JURY; HOW WAIVED.

Trial by jury in all cases in which it has heretofore been guaranteed by constitutional provision shall remain inviolate forever; but a jury trial may be waived by the parties in all civil cases in the manner to be prescribed by law. The legislature may provide, however, by law, that a verdict may be rendered by not less than five-sixths of the jury in any civil case. A jury trial may be waived by the defendant in all criminal cases, except those in which the crime charged may be punishable by death, by a written instrument signed by the defendant in person in open court before and with the approval of a judge or justice of a court having jurisdiction to try the offense.

ARTICLE VI, SECTION 7

JURISDICTION OF COURT OF APPEALS.

The jurisdiction of the court of appeals, except where the judgment is of death, or where the appellate division, on reversing or modifying a final judgment in an action or a final order in a special proceeding, makes new findings of fact and renders final judgment or a final order thereon, shall be limited to the review of questions of law; but the right to appeal shall not depend upon the amount involved.

Appeals may be taken to the court of appeals in the classes of cases enumerated in this section.

In criminal cases, directly from a court of original jurisdiction where the judgment is of death, and in other criminal cases from an appellate division or otherwise as the legislature may from time to time provide.

In civil cases and proceedings as follows:

(The remainder of this article is omitted as not relevant.)

New York Judiciary Law

SECTION 749-aa. SPECIAL JURORS IN CERTAIN COUNTIES.

* * * * * *

7. Challenges; trial. The parties to such an action shall have the same number of peremptory challenges and the same challenges for cause to be tried in the same manner as upon a trial with an ordinary jury. The rulings of the trial court, however, in admitting or excluding evidence upon the trial of any challenge for actual bias shall not be the subject of exception. Such rulings and the allowance or disallowance of the challenge shall be final. Upon the formation of a special jury as hereinbefore provided the issue must be tried by such jury as prescribed by the code of criminal procedure or the civil practice act with respect to a jury trial in a criminal or civil action with an ordinary jury.

* * * * * *

Judicial Code of the United States

SECTION 237, AS AMENDED, 28 U. S. C., SECTION 344.

(b) It shall be competent for the Supreme Court, by certiorari, to require that there be certified to it for review and determination, with the same power and authority and with like effect as if brought up by writ of error, any cause wherein a final judgment or decree has been rendered or passed by the highest court of a State in which a decision could be had where is drawn in question the validity of a treaty or statute of the United States; or where is drawn in question the validity of a statute of any State on the ground of its being repugnant to the Constitution, treaties, or laws of the United States; or where any title, right, privilege, or immunity is specially set up or claimed by either party under the Constitution, or any treaty or statute of, or commission held or authority exercised under, the United States; and the power to review under this paragraph may be exercised as well where the Federal claim is sustained as where it is denied. Nothing in this paragraph shall be construed to limit or detract from the right to a review on a writ of error in a case where such a right is conferred by the preceding paragraph; nor shall the fact that a review on a writ of error might be obtained under the preceding paragraph be an obstacle to granting a review on certiorari under this paragraph.

FILE COPY

Office - Supreme Court, U. S.
FILED
JAN 2 1943
CHARLES ELMORE CROPLEY
CLERK

Supreme Court of the United States

OCTOBER TERM—1942

No. 610

EMANUEL WEISS,

Petitioner,

against

PEOPLE OF THE STATE OF NEW YORK,

Respondent.

PETITION FOR A WRIT OF CERTIORARI TO THE COURT OF APPEALS OF THE STATE OF NEW YORK AND BRIEF IN SUPPORT THEREOF

ARTHUR GARFIELD HAYS,
Counsel for Petitioner.

ALFRED J. TALLEY,
JOHN SCHULMAN,
M. M. KREINDLER,
HARRY G. ANDERSON,
SAMUEL BADER,
GERALD WEATHERLY,
Of Counsel.

INDEX

	PAGES
Petition	1-37
Statement	1
Jurisdiction	35
Question Presented	4
Reasons Relied on for Granting the Writ	36
Counsel's Signature and Certificate	37
Brief	38-54
Opinions Below	38
Jurisdiction, Questions Presented and Statement	38
Summary of Argument	39
POINT I—The petitioner was deprived of his liberty and life without due process of law by a proceeding which was a trial only in form and not in substance.
Petitioner urges that he has been convicted for the crime of murder and has been sentenced to death as a result of a trial so grossly unfair that he was denied due process of law	39
Conclusion	48
Counsel's Signature	50
Appendix A	51
Appendix B	51
Appendix C	52
Appendix D	52
Appendix E	52
Appendix F	53
Appendix G	54
Appendix H	54

Cases Cited

PAGES

Betts v. Brady (June 1, 1942), 316 U. S. 455, 462 . . 5, 36, 39
Brown v. Mississippi (1936), 297 U. S. 278, 286 . . . . 5, 36, 39

Cancemi v. People, 18 N. Y. 128 40
Centoamore v. State, 105 Nebraska 452, 455 . . . . . 5, 47
Chambers v. Florida (1940), 309 U. S. 227, 236-241 . . . . . 36, 39, 46, 42

Frank v. Mangum (1915), 237 U. S. 309, 335-336 36

Hickory v. U. S., 160 U. S. 408, 423 45
Hill v. Texas (June 1, 1942), 316 U. S. 400, 406 . . . . 5, 36, 40
Hysler v. Florida (1942), 315 U. S. 411, 413 . . . . . 36, 39

Lisenba v. California (December, 1941), 314 U. S. 219, 236-237 36

Minner v. U. S., 57 F. 2d 506, 513 45
Mooney v. Holohan (1935), 294 U. S. 103, 112-113 . . . 36, 47
Moore v. Dempsey (1923), 261 U. S. 86, 90-91 . . . . . 36, 40

People v. Becker, 210 N. Y. 274, 289-312 . . . . . 35, 43, 44, 46
People v. Crum, 272 N. Y. 348, 350 48
People v. Davis, 52 Mich. 569 47
People v. LaBarbera, 274 N. Y. 339, 343 40
People ex rel. Lemon v. Supreme Court, 245 N. Y. 24 47
People v. Ohanian, 245 N. Y. 227, 232 45
People v. Pignataro, 263 N. Y. 229, 240 41
People v. Robinson, 273 N. Y. 438 27
People v. Walker, 198 N. Y. 329, 334 41
People v. Walsh, 262 N. Y. 141, 150 47
Powell v. Alabama (1932), 287 U. S. 45, 56, 57-73 . . 36, 46

Smith v. Western Pacific Ry. Co., 203 N. Y. 499, 503 41
Snyder v. Massachusetts, 291 U. S. 97, 105, 122, 127 . . 39, 49

Ward v. Texas (June 1, 1942), 316 U. S. 547, 550 36
Weare v. United States, 1 F. 2d 617, 619 45

Constitutional Provisions and Statutes Cited

(These are printed in appendices)

PAGES

U. S. Constitution, Amendment 14, Sec. 1 .....35, 52

Judicial Code of the United States, Sec. 237(b) as amended by the Act of February 13, 1925, c. 229, Sec. 1 (43 Stat. 937); 28 U. S. C. A. Sec. 344(b) ..35, 53

N. Y. Constitution, Article 1, Sec. 1 .....40, 51

N. Y. Constitution, Article 1, Sec. 2 .....40, 51

N. Y. Constitution, Article 6, Sec. 7 .....48, 54

N. Y. Penal Law, Sec. 1041 .....41, 52

N. Y. Code of Criminal Procedure, Sec. 389 .....41, 54

N. Y. Code of Criminal Procedure, Sec. 419 .....41, 52

Text Book Cited

2 Wigmore on Evidence, § 1367 44

Supreme Court of the United States

OCTOBER TERM—1942

EMANUEL WEISS,

Petitioner,

against

PEOPLE OF THE STATE OF NEW YORK,

Respondent.

PETITION FOR WRIT OF CERTIORARI TO THE COURT OF APPEALS OF THE STATE OF NEW YORK

TO THE HONORABLE, THE CHIEF JUSTICE OF THE UNITED STATES AND THE ASSOCIATE JUSTICES OF THE SUPREME COURT OF THE UNITED STATES:

Your petitioner, EMANUEL WEISS, respectfully represents the following:

Summary Statement of Matter Involved

Your petitioner, together with Louis Buchalter and Louis Capone, was convicted of murder in the first degree in the County Court, Kings County, New York State, on December 2, 1941 and was sentenced to be executed.* On an appeal to the Court of Appeals of the State of New York, the judgment of conviction was affirmed by a divided court. The defendant is under sentence of death as a result of a trial which, viewed in its entirety, was so grossly unfair that he was denied due process of law. The terse statement of Judge Rippey, dissenting in the Court of Appeals, is (R. 4090; 289 N. Y. 243):

* A stay of execution was granted by the order of Mr. Justice Roberts dated Dec. 5, 1942.

> "In my opinion, the conduct of the trial throughout was so grossly unfair as to leave the defendants without even a remote outside chance of any free consideration of the jury of their defenses. * * *."

There were four opinions written by members of that Court (R. 4030-4091; 289 N. Y. 181). Of the seven Judges of the Court of Appeals, two (Finch and Lewis, JJ.) concurred in an opinion for affirmance by Judge Conway (R. 4030; 289 N. Y. 181), who found no substantial error in the proceedings.

Judge Loughran, with whom Judge Desmond concurred, wrote for reversal (R. 4078; 289 N. Y. 181), saying at page 242:

> "We do not see how the conviction of the defendants can be affirmed, without annulling the statute which makes the jury in a criminal case the exclusive judges of questions of fact. Nor do we see how an affirmance is possible without deciding that in a criminal case the trial judge in his charge may entirely ignore the evidence and the contentions of the accused unless in the end some request is made for a different handling of the issues.
>
> * * * * * * * *
>
> "We believe the judgments of conviction should be reversed so that the defendants may have a fair chance to defend their lives before another jury."

Judge Rippey, in a separate opinion, voted not only to reverse, but to dismiss the indictment as well (R. 4090; 289 N. Y. 181). He said at page 243:

> "In my opinion, the conduct of the trial throughout was so grossly unfair as to leave the defendants without even a remote outside chance of any free consideration by the jury of their defenses, so unfair in fact as to render utterly without force the presumption of innocence to which every person charged with a criminal offense is entitled until his guilt is established by legal evidence beyond a reasonable doubt. * * * In spite of the summary of the contentions of the People contained in one of the opinions for affirmance, an analysis of the whole record persuades me that the evidence was insufficient as matter of law to sustain the conviction of any of the defendants of murder in the first degree beyond a reasonable doubt."

Of particular interest is the opinion of Chief Judge Lehman, who cast the deciding vote (R. 4069; 289 N. Y. 222). The Learned Chief Judge concurred in the affirmance with obvious reluctance, expressing the gravest doubts relative to the fairness of the trial. He wrote (R. 4073; 289 N. Y. 181, at p. 225):

"The errors and defects in this case are, it seems clear to me, many. Judge Loughran* has set forth some which in his opinion cannot be disregarded. I agree with him that these errors and defects are present and these errors and defects and others shown by the record cannot be disregarded without hesitation lest in our anxiety that the guilty should not escape punishment we affirm a judgment, tainted with errors and obtained through violation of fundamental rights. Only careful, I might almost say prayerful, consideration can remove that hesitation."

Again at page 230 (R. 4077-4078):

"True, as I have said earlier, the court in the charge instructed the jury as matter of law upon some questions of fact which only the jury had the right to determine, and I may add parenthetically that I doubt whether I would agree with the inferences drawn by the trial judge even if he had been the trier of the facts. I recognize that no intrusion by the trial judge upon the field reserved for the jury may be lightly disregarded. Even so, I conclude that in this case the errors viewed as part of a long trial could not have affected the verdict.

* Who wrote for reversal.

* * * * * * *

"I cannot refrain from repeating in conclusion that I find the errors and defects numerous and I have hesitated long in reaching the conclusion that they may be disregarded, especially since three of my associates are convinced and have argued persuasively that they affect the substantial rights of the defendants. I regret many incidents that occurred at the trial. I regret the summation of the prosecuting attorney and his remarks in the course of the trial. I regret some of the rulings of the trial judge. Evidence coming from a polluted source has failed to remove reasonable doubt of the defendants' guilt from my mind. All that is immaterial if the jury is convinced of guilt on sufficient evidence and no errors and defects affected the verdict. Even if I were entirely convinced of the defendants' guilt I should vote to reverse if I found room for doubt that the jury would have reached the same conclusion if all error had been avoided. Because I have no doubt that the errors did not affect the verdict I am constrained to vote to affirm."

The remittitur recites (R. 4095):

"Appellant, in his brief and argument raised the point that he had been denied his constitutional rights under the Fourteenth Amendment to the Constitution of the United States, and this point was considered and necesarily decided by this Court."

A motion for reargument, reference to which will be made hereafter, was denied by the Court of Appeals (R. 4121).

Question Presented

The question presented is whether petitioner Weiss has been deprived of his liberty and life without due process of law. Petitioner does not urge any error in the assessment of evidence which is within the State's function. (Cf. Hill v. Texas, 316 U. S. 400, 406.) The complaint is not of the commission of mere error, but of wrongs so fundamental that the proceedings in the State Court were a mere pretense of a trial which rendered the conviction and sentence void. (Brown v. Mississippi, 297 U. S. 278, 286.)

Tested by an appraisal of the totality of the facts in the case at bar (Betts v. Brady, 316 U. S. 455, 462), the record discloses that petitioner Weiss has been deprived of the constitutional guarantee of the due process of law, and that he was not in fact accorded a trial consonant with the safeguards of the Constitution of the United States, the Constitution of the State of New York, and those basic criteria of fairness which lend life to the concept of due process.

A. The trial was held in a locality and at a time when the members of the community were inflamed by the public press to a degree that Weiss was deprived of a fair trial.

B. The verdict was not that of the jury because the trial judge in his instructions had withdrawn from that body's consideration factual determinations which lay solely in the jury's province.

C. The assurances given by the prosecutor to the jury that the witnesses who, by their own admissions were accessories to the murder, but who had not been indicted, would be brought to justice after defendants had been convicted, and the withholding of information having a bearing upon the truthfulness of the prosecution's witnesses contributed to a result which violates the elementary principle that "criminal proceedings are instituted with the object, not alone of securing convictions, but of getting as near to the truth as possible on the question of the guilt or innocence of the accused." (Centoamore v. State, 105 Nebraska 452, 455.)

D. The Trial Judge, by his harsh rebukes and repression of defendants' counsel, and by interference with their examinations, cross-examinations and objections, prevented counsel from adequately presenting petitioner's case; during the examination, he interposed excuses tending to condone palpable perjury committed by the murderers and gangsters who gave the testimony incriminating the defendants. The testimony so given, to quote the statement of Chief Judge Lehman in the Court of Appeals, was "impeached, if not completely destroyed", by cross examination. Yet, at the trial, this very cross-examination was discredited in the eyes of the jury by the Trial Court.

E. The Trial Judge refused to allow petitioner's counsel to examine police records which were in Court in possession of the District Attorney and which petitioner believes contained substantial evidence in his favor but of the contents of which petitioner is still wholly ignorant.

F. The Trial Judge in his charge (R. 3949-3950) told the jury respecting petitioner's alibi, merely that they should acquit if they believed his alibi, thus depriving petitioner of the benefit of the fundamental principle that an accused is presumed innocent until proved guilty beyond reasonable doubt.

The Trial and its Setting

Joseph Rosen was shot and killed on Sunday, September, 1936. Some three and a half years later, in May, 1940 (R. 21-24), the Grand Jury indicted petitioner Weiss, Louis Buchalter, Louis Capone, Philip Cohen, James Ferraco and Harry Strauss for the crime.* The trial was set for August 4, 1941 (R. 24, 178) and was then adjourned until September 15, 1941, when it actually commenced (R. 24, 181).

---

* A severance was granted to Cohen, Ferraco had not been apprehended at the time of trial, and Strauss had been executed for the murder of Irving Feinstein.

During this interval between the issuance of the indictment and the commencement of the trial, there was engendered a wave of public hysteria, which mounted in intensity and reached a crescendo on the very eve of the impaneling of the jury. Mob psychology, which infected the proceedings, did not take the simple form of physical violence against the person of the petitioner Weiss. More subtly, but with equally devastating effect, he was engulfed in a maelstrom of public excitement and passion, brought about by a newspaper campaign directed against the defendant Buchalter.

Some fertile brain had conceived the gruesome slogan "Murder, Incorporated" to describe an indeterminate group of criminals accused of committing murder for hire. The defendant Buchalter and one Shapiro, it was said, employed "Murder, Incorporated" when they wanted slaying done. "Murder, Incorporated" became a catchword in the newspapers to describe this indefinite combination of individuals whom the militant District Attorney of Kings County was pursuing, and through whom he sought to reach "Lepke" Buchalter and "Gurrah" Shapiro.

As early as October, 1940, there appeared in a newspaper a story which said in part (R. 87):

> "But now Lepke faces the electric chair as a result of the smashing of Murder, Inc. by District Attorney William O'Dwyer of Brooklyn."

Another portion of the story (R. 89) quotes Mr. O'Dwyer as exclaiming "jubilantly":

> "At last I've got Lepke and Capone on the way to the chair."

In November, 1940, there was a statement in a newspaper (R. 90) that Buchalter was officially reported "last night to be ready to buy his life by revealing to District Attorney O'Dwyer of Brooklyn all that he knows about the underworld".

This atmosphere of hostility was intensified and made a matter of even greater public interest when the Honorable William O'Dwyer, then District Attorney of Kings County, was acclaimed as a possible nominee for the candidate for the office of Mayor of the City of New York. According to the "Daily Mirror" of July 10, 1941 (R. 91):

> "One reason given yesterday for O'Dwyer's first place position is that he 'seems to be the only man who could best LaGuardia'. The Brooklyn prosecutor is expected to strengthen his candidacy further by a successful prosecution of Louis (Lepke) Buchalter, due to go on trial Aug. 4 for the murder of Joseph Rosen, ex-member of the Murder Syndicate, 'erased' as an informer."

These, and statements of similar import, continued to fill the public prints.

In July, 1941, applications had been made by the petitioner Weiss and by Buchalter and Capone for a change of venue (R. 76-109).* These were denied (R. 165, 167). Capone had moved for a severance of the indictments and the granting of a separate trial to himself (R. 31-54). This was denied (R. 29).

The case came on for trial on August 4, 1941 (R. 178-90. Out of a jury panel of 250, all but 95 either failed to appear or presented excuses to be relieved from service (S. M. 31.)

---

* References to similar applications by Weiss and Capone appear in the District Attorney's affidavit and the opinion of the Judge (R. 125, 126, 165).

 The record of the proceedings on August 4th and 5th and the examination of the venire on the voir dire are not in the printed record, but are contained in the typewritten report which, by stipulation, was made part of the record in the Court of Appeals and has been filed in this Court. The letters "S. M." refer to this typewritten portion.

The District Attorney asked that the trial be put over until September 15th (S. M. 35). To this, counsel for Weiss objected. He asked that if the case went over, the continuance be until the November Term, pointing out that the District Attorney had been nominated for the office of Mayor and that the case would become "a football of a political situation in the County and City" (S. M. 40). Counsel stated to the Court that, in a shop near the Court House, large placards appeared advertising a newspaper and referring to the appearance therein of a life story of the District Attorney (S. M. 41); that tacked on telegraph poles throughout the City and on sides of trucks in large letters were references to a story identified with this very trial (S. M. 41). Mr. Talley, counsel for the petitioner Weiss, also presented (S. M. 53) to the Court a copy of the "New York Journal-American" of August 5, 1941, and called attention to a page which was headed

> "Bill O'Dwyer—Life Story of the Man Who Smashed Murder, Inc."

An application was then and there made by counsel that there be a severance as to Weiss (S. M. 24).* This motion was denied (S. M. 28).

The Trial Court continued the case until September 15, saying in a memorandum (R. 177):

> "The Court will grant the motion for a continuance of the trial until after Labor Day, but it cannot go over until after election as that would subordinate the trial to the exigencies of a political campaign, which is unthinkable. No prejudice can come from trying the case before election because sensibly no juror will be influenced by his political views in deciding the question of guilt or innocence in a capital case."

The hysterical utterings of the newspapers reached a climax in a series of articles published by the "Daily

---

* Mr. Talley referred in his motion to the fact that the judge presiding at the trial was also a candidate for election (S. M. 42, 43).

Mirror" commencing August 25, 1941, and continuing through a part of the trial (R. 159).

We need refer only to the caption which prefaced the first of these series. It reads:

> "Murder Inc. Expires as Lepke Goes on Trial
>
> Today, Arthur Mefford presents the first instalment of a thrilling new series of true-fact articles divulging the behind-the-scene workings of 'Murder, Inc.', the Brooklyn killers—who murdered to order for rates as low as a dollar—and the crime-packed life story of the gang's boss Louis 'Lepke' Buchalter, who goes on trial for murder on Sept. 15. The murderous crew's deadly power has been broken by Brooklyn's crusading district attorney, William O'Dwyer, but the complete story of their machinations is revealed here for the first time in complete, authentic detail:"

It is not surprising that the impaneling of a jury was made difficult by such publications. Between the 15th of September and the 24th of that month, 24 veniremen were examined. Of them, 3 had been excused because of acquaintanceship with the District Attorney or his associates; one had said he would not accept accomplice testimony. Only one juror had been accepted as satisfactory to both sides. Of the remaining 19, 14 had derived some impression from reading the newspapers. Of these, 10 had formed an impression adverse to the defendants, and of these 10, 2 had formed an impression that they were guilty.*

Little wonder that the Court stated at the beginning of the afternoon session on September 24 (S. M. 614):

> "You are requested not to talk about the case. Let nobody talk to you about it. Please read nothing, especially The Mirror. Those Mirror articles which > are still being published seem to be raising havoc with the jurors in this case, and there is no way of the court stopping them under the law."

* The remaining five veniremen were, for one reason or another, challenged peremptorily and the record is not clear as to any impressions they may have gained from the newspapers.

Eventually, after 135 prospective jurors had been examined, and after the defendants had exhausted their 30 peremptory challenges and the State 18, a jury was chosen. The fitness of the last two, chosen over the protest of the defendants, was doubtful. Of the jurors examined after the court's admonition on September 24, a large number either said that they had not read or that they had formed no impression from the newspaper articles.

We need not question the good faith of the jurors who served. Whether it was possible for them, in the midst of this maelstrom, to act calmly and deliberately is another question. With the howling of the sensational press in their ears to the point that the Judge was compelled to take notice of it at the trial, we say that justice required at least a calm, deliberate and dispassionate presentation of the case to neutralize the clamor in the community. The proceedings should, therefore, be viewed against the backdrop of their inception.

The tension and excitement which prevailed was heightened and sustained by the theatrical methods pursued at the trial. For the purpose of this petition, we believe it to be sufficient to refer to but one of a number of them. When the witness Bernstein was called to the stand on behalf of the People, he was preceded by a court attendant and was followed by three men known to be detectives (R. 686). Two of them had their badges on (R. 687). An objection by counsel for Buchalter elicited the statement by the prosecuting attorney (R. 687):

> "Mr. Turkus: Is the objection to the protection of the witness?"*

---

* It should be borne in mind that the motive alleged for the killing of Rosen was that the victim threatened to inform on Buchalter.

Counsel for Capone asked for a mistrial because of the atmosphere created by having two police officers standing in an unusual position next to the jury box while the witness testified and having two court officers, one standing directly behind the witness and the other to his left. In this motion, the defendant Weiss joined (R. 687). The Court, in denying the motion for a mistrial, described the scene as follows (R. 688-689):

> "The Court: In the court room, behind or at the end of one of the rear corners of the jury box, are two men with badges whom I assume to be detectives. One is against the side window and one is directly in the corner. There are two court officers in their proper places, one directly behind the witness, another one to his left, at the steps. You have your record. It calls for no ruling. Of course, I deny the motion for a mistrial."

Before commencing his cross-examination, counsel for petitioner Weiss asked for the removal of the court officer who stood within six inches behind the witness chair, and of the two detectives who, having escorted the witness to the chair, stood in sight of the jury (R. 764). He referred to the fact that there were numerous detectives in the courtroom and uniformed policemen outside (R. 765). Counsel also objected to the fact that the three defendants had been brought into the courtroom manacled to police officers and that they had been unmanacled only after the jury were in their seats and the defendants had been seated in the courtroom (R. 766-768). Although the Judge said that he would not permit defendants to be manacled when seated in the courtroom, he excused the procedure in bringing them there by saying (R. 767):

> "The Court: These defendants have been brought into this court-room for trial in a court which is not adapted to the trial of criminal cases. They have to be brought through the public corridor, down a public staircase, and through a door which leads into the Judge's chambers, shocking as this may seem, in order to come into this room. The Court has ruled on this and has said all it is going to say."

The District Attorney's Assurances to the Jury

It was the case of the prosecution that the petitioner Weiss, together with one Harry Strauss, wielded the weapons which killed Joseph Rosen; that the defendant Buchalter had ordered the murder, and the defendant Capone had prescribed the route which an automobile was to follow and had aided the culprits in their escape.

No one saw Weiss and Strauss fire the shots which killed Rosen. No reputable person identified Weiss as the slayer.* According to the story, Weiss did not know Rosen. Consequently, the District Attorney presented an array of confessed criminals to prove his case. Two of them said they were participants in the murder. One, Bernstein, said he was the driver of the automobile in which Weiss had gone to Rosen's store and in which he escaped after the shooting (R. 741). The other, named Berger, said that on instructions from Buchalter he had gone with Weiss to Rosen's store on the night before the shooting so as to identify the victim (R. 1807). Rubin was a messenger whom Buchalter dispatched to summon Berger for his orders (R. 1367). Tannenbaum said he was present when Weiss reported the results of his mission to the defendant Buchalter (R. 2223). Tannenbaum also said that Weiss talked to him about the murder on a later occasion (R. 2226).

Bernstein, Berger and Tannenbaum were all, by their own confession on the stand, despicable characters, steeped in a life of crime. They had committed or participated in every variety of crime from thievery to perjury to murder. They had had the opportunity, during a long but comfortable detention in a hotel by the authorities, to concoct

---

* Mrs. Rosen, the wife of the deceased, was called to identify petitioner Weiss as the man who had come into her store the night before the murder (R. 245, 259, 262). So far from credible was her testimony that it was stricken out at the end of the trial (R. 3533-3534).

a story damning the defendants for the purpose of saving their own miserable skins. If the stories testified to by Bernstein and Berger were true, they were equally guilty of the crime with which the petitioner was charged. The Trial Court instructed the jury that they were accomplices as a matter of law although they were not joined in the indictment. All of these witnesses had admitted their criminal exploits.

Obviously, the District Attorney recognized that the jury might wonder that neither Bernstein nor Berger had been indicted for the murder. This might raise a doubt in the minds of the jury whether they were telling the truth, or were buying absolution by choosing Weiss as the culprit to stand in their place, and satisfy the District Attorney's desire to reach Buchalter and Capone.

To a jury already conditioned against the defendants and inflamed against Weiss because of the veiled insinuation that he was a part of Murder, Incorporated, the District Attorney gave the following assurances (R. 3830):*

> "Don't you worry as to what is going to happen to the witnesses in this case. Don't let anybody fool you with Christmas present nonsense. Gentlemen, the courts have confidence in the integrity and common sense of juries and jurors. Have a little faith in the integrity of the Court and the prosecutor as to what will happen to witnesses. Right now they are too valuable pieces of bric-a-brac to be dealt with as Lepke, Weiss and Capone would want. Let us use common sense here."

---

* Judge Lehman, referring to this statement (R. 4076; 289 N. Y. 229) said: "In those words there is implicit a promise which the prosecuting attorney could not properly or truthfully make that in due time the witnesses would receive their just deserts."

(The records of the County Court, as disclosed to the New York Court of Appeals in Weiss' brief, show that the witnesses Berger and Bernstein were later released. This fact raises doubt as to the good faith of the prosecutor.)

And at page 3821:

> "Whatever my lot in life may be, whether I go out of public office after this case or stay in, whatever the future holds for me, I say to you with all due solemnity, that nothing I have ever learned as a public prosecutor, no talent that I now enjoy, would ever be used in any way with any of you to make you feel that I had discredited you or myself, or any member of the public. And that is just for me alone. And one more thought—if I could spend the rest of my life fighting this type of a situation, I would like it. And that ends it."*

Again we observe that any one factor is merely an integral part of the pattern by which petitioner Weiss was deprived of a fair trial and of due process of law.

The Trial Court's Instructions to the Jury

The taking of testimony commenced on October 20, 1941 (R. 226), and continued until November 25, 1941 (R. 352), a period of some five weeks. Counsel for the defendants addressed the jury for two days (R. 3543-3780). On Saturday, November 29, the District Attorney summed up to the jury the entire morning and part of the afternoon session (R. 3782-3860). The Court commenced its charge at 3:20 in the afternoon (R. 3871) and the jury retired for its deliberations at 10:15 that evening (R. 3992). Within four and a half hours, it brought in its verdict adjudging all three of the defendants guilty of murder in the first degree (R. 3993).

The instructions to the jury had provided the coup de grace. Rarely, we submit, has there been a charge to the jury so one-sided, so damaging, and so obviously a direction to convict.

---

* Judge Loughran said: "A majority of this court is gravely apprehensive that such diffuse departures by the trial prosecutor from legitimate argument may have unduly prejudiced the jury against the defendants" (R. 4086, 289 N. Y. 238).

We do not dwell upon errors of law or deficiencies in the charge which are beyond the scope of this Court's review. The instructions transcended mere error and deprived petitioner of due process when the Court withdrew from the jury matters solely within their province and when he crystallized only those elements of the case which were damaging to the petitioner. Considerations which might have tipped the scales in defendants' favor were minimized and ridiculed by the Court.*

(1) Weiss had tendered an alibi to the effect that on the night of September 12, a time when he was supposed to have been with Bernstein at the scene of the crime, he was actually attending a birthday party for his brother. Five witnesses testified to this and their testimony covers almost 400 pages of the Record (R. 3070-3454). Yet, the Court's charge was entirely silent on this alibi. Counsel for petitioner requested the Court "to instruct the jury that the defendant Weiss does not have the burden of proof as to the defense of alibi." He urged that if the alibi raised a reasonable doubt, the defendant was entitled to acquittal. The Court refused to charge as requested, and the instructions given were prefaced by the casual remark (R. 3949):

> "The Court: Oh, gentlemen, I knew there was something I forgot, and, really, I must apologize. This is in perfectly good faith. I think we are all so tired that I sort of faltered towards the end of the charge. Supposing I charge you as to alibi:"

* Judge Loughran said (R. 4087; 289 N. Y. 181 at page 239): "As an inevitable consequence of these concepts of his function, the Judge's treatment of the proofs took the character of a summation for the People. We will not say such a charge was right."

 During the summation the Trial Judge said (R. 3773): "The charge has been prepared * * *."

The gist of charge then given is contained in the following language (R. 395): "Obviously, if the alibi is true, then he was not where it is claimed he was, but, if the alibi is untrue, it does not amount to anything."* The question of reasonable doubt was completely disregarded.

(2) A vital weakness in the People's case had been developed on cross examination. The witness Bernstein had testified that on Friday, September 11, he was sitting in his car, in Brooklyn, chatting with Harry Strauss when petitioner Weiss, the defendant Capone, and Cohen appeared upon the scene (R. 699). These three individuals then left, accompanied by Harry Strauss, and returned in about three-quarters of an hour. It was upon their return that Bernstein was instructed to steal an automobile which was the vehicle thereafter used in the murder (R. 4042).

Rubin testified that on the same day he had a conversation with the defendant Buchalter, at the latter's office, 200 Fifth Ave., N. Y., and that Buchalter complained about Rosen's talking. Rubin volunteered to see one Weinstein for the purpose of persuading Rosen to be silent; that he later returned, told Buchalter that nothing could be accomplished, whereupon he was dispatched to summon Berger (R. 1366).

Berger testified that Rubin transmitted the summons, whereupon he, Berger, went to see Buchalter at his office

* The accuracy of the instructions, when given, were a matter of dispute in the Court of Appeals. Judge Conway said: "As to the defendant Weiss, his defense in substance was an alibi. The court properly charged as to that defense" (R. 4058; 289 N. Y. 181 at page 210).

Judge Rippey said: "I agree with all that Judge Loughran has said concerning the errors committed during the progress of the trial, that such errors were prejudicial and cannot be overlooked. Reference might have been made to other errors. Among those was the charge substantially to the effect that the burden rested upon Weiss to establish his innocence on the basis of his alibi defense" (R. 4090; 289 N. Y. 181 at page 242).

at 200 Fifth Avenue. From there, Buchalter took Rubin to the East Side of New York where they met petitioner Weiss and where the instructions were given that Berger point Rosen out to Weiss. It was in consequence of these instructions that Berger took Weiss to Rosen's store and identified him (R. 1807, 1811).

The obvious inference from the testimony given on direct examination is that the events followed in sequence, that when Buchalter discovered that nothing could be done to silence Rosen, he determined to have him killed and thereupon set the wheels in motion towards that end.

On cross-examination, however, the witnesses enmeshed themselves in a tissue of inconsistencies, and what is later referred to as a "time table" became significant.

Bernstein said that his meeting with the petitioner Weiss and the others took place about one o'clock in the afternoon (R. 872). Three-quarters of an hour later, he was instructed to steal the automobile (R. 901). This was at least an hour before Rubin had made his report to Buchalter. Rubin's testimony is that he saw Buchalter about one o'clock (R. 1646) and it was about two hours later that he returned from the conference with Weinstein and that Buchalter told him to fetch Berger (R. 1660). This discrepancy was further emphasized when Berger testified that it was about five o'clock when Rubin called upon him (R. 1944). It was after that time that Berger went with Buchalter to the East Side and discussed the identification with Weiss (R. 1945, 1961, 1962, 1964).

When, where and how was the crime planned? Was it before the one o'clock meeting between Bernstein and petitioner in Brooklyn? Was it planned even before Buchalter, the alleged instigator, had spoken to Rubin in the office at 200 Fifth Avenue, New York? Or was the crime determined upon only after three o'clock, when Rubin returned and reported to Buchalter that Weinstein could do nothing to stop Rosen's talking?

Upon argument to the jury, counsel for Weiss obviously drew blood when he hit at this vulnerable spot (R. 3680-3681). The District Attorney countered by suggesting that (R. 3828):

> "Preliminary details could be—someone could be sent to Brownsville and arrange for the car before the actual 'fingering'. What flaw in the People's case is that? What kind of logic is that? You could even do that on the 'phone, and say, 'Get a car right away'."

Here, then was an obvious question for the jury. Did the time table stand up, or did it fall? The Trial Court, however, withdrew this question from the jury. He said (R. 3906-3907):

> "In view of the fact that this was particularly discussed in reference to hour of the day, and it was argued by one of the counsel that inasmuch as the pointing out was at night, after dark, and the testimony by Bernstein as to the theft of the car and the hiring of the drop was during several hours of the day which preceded the pointing out, that that proved that the testimony did not hitch.
>
> "Gentlemen, I refer you to the record because I don't want you to get twisted up on that. There is not a particle of evidence in the case as to when, if at all, Buchalter communicated in reference to the preparation work. The case is blank on that. There is no way of knowing. We do not know whether he did so, or, if he did, whether it was in the morning or the afternoon or the evening; but you have the testimony of Bernstein about when he received the alleged instructions to steal a car and hire a drop, which was earlier in the day.
>
> "Taken in connection with the other facts, or alleged facts, concerning the alleged preparation work, and putting this and that together, you have a right to draw such inference as you see fit.

"Apparently, in the argument that was offered, counsel assumed that Buchalter waited until after the fingering before he gave the instruction; but, under the record, I charge you you are entitled to consider whether or not, at the time of the alleged excited statements by Buchalter during the day, that may be taken as evidence connecting him with either previous instructions or instructions immediately thereafter in connection with the hiring of the drop and the stealing of the car. I don't say you have a right to draw an inference that he sent such an instruction over the telephone, but I do say you have a right, if you see fit, to reconcile the testimony by Rubin and by Bernstein and by Paul Berger on the various points of evidence they have testified to in connection with Buchalter and the preparation work on that day, and that the definite hook-up, if true, is the fingering plus the declaration by Buchalter. I feel that for accuracy I should refer to the record on this, so that you won't be misled."

During the taking of the exceptions (the jury had been excused by the Court), it was pointed out to the Judge that according to the testimony the time of the original conversation between Buchalter and Rubin had been fixed at one o'clock (R. 3976).

When the jury was recalled, the Court said (R. 3989-3990):

"I charged, in reference to the time table on Friday before the Rosen alleged murder, that I did not recall any specific hour mentioned in the record unless it was in the cross-examination somewhere, as to Rubin testifying just when he called and found Buchalter in such a state in making these declarations that he alleges Buchalter made. My attention has been called to page 1483 of the cross-examination, in which the time is fixed as follows: 'Sometime about one o'clock, I imagine, in the afternoon.'

My attention has also been called to a possible confusion in my charge as to the possibility of a communication having been, even before that, given by Buchalter to somebody in Brooklyn to go ahead with the work of preparation. That would make it, of course, entirely consistent with the time table set up by Bernstein as to when he was given instructions to steal the car and get a drop. I want to correct any possible mischoice of language that might cause a misunderstanding. The case is blind as to whether or not Buchalter communicated. There is no way we know. You cannot presume that he did and you cannot presume that he did not, but I will say that the argument of one of the counsel for the defense in attacking the time tables as told by Bernstein as inconsistent with Rubin's testimony and Berger's testimony, is predicated upon an assumption on his part that there was no communication by Buchalter until after Rubin returned and gave word that Weinstein could not do anything. I charge you this—and I think this is accurate and will hold and will not be error—that there is no such presumption, and you are not justified in so presuming. If there is no such presumption, of course, then the argument attacking the time table fails. I am not afraid of that charge. There is an exception to all of the defendants on this modification."* (Italics ours.)

This is but an illustration of the devastating effect of the Court's instructions. Matters which were adduced in vague terms upon direct examination were crystallized and made specific on cross examination. Yet, the Trial Judge, in instructing the jury, reversed the process. He said (R. 3903):

> "Cross-examination is almost impossible to correctly state in such a manner that two people can agree on its fairness because, while direct examination goes right to the point, cross-examination, being for the purpose of breaking down the direct, is largely hit or miss; it is blank cartridge shooting. Once in a while you find it shown that a bullet had hit, but whether there is a hit or not may be a matter of dispute.

* As to this, Judge Loughran said:

"Thus the last word of the judge withdrew from the jury a vital issue of fact and disposed of it in favor of the People as matter of law. This was obvious error" (R. 4080; 289 N. Y. 181 at page 233).

> "Unless there be an outstanding point come out on cross-examination, the Court would only ten' to confuse and mislead the jury if it attempted to discuss it."

(3) This disparagement of cross-examination and the attempt of the Trial Court to bolster the credibility of the People's witnesses permeates the entire charge. Referring to impeachment by reference to testimony given before the Grand Jury, the Court said (R. 3899-3900):

> "Something else was said in regard to an alleged failure of some witness to tell something to the Grand Jury that the witness testified to here, but, gentlemen, the Grand Jury is not a trial body. It may take only ten minutes to get enough evidence to get an indictment, but it may take ten weeks to get all of the evidence before a trial jury and get a decision as to the guilt or innocence of the accused. The failure to state facts concerning which the witness is not asked before the Grand Jury means nothing whatever. You will just disregard it. The only reason you are permitted to hear a witness cross-examined in regard to Grand Jury minutes is where he testified before the Grand Jury in contradiction of something that he testified to here. Bear that in mind. Don't be misled by that argument."*

* One might compare this instruction, for example, with the testimony of Bernstein on cross-examination (R. 1266-1267):

> "Q. You testified that on both occasions, the night before and the morning of the killing, that Weiss distributed the guns? A. Yes, sir.
>
> "Q. That was true, wasn't it? A. Yes, sir.
>
> "Q. Now were you asked these questions in your testimony before the Grand Jury and did you make these answers: * * *
>
> "Q. What did you do with the guns when you opened the package? A. Harry opened the package and gave Mendy a gun, Jimmy a gun, and he took one himself.'
>
> "Were you asked those questions and did you make those answers? A. Yes, sir.
>
> "Q. And the Harry that you referred to in your testimony was not Weiss; it was Harry Strauss, wasn't it? A. It is a mistake, sir."

(Note continued on following page)

One witness, Magoon, had brazenly asserted on cross-examination that never in his life had he told anything but "little white lies" (R. 2514). However, the jury were not permitted to consider this obvious exaggeration in its bearing upon the witness' credibility. The Court admonished the jury (R. 3898-3899):

> "Now, I want to take up a little matter with you. I heard it in the summation of one of the counsel, and I feel that I really should see that none of you is misled by it. Much was said about a foolish remark —it might better be characterized as a fool remark— by one of the witnesses to the effect that he had never told an important lie. I would not specifically allude to this if so much had not been made of it in the argument. I charge you not to let the decision of so important a case as this turn on a question of mockery or ridicule. I mean your reaction to mockery or ridicule, of a specific witness for a stupid answer such as that. This case is too important to be decided on the basis of ridicule."

Another example relates to the impeachment of witnesses when they were confronted with prior statements. A stock answer seems to have been along the line:

> "If it is in the book, it is so" (R. 3894). "If it is in there, I said it". (see R. 2334, 2335.)

The Court instructed the jury (R. 3894):

> "The usual method is to say, 'On such and such an occasion were you asked the following question

---

(Note continued from preceding page)

There should also be considered, in connection with this charge, the testimony of Tannenbaum during which the following appears from the cross examination (R. 2345):

> "Q. Didn't you testify before the Federal Grand Jury that you only knew Mendy Weiss slightly? A. Yes, sir.
> "Q. That was false, you say now? A. Yes, sir.
> "Q. That was a deliberate false statement you made to the Federal Grand Jury? A. It was."

> and did you give the following answer?' Well, of course, if a man is asked whether he made an admission a long time ago, he may remember that, but to put a burden upon him of remembering the exact text of question and answer is an unholy thing. We have a court reporter here to supply daily minutes in this case because counsel forget over night the questions and answers in text form of the day before; but, you see, when a witness is asked, 'Answer yes or no,' about something that he testified to a long time before, you get a normal response sometimes, 'If it is in the book, it is so.' There is a concession of the accuracy of the minutes the witness is not disputing. I am just calling your attention to it. That is a matter of application of sound common sense." (Italics ours.)

(4) The excitement to which we have referred as coloring the atmosphere of the trial even crept into the Court's charge and colored not only his thinking but his instructions to the jury.

In the examination of Bernstein, the prosecuting attorney had elicited on direct examination that the witness had been confined since the time of his surrender to a detective in a hotel. He and others were in a separate suite to which access could be had "only through certain methods" (R. 762). The doors were barricaded and there were detectives present armed with machine guns and shot guns. There was an arrangement of mirrors so that the detectives could see people coming through the corridor and there was a peephole in the door (R. 762-763). Objections were made to this testimony and exceptions taken by the defendants (R. 762-763). (Berger was also placed in custody in a hotel, R. 1877, as was Tannenbaum, R. 2231.) The housing of witnesses was the subject of comment by counsel for the defendants in their addresses to the jury. The Court, in its instructions to the jury, said (R. 3900-3901):

> "There has been considerable confusion in the argument, so far as your receptivities are concerned mentally, on the question of the housing of witnesses. Gentlemen, I charge you the District Attorney does not house those witnesses. The District Attorney has not charge of those witnesses. Those witnesses are in custody under a court order, which the jury may not question, because you don't know the reason why that order was made in each case, and I would not dare to tell you; I would not be allowed to tell you. Sufficient unto the judgment of the Court which had the facts before it, such orders were made because the Court deemed it, to be a case where the witnesses should not be kept in the House of Detention or in prison. I am not permitted to tell you the reasons. They were not guests of any hotel, as alluded to by the summation. Don't fool yourselves on that. They could not come and go; they could not mingle with anybody; they could not go out to take a walk. They were prisoners, held under rigid guard. All of this argument about their having eaten fare provided by the hotel instead of fare sent up from Raymond Street Jail will be disregarded. They were held prisoners in the hotel, and, of course, they had to get their food in the hotel, in their rooms." (Italics ours.)

After exception was taken to this portion of the charge by counsel for Weiss (R. 3980) in the absence of the jury, the Court, when the jury was recalled, said (R. 3991):

"On Weiss, my attention is called to the fact I used the word 'dare' in connection with 'I would not dare to state to you the reason the Court had for housing witnesses in hotels.' The word 'dare' was not intended to mean that I was afraid, or that there was anything about it of such an appalling nature that you should feel it was something that would make you shudder if it was revealed. The word 'dare' means that, under the rules of evidence, if I dared to tell you that, I believe it would be regarded or might be regarded by an appellate tribunal, in the contingent event of this case having to come up for review, as reversible error. To *avoid that, I withdraw the word 'dare.'" (Italics ours.)

Any doubt of the emotional reaction of the Court as communicated to the jury is dissipated by his statement in excusing the necessity of the prosecutor's production of unsavory witnesses. He said (R. 3903-3904):

> "When rogues fall out, it is a wise man's delight; so, while the Court submits to you consideration of the testimony of witnesses who, by their own admissions and otherwise are impeached as professional criminals, murderers, thieves, perjurers, in the long run it comes down to this: Are they telling the truth now?"

Again an exception was taken in the absence of the jury (R. 3974). This obviously damaging expression was not cured by the Court's statement when the jury was recalled (R. 3989):

> "At one place during the charge I quoted an old saw, 'When rogues fall out, wise men delight'. That was intended to have general application. It was not intended as calling the defendant names, but, lest it be misunderstood as having specific application to the de-

---

* We need not speculate on the influence which caused the Court to make his earlier remarks. He said, in the absence of the jury (R. 3973-3974):

> "The Court: I could not possibly tell the jury the real reason, but the danger of assassination is the reason, as is well known. There would be no trial here had those witnesses been kept in the jail. So far as Bronx County Jail is concerned, that is a Bronx County matter, not subject to order here, and that is a thoroughly modern jail. There is no comparison between that and the Raymond Street Jail or the old Tombs where these witnesses had to be kept had they not been housed in hotels. An experience in another case shows it would be utter folly to send any material witness to Queens County Jail because of what happened in the Maione-Abbandando case, involving the bribery of the lone jailer at night."

> fendants as rogues, the Court withdraws and apologizes for it. It was not so meant. Just disregard it.'"*

Petitioner does not controvert the fact that the Trial Judge did recite, in some instances correctly, in others erroneously, those standard rules of law which are required in a criminal case. He told the jury that the burden lay on the People to prove its case beyond a reasonable doubt (R. 3929-3930; 3883); that no inference could be drawn from the failure on the part of the defendants to take the stand (R. 3927); and that the jury were the judges of the credibility of the witnesses (R. 3903). In their setting, however, these statements were mere platitudes and shibboleths which the jury could well infer were only for the purpose of the record and should not interfere with what they were actually instructed to find.

Petitioner urges, as a majority of the Court below found, that these were grievous errors which were not objectionable merely as infringement upon the law or deficiencies in practice. The tenor of the instructions and the statements made therein, your petitioner urges, resulted in a withdrawal of the case from the jury and in the direction of a verdict of guilt.

---

* The majority of the Court of Appeals merely quote this in answer to the contention that the "rogues" epigram charge was error (R. 4030; 289 N. Y. 181). But Judges Loughran, Desmond and Rippey wrote (R. 4086; 289 N. Y. 238):

> "Although the jury were brought back from their deliberations and advised to disregard the epigram last quoted from the charge, we are still left with the vexed question whether the belated admonition of the court sufficed to remove the obvious intimation which was conveyed to the jury by so pithy a dictum from the bench. (Cf. People v. Robinson, 273 N. Y. 438.)"

It has well been said: "When an idea once gets into a juror's mind, nothing on earth will get it out again."

The Denial to Petitioner of Access to Information Available to the Prosecutor

An essential link in the People's case was anchored upon the instructions alleged to have been given by the defendant Buchalter that Berger identify Rosen for Weiss. The claim is that on September 11, 1936, Berger, in response to a summons conveyed by Rubin, visited Buchalter's office at 200 Fifth Avenue, New York City (R. 1804, 1945); that Buchalter and Berger then left this building together at about five o'clock in the afternoon (R. 1805, 1960), proceeding to the East Side where they conferred with Weiss (R. 1806-1807, 1961-1964).

It appears that during the period in question Buchalter was under surveillance by representatives of the New York Police Department. The defendants had subpoenaed the records of the Police Department, which were brought to Court and apparently turned over to the prosecuting attorney (R. 1880-1883, 2140-2141). Defendants' request that they be permitted to examine these reports was refused (R. 2148-2154). The reports were thereupon sealed and marked as an exhibit for identification (R. 2155). What these reports disclose, petitioner has no way of knowing.

On the application for reargument to the Court of Appeals, that Court examined these reports. A fair inference from its opinion (R. 4120) is that the surveillance by the police officials was a fact. The Court expressed the opinion that the information disclosed by the reports was inconclusive because only the lobby of the building at 200 Fifth Avenue was under observation and the defendant Buchalter could have and did on occasion evade the observers.

Yet Berger's testimony, if not a larger portion of the People's case, may well have been subject to impeachment by the results even of this limited surveillance. Upon cross-examination the witness revealed that when he and Buchalter left 200 Fifth Avenue on September 11, they walked out of the front entrance of that building (R. 1960). They crossed the street and hailed a taxicab which was passing by. Buchalter was not in disguise (R. 1959).

The information contained in the police reports, therefore, might have had probative value from one of two aspects. If the report disclosed that at about five o'clock on September 11, 1936, Buchalter was at a place other than 200 Fifth Avenue, then clearly Berger's story would be false. This would amount to affirmative contradiction.

If, on the other hand, the reports revealed that detectives were actually stationed at the entrance to 200 Fifth Avenue, and that Buchalter did not emerge from that entrance accompanied by another person, the evidence, while negative, might well have probative force in impeaching Berger's testimony.

In either aspect, we submit, the defendant should have had access to these reports, the contents of which were known to the District Attorney.

These reports might well have controverted or at least cast doubt upon Tannenbaum's story that some three or four days after September 11, Weiss visited Buchalter and "confessed" the shooting, and that he made the same "confession" when the witness and Weiss went from Buchalter's office to a restaurant (R. 2223, 2224 2225).

This question of surveillance was argued to the jury on summation by defendant Buchalter's counsel (R. 3589-3593). The attorney for the People answered (R. 3828):

> "Somebody says Dewey's detectives and police surrounded the whole place. If there had been that kind of surveillance of Lepke, they would have caught him—I don't mean that—I mean the law enforcement would have caught them red-handed, the whole bunch of them."

Thus, the defendants and the jury were obliged to speculate, whereas the District Attorney knew, or was in a position to know what the reports revealed. Fairness demanded that even if the entirety of the report could not be revealed to counsel, those portions of the report directly pertinent to the trial should have been made available to the defendants.

The Trial Judge's Constant Interference with Presentation of Defenses, His Numerous Rebukes and Repressions of Defendants' Counsel, Preventing Adequate Defense

This point, addressed to the essential unfairness of the whole trial in respect of all the defendants, was presented to the Trial Court as follows (R. 2602-2603):

> "* * * At this time I move for the withdrawal of a juror and the declaration of a mistrial.
>
> "The Court: On what ground?
>
> "Mr. Rosenthal: Upon the ground that the action of the Court toward defense counsel and upon the observations of this Court throughout this trial as to the testimony of various witnesses and what the import of their testimony is throughout the trial, being an invasion of the jury's province.
>
> "The Court: Gentlemen of the jury, disregard that.
>
> "These are just tactics trying to set the jury against the Court, thereby lessening the authority of the Court with the jury—giving the Court instructions.
>
> "Mr. Rosenthal: I except to that observation.
>
> "The Court: The motion is denied.
>
> "Defense Counsel: All except."

Because the number of these interferences by the Trial Judge is a main factor here—showing studied and systematic disparagement of the defense—it is impossible, within the limits of necessary brevity, to do more than cite salient examples.

Twice, for example, the Court came to the rescue of the People's witnesses by endeavoring to excuse flagrant perjury (R. 2358, 1712). People's witness Tannenbaum had been forced to admit that he had signed and sworn to a false affidavit when charged with murder in Sullivan County, New York (R. 2323-2330). The Trial Judge thereupon interposed a question suggesting that this was justifiable perjury. This is shown by the following excerpt from Tannenbaum's re-direct examination (R. 2358):

> "Q. (By the district attorney) At any rate, at the time you entered the plea of not guilty and signed Defendants' Exhibit 2, you were then a defendant resisting conviction on the indictment therein alleged, namely, the killing of one Irving Ashkenas, is that right? A. Yes.
>
> "The Court: You were then fighting to save your own life, is that it?
>
> "The Witness: Yes, sir."

On other occasions, the Trial Judge made repeated efforts to save the People's witnesses from damaging admissions which would militate against their credibility. A striking illustration appears during the cross-examination of the witness Bernstein, when defense counsel inquired into his knowledge that an automobile stolen by him was to be used in connection with the murder. He was asked by the Court (R. 1181):

> "Q. Then the impression was, if the car was found, it was stolen for the purpose of stripping? A. Yes, sir.
>
> "Q. And not for the purpose of committing any other crime? A. Yes, sir."

Defense counsel then inquired (R. 1181):

> "Q. What were you trying to conceal, if the car was found, so as to make it look as if it was only for stripping and not for any other purpose?"

Thereupon the Court prevented a response by interrupting and asking (R. 1182):

> "Q. (Interrupting) Just answer the next question yes or no—Did you have a suspicion as to what Strauss wanted the car for?"

Counsel objected, stating (R. 1182):

> "Mr. Rosenthal: I object.
> "The Court: The objection is sustained. I thought you wanted that evidence.
> "Mr. Rosenthal: I don't want words put in the witness' mouth. I wanted him to tell me, not have your Honor ask him a question which would call for yes or no—I want him to tell the jury the reason. I don't want the reason furnished.
> "Mr. Turkus: I object to that.
> "The Court: It does not penetrate the Court's skin. Go ahead."

After some sparring without any responsive answer by the witness, the Court again intervened (R. 1184):

> "By the Court:
> "Q. Was that the reason? A. I did not know there was to be a murder or I would never have him take out the radio of the car."

So at last the witness answered the unanswered question in the way the Judge intended it should be answered.

On the vitally important issue of the "time table", almost invariably the Judge gratuitously protected and bolstered the People's witnesses adversely to petitioner (R. 1974-1975, 1972-1973, 1964, 1658, 2173, 2179). For instance, during the cross-examination of the People's witness Berger by Mr. Barshay, the following occurred (R. 1974-1975):

> "Q. And the best time you can give us is 9:30? A. Between 9:30 and 10. I left that place 9:30, to the best of my recollection.
>
> . . . . . .

"Q. How much time did you spend in Brownsville near the vicinity of Sackman and Livonia, Saratoga and Livonia, and Rosen's candy store, all together?

"Mr. Turkus: I object to it as already answered to the best of his recollection.

"The Court: His testimony shows it is all guesswork.

"Mr. Barshay: He has fixed himself the time as between 9:30 and 10.

"The Court: Pardon me, he has not fixed the time. The Court won't discuss that.

"Q. Mr. Witness, did you say between 9:30 and 10?

"The Court: I know what he said, but the Court knows it means nothing.

"Mr. Barshay: I take an exception to the Court's remarks.

"The Court: Now proceed.

"Mr. Barshay: And I ask for the withdrawal of a juror and the declaration of a mistrial.

"The Court: On what ground?

"Mr. Barshay: On the ground of prejudice, when the Court said that does not mean anything.

"The Court: You mean to have a withdrawal of a juror because the Court will not agree with you that guessing as to time is accurate?

"Mr. Barshay: No, sir, that is not my point.

"The Court: I think it is. Denied.

"Mr. Barshay: Exception, sir."

The Judge constantly accused defendants' counsel of "manufacturing a record" (R. 3870, 3867), of attempting to make a "padded record" (R. 3865), and of being "disorderly" (R. 3869, 3868). One of many examples of this sort of thing, is the following statement of the Court to one of petitioner's counsel, Judge Talley (R. 2170-2171):

> "The Court: You are distinctly rude and uncivil. The Court refuses to be goaded to the extent that you are obviously trying to goad the Court at this or any other time. The Court will be patient to the utmost and take it on both cheeks from counsel. Now please proceed."

In many instances, the moment counsel so much as attempted to state a ground for any objection, the Judge rebuked them with repeated statements beginning with the words "do not argue" (R. 1281, 1524-1525, 2744, 3049-3050, 3054). A sample of this, from R. 3866, is this animadversion:

> "The Court: Do not argue. This is all out of order. It has never been done in any trial before. I have indulged you to the utmost throughout this trial, and that is the only reason I am allowing you to do it."

During cross-examination of the People's witnesses, if any matter had been so little as barely touched on previously in the cross-examination, the Trial Judge sustained objection to any repetition whatsoever of such matter* (R. 2405, 2065, 1653, 2064, 295, 300, 302, 665, 675, 676-677, 877, 922, 1055, 1082, 1136, 1173, 1176, 1886, 1490, 1212, 1226, 1231, 1510, 1513, 2303).

Others of the more important instances, of various types, akin to the foregoing, are to be found on record pages 2073-2075, 2135-2138, 2170-2171, 2951-2952, 2955, 3229-3230.

---

* Regarding this, Judges Loughran and Desmond said in the Court of Appeals (R. 4084-4085; 289 N. Y. 237):

> "We think these exceptions are not without merit. Mr. Wigmore says: 'Repeating precisely the same allocable question on cross-examination, in order by sheer moral force to compel a witness to admit the truth, after an original false answer or refusal to answer, is a process which not only savors of intimidation and browbeating but also tends to waste time. Nevertheless, when used sparingly and against a witness who in the cross-examiner's belief is falsifying, there ought to be no judicial interference. * * * Simple as the expedient seems, it rests on a sound psychology; and the annals of our trials demonstrate its power.' (3 Wigmore on Evidence (3d ed.) § 782, p. 146. See, also, 1 Chamberlayne, The Modern Law of Evidence, § 553.)"

2967-2968, 3025-3026, 1883, 654-659, 1209, 2066, 2503, 2131, 1273, 1511, 1512, 1187-1188, 1113-1114. These are only a few of the whole number of like instances which may be noted in reading the record.

People v. Becker, 210 N. Y. 274, 311, 289-312, remarkably resembles the case at bar and is strikingly apposite.

Grounds Upon Which the Jurisdiction of this Court is Invoked

It is respectfully submitted that this Court has jurisdiction of this petition for certiorari under Section 237(b) of the Judicial Code as amended by the Act of February 13, 1925, c. 229, Section 1 (43 Stat. 937); 28 U. S. C. A. Section 344(b), such petition being one to review the final judgment of the Court of Appeals of the State of New York, the highest Court of that State in which a decision could be had, rendered October 30, 1942 (R. 4094-4097).

The judgment affirmed a conviction and judgment for sentence of death (R. 218-221); and in said Court of Appeals petitioner especially set up and claimed, under the Fourteenth Amendment of the Constitution of the United States, the right, privilege and immunity against being deprived by the State of New York of his life and liberty without due process of law "and", as certified by the Court of Appeals, "this point was considered and necessarily decided by this Court" (R. 4095), this point having been specifically presented in Buchalter's brief in support of his motion for reargument (R. 4103-4114), which was joined in by petitioner Weiss (R. 4120).

Reasons Relied Upon for the Allowance of the Writ

The Court of Appeals of the State of New York has decided a federal question of substance in a way probably not in accord with applicable decisions of this Court, in that the Court of Appeals of the State of New York has affirmed a judgment and sentence of death wherein, tested by an appraisal of the totality of the facts in this case (Betts v. Brady, June 1, 1942, 316 U. S. 455, 462), the petitioner was deprived of his life and liberty without due process of law.

See:

Mooney v. Holohan (1935), 294 U. S. 103, 112-113;
Powell v. Alabama (1932), 287 U. S. 45, 57-73;
Moore v. Dempsey (1923), 261 U. S. 86, 90-91;
Hysler v. Florida (1942), 315 U. S. 411, 413;
Hill v. Texas (June 1, 1942), 316 U. S. 400, 406;
Brown v. Mississippi (1936), 297 U. S. 278, 286;
Chambers v. Florida (1940), 309 U. S. 227, 236-241;
Frank v. Mangum (1915), 237 U. S. 309, 335-336;
Lisenba v. California (December, 1941), 314 U. S. 219, 236-237;
Ward v. Texas (June 1, 1942), 316 U. S. 547, 550.

WHEREFORE, petitioner Weiss prays that a writ of certiorari may issue out of and under the seal of this Court, directed to the Court of Appeals of the State of New York, commanding the said Court to certify and send to this Court for review and determination, as provided by law, this cause and a complete transcript of the record and of all proceedings had herein; and that the order of the Court of Appeals of the State of New York affirming the judgment in this cause may be reversed and that the petitioner Weiss may have such other and further relief in the premises as this Court may deem proper.

Dated, December 31st, 1942.

EMANUEL WEISS,
Petitioner.

ARTHUR GARFIELD HAYS,
Counsel for Petitioner.

ALFRED J. TALLEY,
JOHN SCHULMAN,
M. M. KREINDLER,
HARRY G. ANDERSON,
SAMUEL BADER,
GERALD WEATHERLY,
of Counsel.

STATE OF NEW YORK
COUNTY OF NEW YORK } ss.:

I hereby certify that I have examined the foregoing petition for a writ of certiorari and that in my opinion it is well founded and the cause is one in which the petition should be granted.

ARTHUR GARFIELD HAYS,
Counsel for Petitioner.

Supreme Court of the United States

OCTOBER TERM—1942

EMANUEL WEISS,

Petitioner,

against

PEOPLE OF THE STATE OF NEW YORK,

Respondent.

BRIEF IN SUPPORT OF PETITION FOR CERTIORARI.

The Opinions Below

The four opinions of the Court of Appeals of the State of New York are printed in the record (R. 4030-4091) and are officially reported in the weekly advance sheets No. 189, December 12, 1942, 289 N. Y. 181. The opinion per curiam of the Court of Appeals denying the motion for reargument has not as yet been officially reported, but appears in the record (R. 4120-4121).

Statement of Jurisdiction, Questions Presented, and Facts

The statement under which the jurisdiction of this Court is invoked, of the questions presented, and of the factual matter relevant to this application, appear in the petition to which this brief is annexed.

Argument

Petitioner urges that he has been convicted for the crime of murder and has been sentenced to death as a result of a trial so grossly unfair that he was denied due process of law.

The basis of his plea may be stated in the language employed by this Court in Brown v. Mississippi, 297 U. S. 278, 286:

> "The complaint is not of the commission of mere error, but of a wrong so fundamental that it made the whole proceeding a mere pretense of a trial. * * *"

POINT I

The petitioner was deprived of his liberty and life without due process of law by a proceeding which was a trial only in form and not in substance.

This Court has recently said that the guarantee of due process is not formulated in a set of hard and fast rules, but that "Asserted denial is to be tested by an appraisal of the totality of facts in a given case" (Betts v. Brady, 316 U. S. 455, 462).

Basic criteria are whether there has been "a charge fairly made and fairly tried in a public tribunal free of prejudice, passion, excitement and tyrannical power" (Chambers v. Florida, 309 U. S. 227, 236-237) and whether "civilized standards for the trial of guilt or innocence" have been observed (Hysler v. Florida, 315 U. S. 411, 413).

> "What may not be taken away is notice of the charge and an adequate opportunity to be heard in defense of it."
>
> "The law * * * is sedulous in maintaining for a defendant charged with crime whatever forms of procedure are of the essence of an opportunity to defend" (Snyder v. Massachusetts, 291 U. S. 97, 105, 122).

There is no due process within the meaning of the constitutional guarantees "if the case is that the whole proceeding is a mask—that counsel, jury and judge were swept to the fatal end by an irresistible wave of public passion, and that the State Courts failed to correct the wrong" (Moore v. Dempsey, 261 U. S. 86, 91).

If the absence of fairness so fatally infects a trial as to constitute a deprivation of due process, then it lies within the jurisdiction of this Court to reverse the action of the State Court (Hill v. Texas, 316 U. S. 400)—this for the purpose of translating into living law and maintaining the constitutional shield for the benefit of every human being subject to our Constitution (Chambers v. Florida, 309 U. S. 227, 241). This protection extends to all persons, regardless of belief in their guilt or innocence, since "Not the least merit of our constitutional system is that its safeguards extend to all—the least deserving as well as the most virtuous" (Hill v. Texas, 316 U. S. 400, 406). The vitality of our system of law meets its test when challenged by an individual who may lack the Court's sympathy.

Petitioner Weiss was, under the Constitution and Laws of the State of New York, entitled to a trial by jury (Constitution of the State of New York, Article 1, Section 1, Appendix A). It was a privilege he could not waive even by his own affirmative act (Constitution of the State of New York, Article 1, Section 2, Appendix B; Cancemi v. People, 18 N. Y. 128).

In New York State, a person indicted for murder may not plead guilty and may not be condemned to death except after trial before a jury (People v. La Barbera, 274 N. Y. 339, 343).

By the statutes of the State, guilt at the trial must be established beyond a reasonable doubt and all questions of fact lie within the province of the jury (Code of Criminal Procedure of the State of New York, Section 389, Appendix H; Penal Law of the State of New York, Section 1041, Appendix C; Code of Criminal Procedure of the State of New York, Section 419, Appendix D).

The New York Court of Appeals has held that:

> "Both by statute and common law, they" (the jury) "are the exclusive judges of all questions of fact and every essential element of a crime presents a question of fact, whether there is any conflict in the evidence or not" (People v. Walker, 198 N. Y. 329, 334).
>
> People v. Pignataro, 263 N. Y. 229, 240.

In Smith v. Western Pacific Ry. Co., 203 N. Y. 499, a civil case, the Court said (p. 503):

> "This requires that questions of fact in common law actions shall be settled by a jury, and that the court shall not assume directly or indirectly to take from the jury or to itself such prerogative."

Despite these standards of fairness recognized by the State of New York, the record in this case discloses a conviction and death sentence resulting from a trial which disregarded the fundamental guarantees which underlie a jury trial. The Chief Judge, who, with obvious misgivings, cast the deciding vote for affirmance, said in most explicit terms that (R. 4077-4078; 289 N. Y. 181):

> "* * * the Court in the charge instructed the jury as a matter of law upon some questions of fact which only the jury had the right to determine, and I may add parenthetically that I doubt whether I would agree with the inferences drawn by the Trial Judge even if he had been the trier of the facts."

The very concept of trial by jury presupposes that there will be a presentation of issues of fact to that body and that the defendant will be judged only on the evidence presented in accordance with law, free from passion, prejudice, excitement, and tyrannical power (Chambers v. Florida, 309 U. S. 227, 237).

The record in the case at bar cannot be squared with principles of due process as pronounced by this Court. It discloses that the proceedings were dominated by passion, prejudice and public excitement. Before the trial commenced and during its continuance, newspaper articles had poisoned the public mind against the defendants and had virtually convicted them without trial. Because Weiss was jointly indicted with the defendant Buchalter, he was tried not for the crime charged but indirectly upon an accusation that he was a member of "Murder, Inc." In the public mind, anyone accused with Buchalter was presumptively a member of that gruesome crew.

This public hysteria invaded the courtroom itself. The Trial Judge was perforce obliged to take cognizance of it in impaneling the jury. The articles appearing in the press, and particularly in the Daily Mirror, were, he said, "raising havoc with the jurors in this case." Men called for duty in a special "blue ribbon" panel had prejudged the defendants before a single witness had been called.

Public clamor was more than ever aroused when the District Attorney, whose assistants were prosecuting the case, became a candidate for public office. He was acclaimed as the nemesis of Murder Inc. The prosecution of the defendants had become, as counsel for Weiss protested, "a football of a political situation".

One may conjecture that with careful observance of decorum, restraint and impartiality at the trial, the crushing effect of this hostile atmosphere might have been to some extent allayed. Yet, we find the trial attended by theatrical effects which increased instead of subduing the tension. The defendants were brought into the courtroom manacled to police officers, the process of removing these manacles took place within sight of the jury; witnesses called by the People were attended by armed guards, giving the implication that this was necessary for the witnesses' protection.*

The prosecuting attorney added fuel to the flames when he assured the jury that the unsavory characters called on behalf of the prosecution would meet their just deserts after they had served their purpose. Even the Trial Judge was not immune to the excitement which had been created, and his emotional reaction to the case was communicated to the jury. It would have been a strong-minded jury, indeed, which could have resisted the hostility thus engendered.

In this setting, it is impossible to say that the petitioner Weiss had the fair trial to which he is entitled as a matter of fundamental law.

Weiss, it is true, was represented in Court by counsel of his own choosing. His lawyers might as well not have been there. Efforts to preserve his rights were frustrated by the Trial Judge. Arguments made by his counsel in summation, based on the evidence adduced, were belittled, derided and disparaged. The jury were virtually told to disregard them.

The language of the Court of Appeals in People v. Becker, 210 N. Y. 274, 311, is singularly appropriate in this case:

> "Under the rulings of the court the defendant did not have that manner of trial which the law guaranteed to him. His counsel was hampered and embarrassed; his case was discredited and weakened; full and impartial consideration by the jury was impeded and prevented. He never had a fair chance to defend his life and it would be a lasting reproach to the state if under those circumstances it should exact its forfeiture."

---

* This suggestion was made explicit by the prosecutor (see petition page 11).

Reference has been made in the petition to the disparagement of cross-examination both while testimony was being adduced and in the charge. An important purpose of assuring to a defendant charged with crime the right to be represented by counsel is to enable him to subject his accusers to cross-examination by persons skilled in that art.

In People v. Becker, 210 N. Y. 274, the Court quoted from Wigmore on Evidence (2 Wigmore on Evidence, § 1367) the principle (p. 305) that:

> "For two centuries past, the policy of the Anglo-American system of evidence has been to regard the necessity of testing by cross-examination as a vital feature of the law. The belief that no safeguard for testing the value of human statements is comparable to that furnished by cross-examination, and the conviction that no statement (unless by special exception) should be used as testimony until it has been probed and sublimated by that test, has found increasing strength in lengthening experience."

It was held that the deprivation of the right to cross-examine witnesses is a denial of a substantial right. What does it avail a defendant in a criminal case to have counsel, if that counsel's usefulness and function is destroyed by the Court?

The travesty in the proceedings reached its climax when the Trial Judge instructed the jury. Again and again he determined questions of fact for the jury and instructed them in respect of these issues as though they were questions of law. This is not a problem of mere "error" or one of the latitude to be afforded a Trial Judge in his charge to the jury. It was a perversion of the function of a Judge presiding at a criminal trial. Notwithstanding the latitude allowed Judges in many jurisdictions to comment upon evidence, it is a universal and fundamental rule under our system of law that the instructions must be fair, impartial and unbiased.

This Court, in Hickory v. United States, 160 U. S. 408, 423, repeated what it considered to be the well founded rule that:

> "When there is sufficient evidence upon a given point to go to a jury, it is the duty of the judge to submit it calmly and impartially. And if the expression of an opinion upon such evidence becomes a matter of duty under the circumstances of the particular case, great care should be exercised that such expression should be so given as not to mislead, and especially that it should not be one-sided."

In Minner v. United States, 57 Fed. (2d) 506, the Court, in commenting upon the rule that a judge need not be a mere automatic oracle of the law, but a living participant in the trial, said (p. 513):

> "But in summing up and commenting on the evidence, the trial judge should be governed by certain well recognized limitations inherent in the very nature of the judicial office. He should state the evidence fairly and accurately, both that which is favorable and that which is unfavorable to the accused. His statements should not be argumentative, but impartial, dispassionate, and judicial; and they should be so carefully guarded that the jurors are left free to exercise their independent judgment upon the facts."

Judge Kenyon, writing for a unanimous court reversing the conviction in Weare v. United States, 1 F. 2d 617 (cited with approval in People v. Ohanian, 245 N. Y. 227, 232), said at page 619:

> "The whole tenor of the instructions was apparently to influence the jury to return a verdict of guilty. It was a palpable attempt to usurp the function of the jury as to fact questions and to impose the will and desire of the court upon it, and to interfere with the independent judgment of the jurors. Under the constitution one accused of crime is entitled to a determination by a jury of the fact questions involved. The jury can easily be misled by the court. Its members are sensitive to the opinion of > the court, and it is not a fair jury trial when the court turns from legitimate instructions as to the law to argue the facts in favor of the prosecution. The government provides an officer to argue the case to the jury. That is not a part of the court's duty. He is not precluded, of course, from expressing his opinion of the facts,* but he is precluded from giving a one sided charge in the nature of an argument. We do not think the error in this case is cured by the mere statement to the jury that they were not bound by his opinion, and that they should follow their own judgment."

A similar statement appears in People v. Becker, 210 N. Y. 274, 307-308.

In this connection, we recall to the Court that portion of the petition which refers to the failure of the Trial Judge to mention Weiss' alibi in the body of his instructions. Whether the charge subsequently given by him at the request of counsel was or was not correct as a matter of law is immaterial for the present purposes. Of importance is the fact that a vital and material part of Weiss' defense was treated so casually (Cf. Powell v. Alabama, 287 U. S. 45, 56).

Again we mention only briefly the failure on the part of the prosecuting attorney and the Trial Judge to make available to the defendants on trial for their lives, Police Department reports which might have had a bearing upon the trial of the People's case. It is obviously difficult for Weiss to argue the relevancy and materiality of those reports. The defendants do not know what information they disclose. Yet, they were reports on the surveillance of the defendant Buchalter and it may well be that the information therein contained would greatly weaken if not completely refute Berger's story about the occurrences on September 11, 1936, and Tannenbaum's story of a "confession" made in his presence at 200 Fifth Avenue after Rosen was murdered.

---

* The contrary is true in the State of New York.

The Court of Appeals, in denying reargument, said that the records in question were examined by it and that the so-called surveillance amounted to very little.* "It was of the entrance and lobby of the office building and not of the floor upon which the defendant Buchalter had his office. The reports established that the defendant could and did elude the police at will" (R. 4120).

But Berger testified that on September 11, when he and Buchalter went from the latter's office to the East Side of New York for the purpose of meeting Weiss, they went out of the main entrance of the building.

We submit to the Court that there is little difference in principle between a prosecutor's withholding of relevant information and his presentation of false testimony (Cf. Mooney v. Holohan, 294 U. S. 103, 112-113). Both result in the deprivation of a fair trial. This is not a case where the information was sought in advance of trial (People ex rel. Lemon v. Supreme Court, 245 N. Y. 24). A witness was on the stand, the records had been subpoenaed and were within the jurisdiction of the Court. We submit that particularly in a capital case, fairness required that they be made available to the petitioner. In People v. Walsh, 262 N. Y. 141, 150, the Court of Appeals quoted with approval Judge Cooley's statement in People v. Davis, 52 Mich. 569:

> "The State has no interest in interposing any obstacle to the disclosure of the facts, unless it is interested in convicting accused parties on the testimony of untrustworthy persons."

"Criminal proceedings", said the Court in Centosamore v. State, 105 Nebraska, 452, 455, "are instituted with the object, not alone of securing convictions, but of getting as near to the truth as possible on the question of the guilt or innocence of the accused."

* But that was a question of fact for the jury. The defendants were entitled to this evidence and the jury to consider its weight.

Finally, the record discloses that in the Court of Appeals, a majority of the Judges,—Loughran, Desmond, Rippey, JJ., and Lehman, C.J.,—were not convinced beyond a reasonable doubt of the guilt of the defendants. That Court, upon appeal capital case, is obliged to weigh the evidence and form a conclusion as to the facts.

> People v. Crum, 272 N. Y. 348, 350;
> Constitution of the State of New York, Article VI, Section 7, Appendix G.

Despite the doubt expressed, the judgment was affirmed.

Conclusion

We cannot refrain from expressing the thought that the printed word, setting forth legal argument, seems impersonal and remote from the human side of the questions involved. The concept of due process is not based on abstract theory; it is the very foundation of our way of life. We all feel more secure in our daily lives in the knowledge that we in the United States are protected by the law from judgments based on hysteria and passion, even from the tyranny of men's emotions, and that our property, and certainly our lives, are safe against deprivation except after fair trial where the facts are determined by a jury of our peers. As opposed to a society based on apprehension and fear, where no man can be sure where he stands or how he will fare, ours is a society of freedom and security where individuals, whatever their status—even "bad" men—are protected against public clamor and official vindictiveness by constitutional guaranties. This applies even to a lowly individual in the death house under sentence of execution. We submit that the presumption of innocence prevails until after judgment of guilt on fair trial by an impartial judge and jury. It is unthinkable that a man may be marched to the electric chair, strapped in, and his life snuffed out by the State, not because of what he did, but because of the way he was tried.

> "The concept of due process is not technical. Form is disregarded if substantial rights are preserved. In whatsoever proceeding, whether it affect property or liberty or life, the Fourteenth Amendment commands the observance of that standard of common fairness, the failure to observe which would offend men's sense of the decencies and proprieties of civilized life" (Roberts, J., in Snyder v. Massachusetts, 291 U. S. 97, 127).

If, as the record shows, the trial was had in a hostile atmosphere; if the important witnesses for the prosecution were gangsters, thugs and murderers who had every reason even that of life itself to perjure themselves; if these despicable characters had every opportunity to correlate the story; if the court explained and minimized their perjuries; if the prosecutor improperly assured the jury that the criminal witnesses of the prosecution would suffer punishment; if important evidence was excluded and improper evidence of a highly prejudicial character admitted; if the trial judge disparaged cross examination by which in the words of Judge Lehman the testimony of the chief prosecution witnesses was "impeached, if not completely destroyed"; if the attorneys for the defendants were browbeaten by the Court and arguments made by them were discredited; if the trial Judge usurped the functions of the jury by improperly instructing them on questions of fact; if the trial was one in form rather than in substance—if all of these things are true, can it be said that these defendants had a jury trial at all? If it be a fact, as stated by Judge Rippey, that the defendants under the circumstances here did not have "even a remote outside chance of any free consideration by the jury of their defenses", is there not a deprivation of due process as guaranteed by the Fourteenth Amendment?

We respectfully pray that the petition for certiorari be granted.

Respectfully submitted,

ARTHUR GARFIELD HAYS,
Counsel for Petitioner.

ALFRED J. TALLEY,
JOHN SCHULMAN,
M. M. KREINDLER,
HARRY G. ANDERSON,
SAMUEL BADER,
GERALD WEATHERLY,
Of Counsel.

Appendix A

Article 1, Section 1 of the Constitution of the State of New York

No member of this state shall be disfranchised, or deprived of any of the rights or privileges secured to any citizen thereof, unless by the law of the land, or the judgment of his peers.

Appendix B

Article 1, Section 2 of the Constitution of the State of New York

Trial by jury in all cases in which it has heretofore been guaranteed by constitutional provision shall remain inviolate forever; but a jury trial may be waived by the parties in all civil cases in the manner to be prescribed by law. The legislature may provide, however, by law, that a verdict may be rendered by not less than five-sixths of the jury in any civil case. A jury trial may be waived by the defendant in all criminal cases, except those in which the crime charged may be punishable by death, by a written instrument signed by the defendant in person in open court before and with the approval of a judge or justice of a court having jurisdiction to try the offense. The legislature may enact laws, not inconsistent herewith, governing the form, content, manner and time of presentation of the instrument effectuating such waiver. Amended by Constitutional Convention of 1938 and approved by vote of the people November 8, 1938.

Appendix C

Section 1041 of the Penal Law of the State of New York

No person can be convicted of murder or manslaughter unless the death of the person alleged to have been killed and the fact of killing by the defendant, as alleged, are each established as independent facts; the former by direct proof, and the latter beyond a reasonable doubt.

Appendix D

Section 419 of the Code of Criminal Procedure of the State of New York

On the trial of an indictment for any other crime than libel, questions of law are to be decided by the court, saving the right of the defendant to except; questions of fact by the jury. And although the jury have the power to find a general verdict, which includes questions of law as well as of fact, they are bound, nevertheless, to receive as law what is laid down as such by the court.

Appendix E

United States Constitution, Amendment XIV, Section 1

All persons born or naturalized in the United States, and subject to the jurisdiction thereof, are citizens of the United States and of the State wherein they reside. No State shall make or enforce any law which shall abridge the privileges or immunities of citizens of the United States; nor shall any State deprive any person of life, liberty, or property, without due process of law; nor deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws.

Appendix F

Judicial Code of the United States,
Section 237 (b), as amended, 28 U. S. C. A.,
Section 344 (b)

It shall be competent for the Supreme Court by certiorari, to require that there be certified to it for review and determination, with the same power and authority and with like effect as if brought up by writ of error, any cause wherein a final judgment or decree has been rendered or passed by the highest court of a State in which a decision could be had where is drawn in question the validity of a treaty or statute of the United States; or where is drawn in question the validity of a statute of any State on the ground of its being repugnant to the Constitution, treaties, or laws of the United States; or where any title, right, privilege, or immunity is specially set up or claimed by either party under the Constitution, or any treaty or statute of, or commission held or authority exercised under, the United States; and the power to review under this paragraph may be exercised as well where the Federal claim is sustained as where it is denied. Nothing in this paragraph shall be construed to limit or detract from the right to a review on a writ of error in a case where such a right is conferred by the preceding paragraph; nor shall the fact that a review on a writ of error might be obtained under the preceding paragraph be an obstacle to granting a review on certiorari under this paragraph.

Appendix G

Article VI, Section 7 of the Constitution of the State of New York

Jurisdiction of Court of Appeals

The jurisdiction of the Court of Appeals, except where the judgment is of death, or where the appellate division, on reversing or modifying a final judgment in an action or a final order in a special proceeding, makes new findings of fact and renders final judgment or a final order thereon, shall be limited to the review of questions of law; but the right to appeal shall not depend upon the amount involved.

Appeals may be taken to the Court of Appeals in the classes of cases enumerated in this section.

In criminal cases, directly from a court of original jurisdiction where the judgment is of death, and in other criminal cases from an appellate division or otherwise as the legislature may from time to time provide.

In civil cases and proceedings as follows:

(The remainder of this article is omitted as not relevant.)

Appendix H

Section 389 of the Code of Criminal Procedure of the State of New York

A defendant in a criminal action is presumed to be innocent, until the contrary be proved; and in case of a reasonable doubt whether his guilt is satisfactorily shown, he is entitled to an acquittal.

FILE COPY

Office - Supreme Court, U. S.
FILED
OCT 4 1943
CHARLES ELMORE CROPLEY
CLERK

No. 619

In the Supreme Court of the United States

OCTOBER TERM, 1942

LOUIS CAPONE,

Petitioner,

v.

THE PEOPLE OF THE STATE OF NEW YORK,

Appellee.

PETITION FOR A WRIT OF CERTIORARI TO THE COUNTY COURT OF KINGS COUNTY OF THE STATE OF NEW YORK FOR A REVIEW OF A JUDGMENT OF SAID COURT CONVICTING PETITIONER OF THE CRIME OF MURDER IN THE FIRST DEGREE; AND TO THE COURT OF APPEALS OF THE STATE OF NEW YORK FOR A REVIEW OF AN ORDER OF SAID COURT AFFIRMING THE AFORESAID JUDGMENT OF CONVICTION.

INDEX

Page

Petition:

Statement 2
Question Presented 2
Statutes Involved 3
History Preceding Trial and During Selection of Jury 3
Atmosphere Surrounding the Trial 9
General Outline of the Case 17
People's Theory of the Alleged Motive 17
1. Max Rubin 19
2. Paul Berger 23
3. Sol Bernstein 25
Only Alleged Corroboration as to Petitioner—Seymour Magoon 29
Only Other Witness Mentioning Capone's Name—
Allie Tannenbaum 35
Argument 36
Specifications of Errors to be Urged 36
Reason for Granting the Writ 38

Brief in Support of Petition:

Opinions Below 41
Jurisdiction 41
Questions Presented, Statutes Involved, etc 41
Statement 41
Argument 41
The Law 105
Conclusion 140

CITATIONS

Cases:

Baldwin v. State, 11 Okla. Crim. Reports, 228 139
Berger v. U. S., 295 U. S. 78 ..... 131, 140
Grand Lodge A. O. U. W. v. Taylor, 99 Pac. 570 (Supreme Court, Colorado) 108
Graves v. U. S., 150 U. S. 118 ..... 131, 140
Hall v. U. S., 150 U. S. 76 ..... 131, 140
Johnson v. U. S., 131 C. C. A. 613, 3 Wigmore Evid, sec. 1808.. 140
Law v. Merrills, 6 Wend. 268, 277 62
Lisenba v. California (decided by Supreme Court of The United States, October Term, 1941) 140
Moore v. Dempsey, 261 U. S. 86 141
Norris v. Alabama, 294 U. S. 589 141
People v. Casey, 96 N. Y. 115 ..... 107, 108, 120
People v. Crum, 272 N. Y. 348, at 350 55
People v. Fisher, 249 N. Y. 419, at 432 122
People v. Gaffey, 182 N. Y. 257, 259 54
People v. Goldstein & Strauss, 285 N. Y. 376 ..... 23, 30, 114
People v. Kress, 284 N. Y. 529 ..... 43, 100
People v. Malkin, 250 N. Y. 185 131
People v. Martell, 138 N. Y. 595 110
People v. McQuade, 110 N. Y. 284 ..... 106, 112, 113
People v. Nitzberg, 287 N. Y. 183 130
People v. O'Farrell, 175 N. Y. 323 at 327 130
People v. Slover, 232 N. Y. 264 137
People v. Wilmarth, 156 N. Y. 566 106
Rizzolo v. Com., 126 Pa. 54, 17 Atl. 520 108
State v. Greenland, 125 Iowa 141 139
State v. McCoy, 33 So. 730 (Sup. Ct., Louisiana) 106
State v. Roscon, 119 Iowa, 300 Corpus Juris, Vol. 16, p. 1143 139
Wilson v. U. S., 149 U. S. 60 ..... 131, 140

Miscellaneous:

Code of Criminal Procedure of the State of New York:
Section 399 57
16 Corpus Juris 1143, Sections 383 and 384 110
26 Ruling Case Law 1022 139
3 Wigmore Evid. 837 139
New York State Constitution, Article VI, sec. 7 ..... 41, 54
United States Constitution, Fourteenth Amendment, Sec. 1 41
Judiciary Law, State of New York, Sec. 749aa 41

In the Supreme Court of the United States

OCTOBER TERM, 1942

No.——

LOUIS CAPONE,

Petitioner,

v.

THE PEOPLE OF THE STATE OF NEW YORK,

Appellee.

PETITION FOR A WRIT OF CERTIORARI TO THE COUNTY COURT OF KINGS COUNTY OF THE STATE OF NEW YORK FOR A REVIEW OF A JUDGMENT OF SAID COURT CONVICTING PETITIONER OF THE CRIME OF MURDER IN THE FIRST DEGREE; AND TO THE COURT OF APPEALS OF THE STATE OF NEW YORK FOR A REVIEW OF AN ORDER OF SAID COURT AFFIRMING THE AFORESAID JUDGMENT OF CONVICTION.

PETITION

LOUIS CAPONE, the petitioner, by his attorney, prays that a writ of certiorari issue to review the judgment of the County Court of Kings County, State of New York, entered December 2, 1941, convicting petitioner, together with two co-defendants, of the crime of Murder in the first degree (R.pp. 222-3), and the affirmance of said judgment of conviction on October 30, 1942, by the court of Appeals of the State of New York (which is the court of last resort in said state), by a vote of four to three, with one of the dissenting judges voting to dismiss the indictment against the petitioner (R.p. 4091). A motion for a reargument was denied by the Court of Appeals on November 25, 1942 (R.p. 4121). A stay of the execution of judgment against the petitioner was granted by Honorable Owen J. Roberts, one of the Associate Justices of this Court, by order dated December 5, 1942.

STATEMENT

Petitioner was indicted in May, 1940, by the grand jury of Kings County of the State of New York for the crime of murder in the first degree (R.p. 21). After being held in custody for sixteen months, the trial commenced on September 15, 1941. It continued until and was concluded on November 30, 1941, upon which day petitioner was convicted (R.p. 3993) on December 2, 1941, petitioner was sentenced to the punishment of death in the mode and manner prescribed by law (R.p. 3997). From this judgment of conviction the petitioner appealed to the Court of Appeals of the State of New York (R.pp. 11-12) which affirmed the judgment of the lower court by a vote of four to three. Four separate opinions were rendered by said court, (R.pp. 4030-4091).

QUESTION PRESENTED

Whether the fact that all the defendants were prejudged by the community in which the trial was held by reason of an extremely intensive prejudicial and inflammatory newspaper campaign, the denial of a motion for a change of venue despite this condition, the continuous denials of motions by petitioner for a severance (R. pp. 2191, 2240, 2377, 2683, 2698, 2703, 2706, 2715, 3540, s.m.pp. 12, 13, 27, 59-60*) the make-up of the jury, the atmosphere

---

*Smp. refers to typewritten transcript of all proceedings had prior to opening to jury.

in the courtroom, the prosecuting attorney's misconduct which was permitted and condoned by the trial court, and the unfair attitude of the trial court throughout the trial, were such deviations from prescribed trial procedure as to result in a trial so unfair that it constituted a mere pretense of one, and deprived the petitioner of his rights to a fair and impartial trial guaranteed by the United States and State Constitutions, and culminated in his ultimate conviction without due process of law, all of which required a reversal of the judgment of conviction?

STATUTES INVOLVED

The statutes involved are as follows:

1. Constitution of the United States, Fourteenth Amendment, Section 1;
2. New York State Constitution, Article 1, Section 2; Article 1, Section 6;
3. Section 749-aa of the Judiciary Law of the State of New York, subdivision 7.

HISTORY PRECEDING TRIAL AND DURING SELECTION OF JURY

The three petitioners were jointly indicted with Harry Strauss, alias "Pittsburgh Phil," James Feraco and Philip Cohen (Little Farvel), for the murder of Joseph Rosen, by shooting him on September 13, 1936 (R.p. 21). There is no suggestion that defendant Capone took part in the actual shooting.

When the indictment was found, or very soon thereafter, the petitioner was in custody, as were all of the prosecution witnesses who testified to matters allegedly concerning him. At that time there was no apparent valid reason for any delay of the trial as to him and the State of New York could have given him a fair trial. Instead, petitioner was held in custody for a period of sixteen months before the case was actually moved for trial. In the interim, however, and immediately following the finding of the indictment, numerous newspaper articles appeared, most of them condemning petitioner's co-defendant Buchalter as a czar of crime and alleging him guilty of the murder in the instant case and many others, while at the same time idolizing the district attorney of Kings County who was being groomed as the Democratic candidate for Mayor of the City of New York.

In one article, in the New York Times on April 15, 1940 (prior to the indictment of Capone), based on an interview with the District Attorney of Kings County, he (the district attorney) referred to Capone as "the go-between who accepted orders from Lepke and other gangsters for murders they wanted performed and passed the orders to the actual killers" (R.pp. 97-8). Thereafter, on October 31, 1940, a similar article appeared in the New York Daily Mirror. These articles continued in various newspapers down to the date of and through the entire trial of the petitioners.

The wide extent, the intensity and the inflammatory nature of this publicity can be amply gathered from the few excerpts of these newspaper articles which are set forth in the petition and brief of the petitioner Buchalter. The evil in this action by the press was to inflame the entire community against the petitioners and condition it to think of them as guilty men; in other words, the result was that the petitioners were prejudged by the populace from which the jury which was to determine their guilt or innocence was to be drawn. Though this means was more subtle and orderly, it was no different in final result from being "rushed to conviction through • • • jury and judge being swept to the fatal end by an irresistible wave of public passion • • •."

But even though a small portion of this unprecedented flow of prejudicial, inflammatory propaganda directly mentioned petitioner, the balance thereof could not help but redound to the detriment of petitioner if he went to trial with his co-defendant Buchalter, against whom the great bulk of passion-arousing publicity was directed. If a joint trial were held in the face of this publicity, this petitioner realized that his fate, regardless of the proof against him, rested with Buchalter; that he would not have the benefit of the presumption of innocence; and that a conviction, again regardless of the proof, would result—though not by due process of law. Consequently, in June, 1941, petitioner moved for a severance of the trial as to him, setting forth the above as one of the grounds for his application (R.pp. 31-64). Such motion was denied, without prejudice, however, to a renewal thereof before the trial court (R.pp. 29-30). No appeal could be taken from this order under the Code of Criminal Procedure of the State of New York, but it was brought up for review on appeal from the judgment (R.p. 12).

In July, 1941, petitioner was advised that the trial would begin on August 4, 1941. By that time it was apparent that Judge O'Dwyer, the then District Attorney of Kings County, would probably be nominated by the Democratic Party as its candidate for Mayor of the City of New York. In this situation, and believing that he could not receive a fair trial because of, as previously stated, the unprecedented inflammatory publicity principally directed against his co-defendants, and that the candidacy would further minimize the possibility of a fair trial by casting the entire case into the arena of local politics, the petitioner herein joined in a motion made by the petitioner Buchalter for a change of venue. This motion was denied. The reason assigned by the Supreme Court justice was that adverse publicity was statewide. No appeal could be taken from this order under the Code of Criminal Procedure of the State of New York, but it, too, was brought up for review on appeal from the judgment (R.p. 12).

On August 4, 1941, the case was called for trial before Judge Taylor (s.m.p. 28). There was a blue ribbon panel of 250 talesmen. The district attorney had then actually been nominated for the office of Mayor of the City of New York (s.m.p. 40). The trial judge was then a candidate for re-election (s.m.p. 43). Although the district attorney had requested a trial in August, before becoming a candidate, on August 4, 1941 an application was made by him for an adjournment to September 15th. Counsel for all of the petitioners strenuously objected to any adjournment, and stated they were ready to proceed with the trial on that day, and that they feared if the case were adjourned to the middle of September, when the active political campaign had started, it would become "a political football," and that if the Court desired to serve the convenience of jurors, a postponement should be granted until after election (s.m.p. 39-53). The court, however, refused to grant the request, and set the trial, over objection and exception, for September 15th, assuring counsel that the delay would be helpful because it would give the community an opportunity to forget the prejudice engendered by news hostility (s.m.p. 53-57).

However, a new series of articles appeared in the "Daily Mirror" (Brooklyn edition). These articles resulted in a renewal of the motion for a change of venue, which was denied without opinion. These matters are more fully set forth in the petition of the defendant Buchalter, and are, therefore, omitted herein, although made a part hereof.

On September 15, 1941, the application for an adjournment was again renewed, counsel for the petitioner herein requesting the adjournment in order to familiarize himself with the case and because of the impending Jewish Holy Days (s.m.p. 60). This motion was denied (s.m.p. 61).

Counsel for the petitioner thereupon renewed the motion for a severance, which was also denied (s.m.p. 59-60). This decision was not appealable, but was brought up for review in the appellate court (R.p. 12). Throughout the trial the motion for a severance was continuously renewed, and continuously denied.

The process of impaneling the jury commenced on September 15, 1941, and continued for a period of five weeks. This blue ribbon panel of 250, composed only of talesmen who had sworn that they were able to disregard newspaper impression, was exhausted, and a new panel of 100, having similar qualifications, was required before the selection process had been completed. At least one-half of the talesmen readily admitted that so fixed was their opinion and so strong their prejudice against "one or more of the defendants" in consequence of hostile newspaper propaganda that they could not sit as impartial jurors.

It is contended that the talesmen ultimately selected as impartial were prohibited by the court from expressing their true state of mind, and were inhibited by the trial judge from admitting their prejudice. Talesmen were threatened with excoriations by the trial judge if they admitted prejudice.

Under Sections 360 and 373 of the Code of Criminal Procedure of the State of New York the defendants collectively were entitled to thirty peremptory challenges of jurors. These thirty peremptory challenges were exhausted after nine jurors had been selected. The court erroneously overruled ten challenges made by defendants for cause to talesmen obviously prejudiced. The court invoked a different standard for the prosecution and erroneously sustained at least six of the challenges.

The record will disclose that not one of the peremptory challenges exercised collectively by the defendants was due to any direct statement made by the prospective juror as to any implied prejudice against the petitioner Capone. The law, however, compelled petitioner Capone to join in with the co-defendants in excusing him. However, after the thirty challenges were completely exhausted, the two jurymen Rorke and Link were seated in the jurybox. They were obviously prejudiced. One was connected with the Mr. District Attorney program on the radio, and the other was a nephew of a prominent police official. Link had been previously excused by the same trial assistant in an earlier murder trial in which petitioner's counsel was the attorney for one of the defendants because, as then stated by the trial assistant, his employment would make it unfair to the defendant for him to sit on the jury. However, on this trial, where the thirty peremptory challenges had already been exhausted, he asked, in effect, whether the talesman would be prejudiced against him because he had excused him (Link) in the earlier case on the ground that he might be unfair to the defendant. Receiving a negative reply, Link was seated. Rorke was chosen against the background of the knowledge of the trial assistant that in this same earlier case Rorke, too, had been a talesman and had heard the name of the petitioner herein, and had been peremptorily excused because of his relationship with a New York police official. Thus this defendant was confronted with the first situation arising in the trial whereby he could and would have exercised peremptory challenges upon the denial of the court to excuse these talesmen for cause but was prevented from doing so, due to the failure to grant him a severance.

Petitioner respectfully asserts that a fair jury was not impanelled because it could not have been impanelled in the County of Kings in the month of September, 1941.

ATMOSPHERE SURROUNDING THE TRIAL

Coupled with the adverse publicity prior to the trial, during the selection of the jury and thereafter, the atmosphere in the courtroom throughout the trial unquestionably prejudiced the jurors' minds against the defendant.

On the very eve of the trial, there appeared in the Sunday Mirror, August 3, 1941, the following:

"LEPKE WILL GO TO TRIAL TOMORROW."

> "A heavy police guard will be stationed in Brooklyn tomorrow when Louis (Lepke) Buchalter goes to trial on first-degree murder indictment."
>
> • • • •
>
> "A police sergeant, 15 policemen and an unspecified number of plainclothes men have been detailed to guard the courtroom, corridors and the outside of the building." (R.p. 63)

With this prelude the trial subsequently began and the court immediately assumed the appearance of an armed camp, which continued throughout the trial. The existence of this condition is substantiated by objections made by defense counsel throughout the trial.

As soon as the People's star witness, the criminal, Sol Bernstein, was called to the stand, the following ensued:

> "Mr. Barshay: With your Honor's permission, may the record show that when this witness, Mr. Bernstein, came into the court room from your right he was preceded by a court attendant and he was followed by three men who I know to be detectives.

The Court: All right.

Mr. Barshay: Will your Honor note my objection to that proceeding?

The Court: I did not see it. I take your word for it.

Mr. Cuff: Two of them have their badges on now.

Mr. Turkus: Mr. McDonough is one of them; Mr. Harrington is another one standing to your Honor's left.

Mr. Cuff: May I have the name of the other gentleman who follows?

Mr. Turkus: Detective James Bell.

Mr. Cuff: And the court officer, to whom I have no objection. Mr. Meek.

Mr. Trukus: Is the objection to the protection of the witness?

Mr. Barshay: I object to the comment of Mr. Turkus. That was an unfair comment, and I ask the court to direct the jury now to disregard that and admonish Mr. Turkus not to repeat any such thing. There is no intimation that this witness in this court room or in any other place in this world needs any protection.

Mr. Turkus: You will know that before the case is over.

Mr. Barshay: I object to that comment.

The Court: The jury will disregard all side play.

Mr. Barshay: Side play on the part of the District Attorney, sir.

The Court: Please—

Mr. Barshay: May you say that, please?

The Court: Whichever side it comes from. The matter calls for no ruling.

Mr. Barshay: I ask your Honor——

The Court: You are dictating to the record. That is your right, but there is nothing that calls for a ruling. I do not know what it means, so please do not argue. Just proceed.

Mr. Barshay: Exception.

Mr. Rosenthal: May I have a ruling? In view of the atmosphere created insofar as the defendant Capone is concerned by having two police officers standing in an unusual position next to the jury box while the witness is testifying and the two court officers, one standing directly behind the witness and the other to his left, I ask for a mistrial upon the ground of prejudicial conduct against the defendant Capone.

Mr. Cuff: Defendant Weiss joins in that motion.

The Court: To get the record absolutely straight, let us have a survey of relative locations.

Mr. Rosenthal: All right, sir, I will take your Honor's statement as to where they are.

The Court: In the court room, behind or at the end of one of the rear corners of the jury box, are two men with badges whom I assume to be detectives. One is against the side window and one is directly in the corner. There are two court officers in their proper places, one directly behind the witness, another one to his left, at the steps. You have your record. It calls for no ruling. Of course, I deny the motion for a mistrial.

Mr. Rosenthal: I respectfully except.

Mr. Cuff: I except.

Mr. Barshay: May I make a motion for the withdrawal of a juror and the declaration of a mistrial on the ground that Mr. Turkus made a prejudicial remark?

The Court: Denied.

Mr. Barshay: Exception.

Mr. Talley: I ask for the removal of the court officer that has been stationed directly behind the witness——

The Court: Denied.

Mr. Talley: —as he sits in the witness chair. He has not been there during the testimony of any other witness, and I object to this stage setting upon the entrance of this witness. I do not know what he is going to testify to, if anything, but I object to this display that has been occasioned because I regard it all as prejudicial to the defendant whom I represent and as unnecessary and unprecedented.

The Court: The court officer, George Meek, who is personally assigned to me as a judge of this court, in my chambers only, his place is right there or any place else that the court sees fit to put him, and it is nobody else's affair. Motion denied.

Mr. Talley: Does your Honor contend his place is directly behind the witness chair while the witness is testifying or about to testify?

The Court: Proceed.

Mr. Talley: I except to your Honor's refusal to grant my request." (R.pp. 686-90)

Thereafter, while the same witness was on the stand, the following occurred:

"Mr. Talley: Before I commence to examine this witness, I request your Honor to remove the court officer who stands within six inches behind the chair of the witness. I ask your Honor to remove from the sight of the jury the two detectives who escorted this witness to the witness chair. There is another officer standing, in uniform, immediately alongside of the witness chair. I have no objection to his standing in that general vicinity, but the other display I ask to be removed, as prejudicial to these defendants and interfering with proper cross examination and prejudicial to the defendants in this court room. There are plenty of detectives in this court room and there are other uniformed policemen who are kept outside of the court room. These three defendants are brought in here, in sight of the jury, in chains, literally in chains. There are three or four officers sitting alongside of these defendants, and I object to this display as unnecessary, unprecedented, and here for no other reason than to prejudice the jury, against these defendants. I ask that they be removed, and that we proceed in a legal, judicial manner in the conduct of this trial from now on, and that we take away this theatrical display.

Mr. Rosenthal: I join in that motion.

The Court: Anything by the defendant Buchalter?

Mr. Barshay: We join in the motion.

The Court: All right, for the purpose of the record—the set-up is the usual one which is followed in this court in all cases so far as the Court can recall. When witnesses are brought in, in custody, detectives who are charged with the custody—that is, detectives or other officers or jailers who are charged with the custody, stand back in the corner, substantially out of sight of the jury, but close enough not to lose technical custody. Then the two attendants of this court stand, first the Judge's personal attendant, directly behind the prisoner witness, and next another one, in a position where he can guard the door, which is directly to the left of the witness stand and which opens into the Judge's chambers, and provides a means of escape. There is nothing unusual about this, so that is not considered seriously, and it is denied.

Did I understand you to say the defendants are brought in in chains?

Mr. Talley: Yes.

The Court: You mean they are manacled?

Mr. Talley: Yes, sir, manacled with these officers who are with them.

The Court: At the present time?

Mr. Talley: No, the manacles are removed when they come in the court room, but not before; when they are seated and not before; and your Honor requires the jury to be in their seats so they can see this spectacle of how these men are brought in.

The Court: Do you impugn the Court's honor? The Court does not require the jury to be in their seats in order to see 'the spectacle,' because the Court is not aware of it; and the Court has not been aware of it until you just informed the Court to that effect. This compels, being before the jury, a ruling in the presence of the jury and that is, so far as the custodianship is concerned, until the defendants enter the court room and are seated it is not within the Court's jurisdiction, and is not under the Court's direction. That is a responsibility that is elsewhere charged. But at no time during the trial will the Court permit any defendant to sit here menacled, (sic) and, so far as the Court is informed by you, the defendants have not sat here manacled. That is overruled.

Mr. Talley: My objection is to their being brought into your court room menacled, (sic) and as soon as they enter the court room the manacle or manacles are kept on them until they are seated. Then they are removed. As soon as recess is declared the manacles are then put on and they are taken out, not merely with these three detectives who are sitting alongside of them now, but also preceded and followed by uniformed court attendants. Your Honor has direction of what happens in this court room, and it is what happens here that I object to, not what they do outside the courtroom and not in the presence of the jury.

The Court: These defendants have been brought into this court room for trial in a court which is not adapted to the trial of criminal cases. They have to be brought through the public corridor, down a public staircase, and through a door which leads into the Judge's chambers, shocking as this may seem, in order to come into this room. The Court has ruled on this and has said all it is going to say. Denied.

Mr. Talley: Exception. I take an exception to your ruling and also to your comment, as being prejudicial to these defendants.

I am now asking for my own information and not for any other reason, I beg to assure the Court: Are you going to continue to permit these defendants to be brought into this court room manacled, the manacles being kept on them until they are seated in their chairs?

The Court: The Court is not under examination as a witness and declines to answer the question. Please proceed with your examination.

Mr. Talley: Exception." (R.pp. 764-8)

While the witness Rubin was on the stand the following occurred:

"By Mr. Talley:

Q. Before this witness leaves the stand, may I have the record indicate that during the entire course of his testimony, a uniformed court officer stood directly behind his chair, within a foot, in the back of it; that two uniformed--another uniformed court officer stood within a few feet from him at the end of the jury box—and that during the entire testimony there was always a detective with a badge exposed on the lapel of his coat, standing also at the end of the jury box?

The Court: Well, the set-up is perfectly proper. The two uniformed court officers are here legally, and the Court refuses to conduct the court without proper discretion and place court officers where it sees fit. It is none of counsel's business, and the jury will disregard it.

Mr. Talley: I submit——

The Court: Do not interrupt. There is a detective against the exit door, between the court room and the public hallway.

Mr. Cuff: About two or three feet away from the jury box.

The Court: I will say he is almost in contact with it—behind the jury box—to one end; and that he is properly there. That door is going to be guarded at all times during this or any other trial this Court is engaged in. Now, the witness will be taken away.

Mr. Talley: I also ask your Honor to remove the picture which stood behind the witness chair through the entire course of this trial. It is entirely unnecessary and was never once referred to by this witness, who has been on the stand three days. I don't think it belongs there.

The Court: Let us have the number of the exhibit.

Mr. Turkus: That is People's Exhibit 2 in evidence.

The Court: It is not prejudicial in any way, and the Court was unaware of its presence.

This might create an impression on the record which, upon reading, would make it seem that the defendants were not having a fair trial. That is nonsense. Take the exhibit away—turn it the other way. The jury is not supposed to see exhibits, apparently. It is quite large, is on an easel, and requires a man to lift it.

Now the record is the way it should be as to accuracy and fairness.

Mr. Talley: Exception." (R.pp. 1755-6)

While the witness Blanche Weiss was on the stand the following occurred:

"Mr. Talley: While there is a change in the guards, may I ask the Court to direct the officer to stand back from the witness, not directly behind the witness as the last officer did? May we have the court officer removed, or if he stands there, that he stand back against the wall and not against the chair of the witness?

The Court: That is incorrect in several details. He is behind the witness and almost flat against the wall.

Mr. Talley: The last officer who was just relieved stood within three inches of the back of the chair of this witness.

The Court: You should have called the Court's attention to it then.

Mr. Talley: I did not want to interrupt.

The Court: If your observation was accurate. It occurred to me just as was just stated." (R. pp. 3362-3)

GENERAL OUTLINE OF THE CASE

On September 13, 1936, at about 6:45 A.M., Louis Stamler, who resided across the street from Rosen's candy store (R.p. 328), heard a shot (R.pp. 322-3), looked out of the window and saw a car pull away from there. As the car pulled away he saw a bleeding man lying on the floor of the candy store (R.p. 329). He then looked back at the moving car and memorized its license number (R.p. 323). He ran down to the candy store, where he saw Rosen, the proprietor, on the floor. He yelled "Police!" and Patrolman Cappadora arrived in answer to the call (R.p. 325). He gave the policeman the number of the car and described it as a dark car (R.p. 326).

Patrolman Cappadora then notified the Telegraph Bureau to broadcast an alarm for a black sedan bearing license L-16-67 with three or more men in it and further notified the station house of what had happened (R.p. 335). Shortly thereafter an ambulance surgeon pronounced Rosen dead (R.p. 337). The body was removed to the Kings County Morgue (R.p. 338) where it was identified by Patrolman Cappadora (R.p. 338) and the deceased's son (R.p. 485).

An autopsy by Dr. Marten, Deputy Chief Medical Examiner, disclosed seventeen bullet holes in the body, some of which were entrance and others exit holes (R.p. 343). The cause of death was bullets perforating the skull, brain and lungs (R.p. 347).

PEOPLE'S THEORY OF THE ALLEGED MOTIVE

It was the contention of the prosecution that through the manipulations of the defendant Buchalter, Rosen had been forced out of a partnership in a clothing trucking business; that Rosen bruited it about in the clothing market that Buchalter had forced him out of business; that because of Rosen's complaints in the industry Buchalter obtained a job for him with a trucking concern, which lasted a short time; that efforts by Rosen to obtain another position failed; that Rosen then opened a candy store at 725 Sutter Avenue, but still vociferously complained about what Buchalter had allegedly done to him and threatened to go to Thomas E. Dewey, Special Prosecutor appointed by the Governor to investigate racketeering, and tell what he knew about Buchalter; that Buchalter, through an intermediary, attempted to silence Rosen by giving him money to leave town; that Rosen left town, but returned in a few days and again threatened to appear as a witness before Dewey; and that Buchalter, exasperated at Rosen's continued threats, ordered his execution to silence him forever (R. pp. 234-9).

The defendant Capone was not connected or involved in any of the foregoing. Therefore, whether the People's evidence proved or failed to prove this theory will not be analyzed or discussed herein at length. However, all such evidence as to alleged motive, even though concededly not applicable to Capone, was of such prejudicial character that it indubitably affected the jury's consideration as to him and unduly prejudiced his rights to a fair trial.

The record of the testimony is voluminous. Comparatively little of it involved the petitioner. The mass of it so colored the trial and the error was so constant that the entire testimony appears in this transcript. For present purposes, however, a brief resume of pertinent testimony appears sufficient.

Proof in attempted substantiation of this motive, the events leading up to the commission of the crime and its eventual execution was presented through the witnesses Max Rubin, Paul Berger and Sol Bernstein.

1. MAX RUBIN

Though we quote his testimony, objections and exceptions were taken on behalf of Capone to the entire line of questions asked of him on the grounds that it was not binding on Capone, was too remote and extremely prejudicial (R.pp. 1289-90, 1311, 1351, 1377, 1381, 1388, 1394-5, 1745).

Max Rubin was an associate of Buchalter and, from 1932 to 1936, did work for him in connection with different unions and trade associations (R.pp. 1303-4). He was also the business agent of the Clothing Drivers and Helpers Union (R.p. 1305).

In October, 1936, Rubin fled the jurisdiction and went into hiding because of the investigation then being conducted by Special Prosecutor Dewey (R.pp. 1381-1420, 1685-1700, 1725-6). In this trial he insisted that the Rosen killing was another factor in causing him to flee (R.p. 1701). He admitted, however, that when he fled he had in mind the penalties he might pay in Manhattan; he felt there was nothing in Brooklyn for which he could be penalized (R.pp. 1725-6). But to reconcile his present stand, he contended that though there was nothing in Brooklyn to make him fearful, he was afraid of being framed by the Brooklyn district attorney (R.p. 1726). In August, 1937, he surrendered himself to Dewey by first sending his attorney, Edward C. Maguire, there to make arrangements; he did not send, nor did he personally go to Brooklyn at that time (R.pp. 1468-9, 1470, 1731-2). Towards the end of September, 1937, he testified before the Dewey Grand Jury (R.pp. 1478-9)—apparently telling all he knew. Because of being shot on October 1, 1937, Rubin was provided with a twenty-four hour police guard (R.p. 2392).

While under this guard and, on December 16, 1937, when he was talking freely to Dewey's men, he was questioned in Dewey's office by Assistant District Attorney McCarthy from Brooklyn with reference to the Rosen case in the presence of Dewey's assistant, Frank Hogan (now District Attorney of New York County), a detective and a stenographer (R.pp. 2392-3). Though the defense requested this statement for the purpose of cross examining the witness, the trial court only permitted the defense to have a portion hereof, on he ground that some of the balance was speculative and opinionative (R.pp. 2377-8, 2386-8). The portion of the statement which was made available to the defense disclosed that McCarthy offered Rubin complete immunity in the Rosen matter, but that Rubin rejected the offer because he was not involved in it; that Rubin denied any knowledge of the murder; that he did not implicate Buchalter, though he went out of his way to give assurance that he would if he could; and that when he fled the jurisdiction it was not on account of the Rosen shooting (R.pp. 2379-86). Rubin admitted having made all the answers contained in his statement to McCarthy (R.pp. 2394-2399). He contended, however, that this statement was untrue (R.pp. 2402-3); that despite the fact that at the time he was under twenty-four hour police guard and despite the fact that at the time he was telling Dewey everything he knew about Buchalter, he gave untrue answers to McCarthy through fear of Buchalter (who was a fugitive at the time), because he was shot following his testimony before the Dewey Grand Jury (R.pp. 2419-20).

The next time Rubin had contact with any Brooklyn official was in March, 1940, a month after he testified against Buchalter in another case in New York County (R.p. 1735). At that time he spoke to Inspector McDermott and District Attorney O'Dwyer (R.pp. 1487-9). What he spoke about is not disclosed by the record. On September 25, 1941, after this case had been on trial for ten days, and over a year after the finding of the indictment, he specifically testified with reference to the Rosen case before the grand jury (R.p. 1736). But as the indictment had been found more than a year previously, the only palpable purpose for which Rubin testified before the grand jury was to obtain immunity.

Rubin's narrative, briefly, is as follows:

Over objection and exception that the matter was entirely too remote and wholly unconnected with the crime charged, he traced the leadership and internal affairs of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers Union since 1923 and was permitted, also over objection and exception, to name certain individuals who, without any official connection with the union, were on its "payroll," and to state that some of them had disappeared or were dead (R.pp. 1293-1320). The named individuals, other than being known to the witness, played no other part in the case. They were obviously gangsters, and in bringing their names into the case despite the fact that they weren't even remotely connected with it, makes it manifest that the district attorney's purpose was to cover the entire proceeding with an aura of union gangsterism and thereby prejudicially influence the jury's deliberations by subtly recalling to their minds all the lurid newspaper accounts for many years past relative to gang killings and depredations. Thus, though the decease of those named was not connected with Capone and had absolutely no bearing on the issue in this case, the district attorney in this manner was permitted to introduce highly prejudicial and inflammatory extraneous matter.

To continue with the narrative, Rubin then told about the incidents in 1932 which allegedly led to Rosen's expulsion from business (R. pp. 1321-1338); about obtaining a job for Rosen with a trucking concern at $100 a week (R. pp. 1339-42); about the discharge of Rosen from his position about a year later for stealing (R. pp. 1342-3); about the unsuccessful efforts made to obtain another job for Rosen (R. pp. 1343-5); about Rosen's continuous complaints until some time in 1935, after the appointment of Dewey (R. pp. 1345-9); about then obtaining a new job for Rosen, after he had been out of work for sixteen months (R. pp. 1349-50); and about learning some months thereafter that Rosen had opened a candy store in Brownsville (R. p. 1350).

Rubin then recounted that in June, 1936, Buchalter complained that Rosen had threatened to go down to Dewey's office (R.p. 1355); that he made various efforts to placate Buchalter by telling him that Rosen was harmless; that in September, 1936, Buchalter made the same complaint to him about Rosen; that he further attempted to "straighten the thing out"; that he apparently failed in his mission; and that he was then instructed by Buchalter to inform one, Paul Berger, that he, Buchalter, wanted to see him (R.pp. 1356-67).

Other than the foregoing, the balance of Rubin's testimony concerned his peregrinations to avoid Dewey's investigations and, as he now claimed, being involved in the Rosen matter and his contacts and conversations with Buchalter relative thereto. It is significant to note, however, that in all his testimony relative to union affairs and the events leading up to the crime, Rubin did not implicate Capone in the slightest. The only mention he made of Capone's name was then he testified, over objection and exception, that he saw Capone in 1932 or 1933 in the company of Buchalter and Buggsy Goldstein (R.pp. 1461-2) and had a fleeting glance of him in 1935 when Capone went in and out of a room (R.p. 1463). On both occasions he did not speak to nor was he introduced to Capone (R.p. 1752), and Capone's presence had nothing to do with the instant case (R.p. 1752). He never saw Capone after this last occasion in 1935 (R.p. 1462).

Though Rubin's testimony obviously did not implicate Capone, still it seriously prejudiced him, particularly in the manner in which Capone was mentioned. For here again the prosecutor demonstrated his persistent efforts to have the case tried on newspaper gang stories rather than the indictment. When Rubin stated that he saw Capone in 1932, which certainly was not in connection with the Rosen matter, he was immediately asked who was with Capone at the time. Rubin replied that it was Buchalter. But this did not satisfy the prosecutor. He immediately asked who else was there, and Rubin promptly said, "Buggsy Goldstein" (R.p. 1462). As Goldstein had no connection with the instant case, it is impossible to discern what relevancy or legitimate function the prosecutor's persistent question had except to prejudice Capone by recalling to the jurors' minds a notorious case, which they must have read about, resulting in the execution of said Goldstein (People v. Goldstein, 275 N. Y. 376).

Because of the incompetency of Rubin's testimony against petitioner and particularly because of its extremely prejudicial nature, a motion for a severance was again made, but was denied.

2. PAUL BERGER

Paul Berger, too, was an associate of Buchalter's (R. p. 1801). He also was permitted, over objection and exception, to trace the affairs of the clothing union since 1927 and to name men unconnected with the case, who were obviously gangsters (R.pp. 1781-95).

Berger, himself, is a vicious character. He was on the union payroll as a "slugger" and strong-arm man, and blandly admitted beating up a good many people for years (R.pp. 1786, 1796, 1907, 1910-17, 1921, 2070-1, 2163). He readily admitted that on two occasions he pointed out Rubin to men who were intent upon killing him, of which intention Berger was aware at the time he did the pointing (R.pp. 2053, 2186-9).

Berger, like Rubin, also testified before the grand jury after the trial had begun and he, too, obtained immunity by refusing and failing to sign a waiver (R.pp. 1890, 2159, 2167).

Berger's story of the events before the killing commences at the point where Rubin's terminates. Berger testified that pursuant to Rubin's summons he saw Buchalter; that Buchalter took him to the defendant Weiss; that Buchalter told him to point out Rosen to Weiss; that he and Weiss departed from Buchalter and went to Brooklyn where he pointed out Rosen to Weiss (R.pp. 1803-11).

Berger protested vehemently, with a fine show of injured innocence, that he did not know he was pointing out Rosen so that he could be killed (R.pp. 2053, 2076, 2163-4); he thought Rosen was to be beaten up (R.pp. 2076-7). He readily admitted, however, that on the two occasions he had arranged to point out Rubin, he knew it was for the purpose of killing him (R.pp 1838, 2053, 2054, 2076, 2188-9). Although available, Berger was not arrested until June 5, 1941 (R.p. 1875).

Berger testified that he would not hesitate to lie in order to save himself from the electric chair or even from any trouble (R.pp. 2190-1).

Again because of the incompetency of Berger's testimony against petitioner and because of its prejudicial nature, a motion was again made for a severance and also denied.

3. SOL BERNSTEIN

Bernstein was the principal witness for the prosecution. He drove the death car and knew before he embarked on the venture that a murder was to be committed (R.p. 826).

Bernstein, who is thirty years old, has not done any honest work since he was eighteen (R.pp. 690-1). In 1930, at the age of nineteen (before he claims to have known Capone) he pleaded guilty in the County Court to unlawful entry, although charged with a felony (R.p. 938), and received a suspended sentence (R.p. 692). In October, 1933, he stole an automobile without anyone's assistance, and first pleaded guilty to a felony, but was then permitted to withdraw his plea and plead guilty to a misdemeanor (R.pp. 941-4), for which he again received a suspended sentence (R.p. 693). Although when first questioned by counsel for Weiss about this episode he denied the presence of guns in that car (R.p. 842), he finally was compelled to admit that there were guns and ropes to tie a person with in the car and that he was in the company of two stick-up men and the guns were to be used in the event of resistance (R.pp. 1044-6).

Though he claimed that he was not present at and did not know that a certain murder of one Yuran was committed in the mountains, he admitted helping to dispose of the murdered body (R.pp. 778-9, 1086-1102).

He went to California at the request of one Strauss, a co-defendant who had been previously executed on a conviction for another murder, to kill one Gangy Cohen (R.p. 1063). (This is the same Cohen against whom Bernstein testified on a first degree murder trial, which testimony Bernstein admitted, at the instant trial, was perjurious, which will be discussed in the brief to be submitted with the petition herein.) Bernstein also accompanied a notorious burglar and crook to California and paid the attorney's fee for this crook when he was apprehended for a crime (R.pp. 1063-4, 1067-8). He also drove one, Fat Cooperman, to a doorway where he was killed, and although Bernstein protested that he had nothing to do with the murder, he admitted that he had not accidentally met Cooperman to take him home (R.pp. 1125-28).

Bernstein became a usurer, gambler and bookmaker at an early age, and, in fact, as he put it, "I was not an angel, does that satisfy you?" (R.pp. 786-7). He borrowed upwards of $50,000 from the Food Dealers Association for the use in his shylock business (R.p. 820). He was a strong-arm man in a gambling place in Florida (R.p. 965), and he threatened people who owed him money in the usury business and did not pay (R.p. 966). He conducted a candy store as a blind for his loan shark business, in which store burglars and other criminals congregated (R.pp. 1077-9). He followed carnivals and worked as a shill* for so long a time he could not remember (R.pp. 1068-70). He admitted he stole seventy-five automobiles (R.p. 825), and committed numerous other crimes, such as murders and "schlamming jobs" (R.p. 777). Schlamming, he explained, was beating someone over the head with a lead pipe (R.p. 1187).

Bernstein was not indicted for his confessed part in the Rosen murder (R.p. 780), since he testified before the grand jury (R.p. 797) without signing a waiver of immunity (R.p. 878). Although he acknowledged he knew he could not be prosecuted for this particular crime, he protested, with a too apparently assumed naivete, that he expected no consideration whatever for his testimony

---

* A shill is a decoy or lure to entice victims into a crooked gambling game (R.p. 809).

(R.p. 877). He was granted immunity by testifying before the grand jury in the Yuran murder case (R.p. 1047). Aside from being held as a material witness he was not then charged, as he sat in the witness chair, with the commission of any crime (R.p. 1178). Since his surrender in April, 1940 (R.pp. 757-8), he has been confined to various hotels with some of the other prosecution witnesses (R.pp. 761-2).

On April 24, 1942, six months after he gave his testimony in the instant case, this professional criminal, a murderer, was discharged by the Kings County Court on the motion of District Attorney O'Dwyer. He goes scot-free! In addition, by way of reward, he received the sum of $2,223 of taxpayers' money, presumably as fees for being held as a material witness. It should be noted, however, that the amount of fees payable to a material witness in New York state is wholly discretionary with the County Judge before whom the matter is presented, and that during the entire period Bernstein was held as a material witness he was maintained at first rate hotels.

Bernstein testified that two days before the murder, in the presence of the petitioner herein, one Strauss instructed him to steal an automobile (R.pp. 702-3), and to return on the following day (R.p. 703); that on the following day he and the petitioner drove this automobile over a certain route which was being demonstrated by the petitioner, and which route the petitioner instructed Bernstein to follow to make the "get-away" after a murder was committed in a certain candy store pointed out by the petitioner (R.pp. 715-6); that on the following day he met all the co-defendants but the petitioner, the murder was committed, Bernstein drove the stolen automobile over the "get-away" route, at the termination of which he was met by the petitioner and another co-defendant, and all the persons involved then drove away in different cars, abandoning the stolen automobile (R.pp. 732-51).

The foregoing is a succinct digest of Bernstein's testimony as given on direct examination. On cross examination, however, innumerable falsehoods, admitted perjuries, inconsistencies and discrepancies of vital importance were developed and cooly and unconcernedly admitted by Bernstein to such an extent that it would be an outrageous miscarriage of justice to execute a man on such testimony, for in the final analysis Capone's guilt or innocence depends on Bernstein's word. In fact, though Bernstein stoutly maintained that since he surrendered to District Attorney O'Dwyer in April of 1940 he had told the truth, he admitted that since that time he testified falsely in the Gangy Cohen trial, which was a first degree murder case. To quote from the record:

> "Q. Did you testify in the trial of Gangy Cohen to anything that was not true? A. Yes, sir. I knew I was doing wrong." (R.pp. 797-8)

The full extent of these perjuries will be set forth in greater detail in the brief to be submitted simultaneously herewith.

The most glaring incident of Bernstein's deliberate perjuries and effrontery occurred when, at the beginning of his cross examination, Bernstein unequivocally stated (in order to demonstrate that the witnesses housed in the same hotel did not have an opportunity to confer on their testimony or to concoct a story) that since he had been placed in custody at the hotel he never wrote any letters to anyone, was not permitted to write or send out letters and never gave any to a detective, his wife or to any other person to mail (R.p. 975). However, much later in his cross examination, when asked to write certain words and names, he realized that he was "caught in his own trap" and quickly admitted that he had written about four or five letters (R.pp. 1238-40).

Aside from the fact that the admission that these letters were written and mailed exploded the prosecution's tacit contention that the witnesses were under twenty-four hour surveillance and had no opportunity to concoct a story, the contents of the letters themselves (which the trial judge refused to admit into evidence for consideration by the jury) clearly demonstrate the viciousness of Bernstein's character, for the letters contained dire veiled threats to inform on certain people unless his, Bernstein's demands for money were met.

ONLY ALLEGED CORROBORATION AS TO PETITIONER: SEYMOUR MAGOON

To supply the necessary statutory corroboration of the self-confessed accomplice Bernstein, the prosecution introduced testimony by one, Seymour Magoon. He is equally as vicious, depraved and mendacious a criminal as Bernstein, though somewhat more cunning. He admitted to participation in two separate murders (R.p. 2470). He has followed a criminal career during his attendance at public school and continuously since that time (R.pp. 2513-4). He stole innumerable automobiles, shot two men—but protested that they did not die—, had beaten into unconsciousness a police officer, and had indulged in various other criminal activities. At the time of the trial, though he had confessed to two murders, no indictments were pending against him (R.pp. 2510-1). He declared that he would like to save himself from the electric chair, and in an effort to do so, he was testifying in the instant case (R.p. 2483). In fact, he expected a little help for giving his testimony and was so told by district attorneys O'Dwyer and Foley, provided he told the truth (R.p. 2482). He protested, however, that he would not lie to save his own life. Asked whether he ever lied in his life, he replied, "only little white lies" (R.pp. 2514-5). This witness supplied an alleged admission as corroborative evidence in another murder case, tried about a year before this one. (People v. Goldstein, supra.)

He testified that in April, 1939, he spoke to petitioner with reference to a man named Friedman (R.pp. 2446-7). According to Magoon, he asked Capone whether he, Capone, thought it advisable that he (Magoon) work on the Friedman thing, because he hung out about a block away and thought he would be recognized (R.pp. 2460-1). At this point, upon being asked, Magoon stated that this was all of the question he asked of Capone (R.p. 2461). Upon stating that this was the finish of his question to Capone, Magoon was immediately excused from the court room while a lengthy discussion ensued among counsel and the court (R.pp. 2461-9). After an appreciable length of time, during which the jury was excused from the court room (R.p. 2463), and at the conclusion of this discussion, Magoon returned to the stand. He was thereupon asked the following question:

> "After you asked him that question, did he say anything to you? Did he, Capone, say anything to you?"

And despite the fact that before being excused from the stand Magoon had stated that the question he testified to was all of the question he asked Capone, this time he irresponsively interpolated as follows:

"I have not finished my answer on that." (R.p. 2469) He thereupon added the following to the question he testified he asked of Capone:

"I says, 'I hung out about a block away and it is sort of off Sutter Avenue.'" (R.p. 2469)

To this Capone replied, according to Magoon, "What are you worried about? I worked on the Rosen thing and it was right on Sutter Avenue and I was not made." Magoon then replied that he was not worried; he was just asking advice (R.p. 2469).

In addition, Magoon also testified that in the Fall of 1938, two years after the murder, he was instructed in the presence of petitioner to follow the witness Rubin, ostensibly for the purpose of assassinating him (R.pp. 2434-53). On one occasion, when Magoon reported his progress, the petitioner, according to Magoon, stated "that Rubin is hurting Lep, and we got to hit him in the head and get rid of him" (R.pp. 2453-4). That was all that the petitioner said during the conversation (R.p. 2454). Magoon's task was then terminated when he reported that Rubin had a police bodyguard (R.pp. 2456-8). Parenthetically, it should be noted that the motivating reason for what the trial court called "the attempted assassination of Rubin" was in no manner connected with Rosen. Aside from the fact that the record fails to disclose any knowledge on the part of Rubin as to Capone's alleged connection with the crime, it is quite apparent, from the statement attributed to Capone, even if what Capone stated were true, that his only interest in the matter was to deflect harm from "Lep."

That, in brief, is all of Magoon's testimony which concerns Capone, excepting the circumstances under which it is alleged he disclosed the above information to the District Attorney.

In May, 1940, just as he completed a term for vagrancy, Magoon was taken to and lodged in the Concourse Plaza Hotel in the Bronx (R.pp. 2532-4), where he spoke with District Attorney Foley (R.p. 2536), but did not tell Mr. Foley anything about the Rosen case (R.pp. 2539-40). Approximately two days after his first conversation with Mr. Foley, he spoke with Mr. O'Dwyer. At that time, somebody—he does not know whether it was a stenographer—was writing in a book (R.p. 2542). He did not, on this occasion, say anything about the Rosen case (R.p. 2543). A couple of months later, he was again questioned by somebody from the District Attorney's office in Brooklyn (R.p. 2544). During these two months, he was never asked any questions by the Bronx officials relative to the Rosen case, nor did he volunteer anything (R.p. 2546).

In July, he was taken to the Brooklyn District Attorney's office, where O'Dwyer, Klein and Heffernan were present (R.pp. 2546-7). While being questioned, somebody was writing—he does not know whether it was a stenographer (R.pp. 2547-8). But when these statements were called for, the prosecutor stated that there were no such statements (R.p. 2549). However, he signed many papers, which contained the substance of his questioning by O'Dwyer (R.pp. 2550-1). On this occasion, in July, 1940, he was not asked any questions about the Rosen case, nor did he volunteer anything about it (R.p. 2550).

Between July, 1940, and January, 1941, he was questioned by the Brooklyn District Attorney's office more than twelve times (R.pp. 2552-3). On some of these occasions, he saw somebody writing on paper (R.p. 2554). It was between January and June, 1941—he could not fix the date any better—that he first mentioned anything about the Rosen case (R.p. 2554). At that time, Turkus, Klein and a few others were present, and someone was writing while he was being questioned. He was questioned for a few hours and during that entire time, somebody was writing with a pencil (R.p. 2556). Again, these statements were called for and again the prosecutor stated he did not have them (R.p. 2557). This should be compared with the testimony of Bernstein and Tannenbaum, both of whom testified that they were questioned about the Rosen case almost immediately after their arrest in the early part of 1940 (R.pp. 1185, 2335-7).

Altogether, Magoon spoke to the District Attorney's office about the Rosen case six or seven times; the last time was four or five months before he testified (R.p. 2564). However, he never testified before the grand jury about the case (R.p. 2562).

From the foregoing, two significant facts stand out: (1) that although arrested prior to the finding of this indictment (R.p. 2432), he did not testify before the grand jury; and (2) although he testified that he had made and signed a statement for the District Attorney of Kings County, the production of which was requested by defense counsel, the trial assistant stated to the court there was no such statement in the files (R.p. 2549).

The first item is of signal significance for the reason that it is quite apparent that insufficient evidence was submitted to the grand jury for the finding of the indictment. As Magoon was the only witness submitted by the prosecution through whom an attempt was made to supply the necessary statutory corroboration of the accomplice Bernstein, it is difficult to understand how the indictment could have been found without such proof being presented to the grand jury. In this connection it should be noted that though Magoon was never called before the grand jury (R.p. 2562), Rubin and Berger testified before that body while the trial was in progress (R.pp. 1736, 1880).

The second item is of equal importance. Magoon either told the truth with reference to the written statements he made for the District Attorney or he deliberately lied about them. If he told the truth, the failure of the District Attorney to produce such statements or to explain why they were not produced is a strong indication that such statements would have been beneficial to the defense and detrimental to the prosecution and would constitute a suppression of evidence on the part of the district attorney.

Even though his pertinent testimony to the issue was brief in nature, yet glaring inconsistencies appeared between his testimony given in the Nitzberg trial, the Goldstein-Strauss trial, and between his direct and cross examination. See R.pp. 2572, 2580-1, 2439, 2586.

Taken in the light of his testimony that he evaded the law since he was a boy attending public school and his protestations that he never told anything but "little white lies," very little credence, if any, can be given to his testimony.

How ridiculous it is to assume that one so versed in crimes (including murders) since childhood, should seek anyone's advice as to what he should do when setting out to commit a crime! How peculiar it is that although Magoon was arrested and in custody for about a year and was questioned on innumerable occasions by the Brooklyn District Attorney, he made no disclosure of his supposed knowledge of the Rosen case until the expiration of that time! How strange it is that although he claimed to have made a signed statement regarding this crime, none now exists! How odd it is that Rubin and Berger should have been called before the grand jury while the trial was in progress, but not Magoon!

ONLY OTHER WITNESS MENTIONING CAPONE'S NAME: ALLIE TANNENBAUM

This witness' previous nefarious record will undoubtedly be described in the brief of the co-defendants. According to Magoon, who knew him since 1933 or 1934, Tannenbaum was a member of the so-called "Combination", and was seen by him frequently during the years 1933, 1934 and 1935, at the "corner" of Saratoga and Livonia Avenues, Brooklyn (R.pp. 2525-6). Tannenbaum and principal witness Bernstein, in 1937 or 1938, together, transported Yuran's dead body in a truck in the mountains (R.pp. 1087, 2228). Tannenbaum and witness Magoon were together in the Friedman murder (R.pp. 2229, 2434-5).

The only reason he is here mentioned is that when asked by the district attorney when he met Capone for the first time, lo and behold, he answered, "Not until the year 1938"—over two years after the murder of Rosen (R.p. 2234). He at no time heard the name of Capone mentioned, although allegedly present at a number of conversations in respect to the Rosen murder.

Take this testimony in connection with Rubin, who states he never saw Capone again after the supposed fleeting glance in 1935 (R.p. 1462), and we destroy what little doubt may still be left as to the falsity of the testimony of both Magoon and Bernstein regarding the alleged participation of Capone in this crime.

However, prejudicial error was committed by the trial court in permitting Tannenbaum, over objection and exception, to testify concerning persons whom he alleged he saw Capone in company with two years after the crime, since association so far distant from the date of the crime has no bearing and is incompetent therefor (R.pp. 2234-6).

As with the previous witnesses, whose testimony is analyzed herein, the only purpose for which this testimony could be adduced was to create a prejudicial atmosphere against defendant Capone, and thus deprive him of a fair trial.

ARGUMENT

As the evidence now appears, the People's proof, if believed, shows that the persons allegedly involved had some connection with a Union, but not Capone, and that Bernstein, Strauss, Reles, Goldstein, Magoon, Rubin, Tannenbaum, Farvel Cohen and others all left town, but not Capone. Moreover, there is no proof of any mention of appellant Capone to Rubin, Berger or Tannenbaum by anyone, according to their stories. Although the District Attorney asked practically all of the witnesses called by co-defendants Buchalter and Weiss as to whether they were acquainted with various persons, including the other two defendants, not one was asked whether they knew the petitioner Capone.

In conclusion, Berger testified he would lie to save himself from the electric chair or any trouble (R.pp. 2190-1); Tannenbaum would like to escape the chair (R.p. 2341); and Magoon wants to escape the chair (but would not lie to do so), and "expects a little help for giving his testimony" (R.p. 2482) and further, in an effort to escape the chair he is testifying in this case (R.p. 2483).

SPECIFICATION OF ERRORS TO BE URGED

Petitioner was convicted of the crime of murder in the first degree and was condemned to death, not by due process of law, but in violation of his constitutional rights guaranteed by the Fourteenth Amendment of the United States Constitution, in that:

(a) The conduct of the trial throughout was so grossly unfair as to leave petitioner without even a remote outside chance of any free consideration by the jury of the evidence, so unfair in fact as to render utterly without force the presumption of innocence to which every person charged with a criminal offense is entitled to until his guilt is established by legal evidence beyond a reasonable doubt;

(b) Petitioner was deprived of his fundamental right to a fair trial by the denial of numerous motions for a separate trial, which compelled him to go to trial with a co-defendant against whom unprecedented inflammatory and prejudicial propaganda had been so extensively circulated so that an unbiased and unprejudiced jury could not be selected, which bias and prejudice redounded to the detriment of the petitioner herein;

(c) The denial of a change of venue to a community other than in which the trial was held was tantamount to being "rushed to conviction through * * * jury and judge being swept to the fatal end by an irresistible wave of public passion, so that no trial in the true sense was afforded (him)" and resulted in the trial being a mere semblance or pretense of one and not a trial by due process of law;

(d) Petitioner was deprived of his fundamental right to a fair trial in that, by reason of the inflammatory and prejudicial propaganda and notoriety which had been disseminated in the community in which the trial was held, and by reason of the erroneous rulings by the trial court on challenges as to the impartiality of talesmen, an unprejudiced and impartial jury was not obtained;

(e) The New York Court of Appeals erred in holding that the petitioner was not deprived of a fair and impartial trial by a jury composed of his peers;

(f) The New York Court of Appeals erred in holding that the atmosphere created both before and during the trial by the presence of armed guards did not deprive the petitioner of his right to a fair and impartial trial guaranteed by the United States and State Constitutions;

(g) The New York Court of Appeals erred in holding that the misconduct of the prosecuting attorney, permitted and condoned by the trial judge, while an abuse which should have been strictly controlled, was not prejudicial to the petitioner and did not deprive him of a fair trial;

(h) The New York Court of Appeals erred in affirming a judgment based upon evidence admittedly—"not strong", without proper corroboration of the discredited and unreliable co-conspirator and where throughout the trial the prosecuting attorney had misconducted himself so as to deprive the petitioner of the fair trial to which he was entitled;

(i) The New York Court of Appeals erred in affirming a judgment where the unfair attitude of the trial court throughout the trial was such deviations from prescribed trial procedure as to result in a trial so unfair that it constituted a mere pretense of one.

REASON FOR GRANTING THE WRIT

It appears that the proof adduced by the prosecution against the petitioner was so weak as not to satisfy the standard set by the weight of authority in criminal cases. Further, while the proof was weak it came principally from the lips of a discredited and concededly unreliable accomplice, who although guilty of several murders, was permitted to go scot-free within a short period after the verdict was rendered against the petitioner. The alleged corroboration was furnished by an equally unreliable and discredited murderer who was never even indicted for his various crimes. His alleged corroboration, however, was wholly insufficient. This was an error of law which should be rectified.

The prejudicial atmosphere created before and throughout the trial rendered it impossible to procure a fair and impartial trial, and rendered utterly without force the presumption of innocence to which every person charged with criminal offense is entitled to until his guilt is established by legal evidence beyond a reasonable doubt. The inflammatory and prejudicial newspaper articles printed both before the trial and during the selection of the jury (while the prospective jurymen were at liberty), coupled with the armed guards present in the courtroom throughout the trial, and the petitioner's entry in and departure from the court room in manacles during the various recesses, aggravated the situation and further prevented the rendition of the verdict by a fair and impartial jury. In view of these circumstances the denial of a motion for a change of venue and the denial of various motions for a severance was an error of law which should be rectified.

The failure of the trial court properly to pass upon the qualifications of the prospective jury and in denying the motions of defense counsel to excuse a substantial number of prospective jurymen for cause, thereby exhausting the peremptory challenges accorded him by law, and at the same time using a different standard sustaining a substantial number of the prosecution's challenges for cause in the case of jurymen who would have been satisfactory to the defense, constituted an error of law which should be rectified.

The trial court in the instant case also permitted and condoned actions upon the part of the prosecuting attorney which prejudiced the defendant and prevented him from securing a fair and impartial trial. The trial court further aggravated this condition by refusing to permit defense counsel to object or except, in the presence of the jury, to the inflammatory and unfair statements of the prosecuting attorney during summation, thereby depriving the jury of the knowledge of the improprieties of same. This taken into consideration with the obvious failure of proof explains the reason for the conviction of the petitioner.

The unfair attitude and statements of the trial court so prejudiced the rights of the defendant that he was further prevented from securing a fair and impartial trial. This taken into consideration with the obvious failure of proof further explains the reason for the conviction of the petitioner.

The course of the trial sanctioned by the Court of Appeals of the State of New York was so contrary to the usual and proper course of trial procedure that this court's power of supervision is petitioned to rectify the error. The injustice of permitting the judgment below to stand will appear clear.

These reasons have all been more fully developed and set forth in the brief annexed hereto and made a part hereof.

WHEREFORE, it is respectfully requested that a writ of certiorari issue to the County Court of Kings County of the State of New York for a review of a judgment of said Court convicting petitioner of the crime of Murder in the First Degree; and to the Court of Appeals of the State of New York for a review of an order of said Court affirming the aforesaid judgment of conviction.

Dated: December 31, 1942.

LOUIS CAPONE,
Petitioner

By Sydney Rosenthal
Attorney

BRIEF IN SUPPORT OF PETITION

OPINIONS BELOW

The County Court of Kings County wrote no opinion. The Court of Appeals of the State of New York handed down four separate opinions which are annexed to the record (R.pp. 4030-4091).

JURISDICTION

The judgment of the Court of Appeals of the State of New York was entered October 30, 1942. The jurisdiction of this court is invoked by reason of the deprivation of petitioner's rights under the Constitution of the United States, Fourteenth Amendment, Section 1; New York Sate Constitution, Article 1, Sections 2 and 6; and the constitutionality of Section 749aa of the Judiciary Law of the State of New York, subdivision 7. The constitutional questions were raised and passed upon in the court below (R.pp. 4098).

QUESTIONS PRESENTED, STATUTES INVOLVED, ETC.

A statement of the questions presented, the statutes involved, specification of errors to be urged, and a statement of the case will be found in the petition.

STATEMENT

The record below consists of 4029 printed pages in addition to 2783 pages of typewritten voir dire. In view of the length of such record, this brief and petition have been condensed so far as is consistent with a proper presentation of the questions involved, and at the same time preserve the rights of the petitioner.

ARGUMENT

I.

The main facts in the testimony involving Capone have been set forth in the petition. They have, however, there been stated in a manner most favorable to the appellee. Still, it must appear obvious that the proof against Capone was extremely weak, even if credible.

The trial court admitted: "in mentioning the points of evidence applicable to this defendant, Capone, I particularly wish to impress upon you the comparative paucity of the corroboration from non-accomplice witnesses" (R.p. 3918). Judge Rippey of the Court of Appeals of the State of New York was of the opinion that "there was insufficient legal evidence at the close of the People's case upon which to base a conviction of Capone and the indictment against him should have been dismissed" (R.p. 4091). Judge Loughran of the Court of Appeals of the State of New York, one of the dissenting judges, stated "there is thus grave question whether the above word of Magoon standing alone can in good conscience be accepted as a sufficient prop for what (as we are about to see) was a revision by Bernstein of his original evidence against Capone": and further, "No one can be sure the verdict against Capone was not the result of an undue restriction of his essential right so to test the credibility of that testimony." (Referring to Bernstein (R.p. 4085). His opinion was concurred in by Judge Desmond. Chief Judge Lehman, one of the affirming judges, stated: "Evidence coming from a polluted source has failed to remove reasonable doubt of the defendant's guilt from my mind" (R.p. 4078). Even in the prevailing opinion of Judge Conway, concurred in by Judges Finch and Lewis, it was stated, "The guilt of the defendants Buchalter and Weiss was clearly established. The guilt of the defendant Capone depended upon whether the jurors believed the testimony of a witness who corroborated the accomplices. That witness was a criminal. The court properly left to the jury the question whether they would believe or disbelieve him. That was peculiarly a jury question. We cannot say that the jury was bound as a matter of law to disbelieve him" (R.p. 4069).

This evidence emanated from the mouths of the witnesses Bernstein and Magoon. To evaluate properly their testimony, however, the inconsistencies, discrepancies and admitted perjuries therein contained are herewith set forth verbatim. This is done so as not to burden this court with the task of referring to the numerous such instances cited in the record. We will here clearly demonstrate the many falsehoods, admitted perjuries, inconsistencies and discrepancies of vital importance in Bernstein's testimony, which we believe are of such a nature that it would be an outrageous miscarriage of justice to execute a man on such testimony, for in the final analysis Capone's guilt or innocence depends on his word. The mendacity of this witness was so obvious that the admonition in People v. Kress (284 N. Y. 542, 549) that an accomplice's testimony should be regarded "with suspicion" and "accepted only with caution" would be doubly applicable to him, if, indeed, it would not warrant disregarding his testimony entirely.

Although he testified that since he surrendered to District Attorney O'Dwyer in April of 1940 he had told the truth, his testimony before the grand jury in the Rosen case was given prior to his testimony on the trial of Gangy Cohen in the Mountains. In regard to the testimony given in the Gangy Cohen case, he was asked:

> "Q. Did you testify in the trial of Gangy Cohen to anything that was not true? A. Yes, sir, I knew I was doing wrong." (R.pp. 797-8)

We will now set forth some of the glaring contradictions between (a) his present testimony and testimony in the Cohen trial; (b) his present testimony and that given before the grand jury in the Rosen case; (c) contradictions not developed between grand jury and present testimony; (d) between his direct and cross-examination on this trial; and (e) contradictions in testimony on cross-examination.

We have no way of ascertaining the story he gave to District Attorney O'Dwyer since it was contended on the trial that he was never asked to put it in writing or make any statement, nor was any stenographer ever present when he was questioned (R.p. 1003). Contrast this fact with the written statements taken from Muggsy Cohen (R.p. 3063), defendant's witness Nat Sobler (R.p. 2847) and people's witness Rubin, taken by Assistant District Attorney McCarthy.

(a) Bernstein's Contradictions between present testimony and testimony in Cohen case.

(1) In the Cohen murder trial, he swore to tell the truth, but he did not (R.pp. 968-9; 1051-2); (2) he there swore that he never kept a bank account, but that was not the truth (R.pp. 969-972); (3) he there swore that he never threatened anybody, but that was not true (R.pp. 996-8); (4) he there swore that he never used an alias, and here admitted using numerous aliases (R.pp. 979-81; 1103); (5) he there swore he did not know the notorious Buggsy Goldstein, and here admitted he did know him (R.pp. 1019-20); (6) he there swore he knew the notorious Reles well, but here not so well (R.pp. 1027-8); (7) he there swore he stole one or two cars and was a reformed thief—here he was not reformed and admitted stealing 75 cars up to 1940 (R.pp. 1052-3; 827-8; 1047); (8) he there swore he had only seen one gun in his life and that was in the year 1937, but here admits it was untrue (R.pp. 1056-9; 1061-3); (9) he there swore he had no business with the witness Tannenbaum (in the instant case), and here admitted having gone on criminal jobs with him (R.pp. 1085; 1087; 1091; 1104); (10) he there swore that he had pointed out the location of the axe used in another murder, but here denied same (R.pp. 1104-6); (11) he there swore he was never connected with Rosen or any other murder, but here admitted that he was (R.pp. 1111-13).

(b) Bernstein's contradictions between testimony in Grand Jury and this trial.

(1) Before the grand jury he swore that he drove the automobile along the route and Capone rode with him, and on the trial, he claimed Capone drove the car (R.pp. 1115-17; 1224-6); (2) before the grand jury, he swore that he rode with Capone at seven o'clock at night and here, stated it was four o'clock daylight (R.pp. 1227-8); (3) On this trial swore Capone told him to steal the license plates and Strauss said nothing, but before the grand jury, swore Strauss told him to steal the license plates and Capone said nothing (R.pp. 721-2; 1228-30); (4) before the grand jury stated that one Joe Pilch brought the guns over to the car, and on this trial secreted that fact (R.pp. 726; 1230-33)*; (5) on this trial claimed defendant Weiss had written the address of co-defendant Cohen's apartment on a slip of paper, and before the grand jury stated it was deceased Strauss (R.pp. 729; 1263-4); (6) on this trial stated co-defendant Weiss in-

---

* Bernstein's equivocation regarding Pilch was evidently due to Pilch then being in custody as a material witness and the probability that he would not corroborate him. Pilch's testimony would have shown Capone's presence or absence from that meeting structed him to return the stolen car to the garage; before the grand jury said it was deceased Strauss (R.pp. 729; 1264); (7) on this trial stated Weiss distributed guns, but before grand jury stated Strauss opened package and distributed guns (R.pp. 1266-7); (8) on this trial stated he told Capone about the theft of the car, but before the grand jury said it was Strauss he told (R.pp. 715; 1228).

(c) Contradictions (not developed on trial) between testimony and grand jury testimony.

By reason of a hurried, disconcerted reading of the grand jury minutes in the presence of the trial jury, because of the trial court's unwarranted refusal, over objection and exception, to grant counsel a reasonable recess in order to read same so that he might be in a position to cross-examine properly on that point, numerous other contradictions and changes were not brought out. A few of these instances are as follows: (1) Here he stated that on Saturday night Weiss told him to drive the car to Bradford Street where Capone had shown him (R.p. 726). In the grand jury, however, it was Strauss who told him this (People's Ex. Z-1 for Iden., p. 19); (2) here he stated that at 5 a.m., in Farvel Cohen's house, Weiss told him to get the car and meet them in the park (R.pp. 731-2); before the grand jury, it was Strauss (People's Ex. Z 1 for Iden. pp. 22-3); (3) here he stated that on the morning they were waiting for Rosen to open the store, Weiss told him to get the car and stop it in front of Rosen's store with the motor running (R.pp. 740-1). Before the grand jury, it was Strauss (People's Ex. Z-1 for Iden., p. 24); (4) here he stated that on the way over the bridge, after the stolen car was abandoned, Weiss gave him the gun (R.p. 746). Before the grand jury, Weiss never gave him the gun (People's Ex. Z-1 for Iden., p. 28).

Note—These changes are not just inadvertent, excusable errors. On the contrary, they evidence a studied effort to inculpate the defendants on the trial at any cost.

(d) Contradictions between direct and cross-examination.

(1) On direct examination he had testified that his first stolen automobile was without orders from anybody. On cross, however, contended that he had received orders to steal the car, and then, confronted with his previous testimony, admitted he had received no such orders (R.pp. 958-62); (2) He first stated he only heard that Herschel Bernstein was a crook, and thereafter admitted that he knew he was a notorious burglar and ace thief (R.pp. 1067-8); (3) he first stated that he did not know there were any guns in the car at the time of the theft, to which he pleaded guilty in 1933, and finally, admitted this was untrue (R.pp.1044-6).

(e) Contradictions in testimony on cross-examination.

His constant denial of writing letters while in custody and his final admission are more fully referred to hereafter.

The theory of the prosecution was that the witnesses called by them had no opportunity to concoct their stories; that Bernstein had become sanctified the minute he became a People's witness, and from then on could not lie and, in fact, had lost all of his vicious propensities.

In order to establish these facts, Bernstein testified that he was kept under surveillance twenty-four hours a day (R.pp. 829, 831), even to the extent of a detective sitting at his bedside while he slept (R.p. 1026), and had absolutely no opportunity to communicate with the outside world (R.pp. 975-6). Of course, the prosecutor did not call any police officer or credible person from an outside source to establish that fact. Bernstein's final admission that these letters were written and sent out by him exploded the prosecution's theory that there was twenty-four hours surveillance over all the witnesses and no opportunity to concoct a story. The following are the letters:*

"THE HALF MOON HOTEL
near Sea Gate—Brooklyn, New York,
Esplanade 2-3800
Paul E. Fulton, Manager Walter Mc McKeean as Trustee for Certificate Holders

Sunday.

Ben

I'm writing to you to show this letter to Cherry. I've waited long enough. I've been promised by you but you never lived up to it. So there is no sence of me taking your word. Now you are saying why I'm bothering you and not Malley. Well I'll tell you you are in the bussiness. There was money left over and you took care of it. Do you remember the last place I saw you in Jackie Leonards house. I had a talk with you. I asked your advise what to do. You told me to look out for yourself what did I get with them guys. Do you remember when I said I'm not going to talk when I gave myself up. Do you know why I turned rat on account of you and the rest that I've been together. So all of you wouldn't get in any trouble. I guess you are saying what kind of trouble can I get in. Do you know everytime somebody breaks there is plenty he talks about. Take for instance me they want me to tell everything I did and what

* The County Clerk erroneously failed to incorporate these letters in the printed record and the were considered by the Court of Appeals (See opinion by Loughran, J.) Because of their importance, the contents will be transcribed at length with the curse words deleted therefrom ever I know. I'm standing up and keeping my mouth shut for what?"

(Defendants' Ex. P for Identification.)

(Emphasis by author.)

Sunday.

"Whitey

This is the last time I'm writing. You done me a favor you left $5 dollars with my wife. Now I found out why Mr. Cherry is so brazen.

I haven't got anything on him. You told my wife 10 years ago he fooled around with me I can't get him in any trouble. So now I see why I've been f—— around with that money he's in bussiness, shylocking. So he thinks that Im dead fish. Well it is a funny thing here I'm in trouble for being a s——. But g—— damened I'll make sure that Mr. Cherry will be the other s——. I'm just going to give a hint what I can do to Mr. Cherry. Well one instant. He forgets that he got plates with me in a——draw your answer. Do you know how many guys are pinched just for conversation. Why do you make me write like that I don't want to hurt you. Again I wan't to know did I do you any harm the way you are defying me. Well there is no sence of me trying to threaten you if you want it that away. So Cherry you [illegible] making me do this that I don't want all for $200 dollars. I just wan't to remind you years don't mean nothing to me. Because I'm just as good as dead. Cherry if my wife tells me she didn't get that money please go out of town.

Sol."

(Emphasis by author.)

(Defendants' Exhibit R Identification.)

Sunday

"Whitey

What the hell is this are you having me on sure thing? Is Cherry asking for trouble? Listen I wan't to remind him does he forget he is involved in a——he knows what I mean. And does he forget we done a lot of things together that I can give plenty of trouble? Lets be smart about this say he wants to be a wise guy and takes a lawyer what will it cost? Don't think I don't know what is going on I know Cherry is got a new buddy Pete the Pollack so you see I know a little. Now I'm raising it to $300 dollars and 5 every week. I want to tell you stop trying to outsmart me because I'm really burned on Cherry for the way he treated my wife in Weiners Bar Grill. Why didn't he take the whole floor so everybody can hear him. To-day is Sunday if my wife don't get that money when she comes to visit me. As true as my mother may she rest in peace Im going to make so much trouble for you that $300 will be only a spit. And you Whitey don't you go over my wifes house if you dont bring that money.

Sol.

P. S. And no payments. This time it is going to be one way or the other."

(Emphasis by author.)

(Defendants' Exhibit S Identification.)

These letters were definitely material to the issues involved, as they would not only have exploded the prosecution theory that there was no opportunity for the witnesses to concoct a story between themselves, but would definitely have established they were not under strict surveillance to the extent that they could not only write letters in peace, but could mail them to the outside.

Further, these letters would have clearly demonstrated that the halo placed on Bernstein was but a figment of the imagination and would have placed him in his true light before the jury—as a vicious unprincipled scoundrel, who, even while in custody, did not hesitate to threaten the outside world.

This error cannot be overlooked, and was of such a serious nature that it warranted a reversal. It was further aggravated by the Court's refusal to charge Capone's request in respect to opportunity among witnesses to converse and concoct stories, to which exception was taken.

"The Court: I will read that because I have a different ruling. It reads, 'I ask your Honor to charge the jury that they may take into consideration close association of the principal witnesses at various times after their arrest and while in custody, to determine what, if any, opportunity they had to converse with one another regarding the subject-matter of this indictment, and the jury is not bound by the denials unless they believe them.'

The only evidence I can recall is that they were under constant surveillance; that they were never at any time together without the police being there to see that they did not discuss the case. I decline to so charge.

Mr. Rosenthal: May I respectfully except?

The Court: I would so charge if there was any evidence that at any time they were left alone. There is no such evidence. I mean left alone in one another's company.

Mr. Rosenthal: May I except and, in view of the fact of your Honor's statement, ask that the request be modified to the extent that the jury has a right to draw such reasonable inference from their testimony as is warranted by the facts as they see them.

The Court: I find that it is not. I find it is all guesswork.

Mr. Rosenthal: Then I respectfully except.

The Court: The jury is not permitted to guess.

Mr. Rosenthal: May I respectfully except.

The Court: You go by evidence, not by guesswork. I think the reason, possibly, Mr. Rosenthal, is clear enough. You cannot lock criminals together when they are waiting their turn to be called to testify, and let them put their heads together and maybe plot something behind the backs of the police.

Mr. Rosenthal: I don't want to enter into any discussion with your Honor, excepting that I have a different view and it is too late and I don't want to enter into a discussion as to the fact. I merely except.

The Court: That would be sloppy police work, to permit discussion" (R.pp. 3955-6).

The Court, by its ruling therewith, erroneously invaded the province of the jury, and further aggravated the error by its comments in respect to the reasons for denying the request to charge. Here the Court refrained from permitting the jury to pass upon the question because, as it claimed, "it is all guess work," but under almost similar circumstances when it came to the life of the defendant, the Court was content to leave it to the jury.

SUMMARY OF BERNSTEIN'S TESTIMONY

To enumerate all the faults, admitted perjuries, inconsistencies and discrepancies in Bernstein's testimony would be impractical in the ordinary limits of a brief. We believe so much thereof as will be necessary to conclusively establish to this Court that he admitted committing perjury in the Cohen trial in the Mountains (which was also a capital case) and in this trial, to such an extent that even the Court was moved to label him as having "lied" before the jury, has been set forth in the preceding subdivisions. All his changes of testimony were for the patent purpose of implicating the defendants on trial at whatever cost. Truth played no part in his discourse. A mere cursory comparison between his testimony at the trial and before the grand jury will conclusively demonstrate the conscious consistent effort on his part to substitute the names of Capone as well as Weiss for Strauss, who had already been executed.

In view of all that has already been pointed out as to Bernstein's credibility, it would be gilding the lily to add thereto, since the contents of these letters will clearly demonstrate that Bernstein still is the vicious character he was before he gave himself up and assumed a mantle of reform and truthfulness.

In conclusion, the following quotations taken from the record will clearly demonstrate that he testified untruthfully, knowing it was wrong, in the Mountains where a man's life was also at stake and that he deliberately lied on this trial where Capone's life is at stake; and despite his protestations of telling the truth before the grand jury, the testimony given on this trial is irreconcilable to that given before that body. We quote:

> "By the Court: Did you testify in the trial of Gangy Cohen to anything that was not true? A. Yes, sir, I knew I was doing wrong.
>
> Q. Did you fail to testify to some things that were true? A. Yes, sir, I knew I was doing wrong" (R.pp. 797-8).
>
> • • • •
>
> "Q. You say you are telling the truth on this trial? A. All of the truth, and I told the Grand Jury the truth too" (R.p. 877).

Told grand jury truth about everything before he was a witness.

> "Q. Did you or didn't you? A. I told the grand jury the truth about everything in this case long before I was a witness." (R.p. 797)

> "By the Court: The rest of the letter must be submitted before the Court can pass on it. He has admitted now that he lied. You do not have to establish that." (R.p. 1249)

> "• • • It is established that the witness testified under previous cross that he did not send out a letter and now he admits that he did.

Mr. Talley: Your Honor has stated from the bench that this witness has testified falsely with regard to sending the letters.

The Court: Yes.

Mr. Talley: Your Honor stated—I think the language was that he had lied before this jury.

The Court: Yes, that is obvious." (R.p. 1261)

The only other testimony against Capone was that of Magoon. His testimony on the trial has been amply quoted in the petition.

We feel that this evidence against Capone was insufficient as a matter of law for submission to the jury and the indictment should have been dismissed.

Though mindful of the fact that this court is loathe to inquire into or overrule a determination of fact by the highest court of a sovereign state, a short discussion of the proof against petitioner is, nevertheless, herein set forth to demonstrate how substantially the unfair trial petitioner received erroneously influenced his conviction.

The New York State Constitution, Article VI, §7, so far as applicable, provides:

> "The jurisdiction of the Court of Appeals, except where the judgment is of death, • • • shall be limited to the review of questions of law;"

In construing the authority vested in it under this section, the Court of Appeals held:

> "'This,' said the court in People v. Gaffey (182 N. Y. 257, 259), 'enables us to review the facts in capital cases as we always did.' A review of the facts means that we shall examine the evidence to determine whether in our judgment it has been sufficient to make out a case of murder beyond a > reasonable doubt. We are obliged to weigh the evidence and form a conclusion as to the facts. It is not sufficient, as in most of the cases with us, to find evidence which presents a question of fact; it is necessary to go further before we can affirm a conviction and find that the evidence is of such weight and credibility as to convince us that the jury was justified in finding the defendant guilty beyond a reasonable doubt." (People v. Crum, 272 N. Y. 348, at 350)

Even though the Court of Appeals of the State of New York apparently affirmed the judgment of conviction, it was only an affirmance in form, rather than in substance. Though the Chief Judge cast a deciding vote for affirmance, his opinion, even on the facts, is a brief for reversal. He stated, "Evidence coming from a polluted source has failed to remove reasonable doubt of the defendants' guilt from my mind." In fact, his opinion appears to be for reversal, until almost the end thereof when he votes for affirmance despite the admitted lack of proof beyond a reasonable doubt, despite the recognized serious errors of law and despite the acknowledged unfair tactics of the district attorney. For that reason, the following discussion of the facts is set forth.

Despite the voluminous record—the testimony of thirty-six witnesses and the introduction of fifty-seven exhibits (none of which exhibits directly affected Capone)—tersely summarized, the People's proof against Capone consisted of the testimony of the self-confessed accomplice Bernstein, whose testimony has been set forth briefly in the petition annexed hereto, and the criminal Magoon, who furnished the alleged corroboration consisting of a supposed conversation had with the petitioner approximately three years after the occurrence, and whose testimony has also been set forth in the petition.

To characterize the testimony of either Bernstein (who did not hesitate to testify falsely in both this trial and in another capital case—'knowing he was doing wrong') or the "little white" liar Magoon, would be superfluous after a reading of the matters regarding them, hereinbefore set forth. Suffice it to say that both are equally unworthy of belief. But in order to sustain the conviction, it would be necessary to label both these witnesses, contrary to conscience and human experience, as truthful*; for if either witness is not entitled to any credence, the other witness must perforce fall and the conviction fail. If Bernstein is disbelieved—and, indeed, it is impossible to understand how any other conclusion can be reached—the conviction cannot be sustained even if Magoon's testimony be believed; for Magoon's testimony, in that event, would not be sufficient in itself to warrant a conviction. And conversely, if Magoon is disbelieved, the conviction must also fall even if Bernstein is believed: for then Bernstein's testimony would lack the necessary corroboration. Under these circumstances, the trial court should have dismissed the indictment against Capone on his motion, on the grounds herein set forth, first made at the end of the People's case and renewed after the defendants had rested (R.pp. 2714-5; 3538-40). By submitting the question of his innocence or guilt to the jury, the trial court, in effect, held that both Bernstein and Magoon could be believed. This was contrary to the credible evidence and erroneous as a matter of law.

But even if we assume, arguendo, that both Bernstein and Magoon are to be believed, still there was insufficient evidence for submission to the jury. Bernstein was an accomplice as a matter of law, and the trial court so charged (R.p. 3888). Therefore, his testimony required corroboration (Code of Criminal Procedure of the State of New York, Sec. 399). Magoon's alleged conversation, it is contended, does not furnish the legal corroboration required, does not constitute an admission nor does it sufficiently tend to connect Capone with the commission of the crime.

---

* Although this argument is advanced, we do not concede Magoon's testimony, in any event, furnished the necessary corroboration.

To hold that this alleged conversation by Capone constituted corroboration, it would be necessary irresistibly to conclude that the words "on the" meant "implication in" and that "Rosen thing" meant "Rosen murder." In making this determination, however, one is struck by the utter inconceivability of Capone making such an assertion. The only witness who connected Capone with the crime was Bernstein, and according to him, the only time Capone was on Sutter Avenue was on the day before, in a moving closed car which, with all other traffic, passed by Rosen's store. If this be true, there certainly was not any danger of being recognized and connected with a murder which took place on the following day. How ridiculous, therefore, to conclude that Capone meant that he was implicated in the Rosen murder when he told Magoon that he was "on the Rosen thing" and was not recognized. Even assuming he made this oral statement, it certainly did not mean the murder, or being implicated in it, for the people's proof discloses that he was never on Sutter Avenue under circumstances to fear recognition. This is further borne out in the summation of the prosecutor who also conceded that Capone did not hang out around Sutter Avenue and that there was not much of a chance of his being "made." We quote in part from the summation:

> "• • • Why let me show you how cunning was this Capone in this Rosen case, as disclosed by the evidence. His lawyer said he did not hang around Sutter Avenue. You can bet your bottom dollar he did not. When he drove around there, it was not in his car—it was in Bernstein's car (R.p. 3831).

• • • •

Did he leave any opening other than being with Bernstein on Sutter Avenue? So what? If Capone had been seen riding on Sutter Avenue with Bernstein—so what? (R.p. 3831).

• • • •

• • • But he admitted, 'I worked on the Rosen thing, and I was not made.' He was not the man because when he went by on Sutter Avenue it was in Bernstein's car—there wasn't much of a chance of picking him, or his being made. It is true he was not 'made,' and there was not much of a chance—he did not leave much room. The slip-up Capone made was in trying to do Lepke a favor a second time, to kill Rubin, • • •." (R.pp. 3853-4)

All the salient factors necessary to constitute an admission are absent from the instant case.

In conclusion it is respectfully urged that in view of the discussion from every possible angle of the evidence against Capone, there is no conceivable theory under which the learned trial court would have been justified in submitting this case to the jury. The conclusion that the court was in error in so doing, becomes all the more fortified when we consider in what light the court regarded Magoon's supposed corroborative evidence. We illustrate:

When first asked as to whether it was the intention of the court to permit the jury to speculate on what the word "thing" meant as related to Rosen, the Court stated,

> "I have thought carefully on that point. In fact, I have thought a bit while lying awake nights during this trial" (R.p. 3540).

While charging the jury, the Court spoke of paucity of the corroboration. We quote:

> "Now as to Capone—and please pay strict attention, gentlemen, on this point; it is quite important. In mentioning the points of evidence applicable to this defendant, Capone, I particularly wish to impress upon you the comparative paucity of the corroboration from non-accomplice witnesses so that you won't confuse the evidence applicable to the others and use it against Capone." (R.p. 3918).

Requested to charge on the weight of the testimony of Magoon and Bernstein in so far as it affected Capone, the Court confessed being "a little puzzled" about the language of Magoon and labeled it as being "too indefinite." We quote:

> "• • • I am a little puzzled about this language as being sufficiently definite as a confession in case Bernstein is not believed. The language is that when that witness was talking to Capone, Capone replied, 'What are you worried about? I worked on the Rosen thing, which was right on Sutter Avenue, and I was not made.' I think that is too indefinite." (R.p. 3962)

These expressions lead the writer to believe that the Court was of the opinion the case could be submitted to the jury on Magoon's testimony concerning the witness Rubin. This, of course, would be clearly erroneous, for nothing in that testimony tended to connect Capone with the crime charged in the indictment.

As to the Rubin episode, after reviewing all the People's evidence and instructing the jury as to which parts thereof would be applicable to the individual defendants, the court charged specifically, in reference to Capone, what evidence may be used as corroboration of the accomplice Bernstein, as follows:

> "Now, what is it? It comes down to Magoon. It depends on whether or not you believe that Magoon told the truth when he gave the testimony which I shall now refer to. If you believe he told the truth and you accept it as evidence tending to connect Capone with the commission of the crime, then it will be sufficiently corroborative, according to your finding, and you will then, if you accept the testimony of the accomplice witnesses in the light of this alleged corroboration, apply it against Capone." (R.pp. 3919-20).

The Court then reviewed two items of Magoon's testimony involving Capone. One was the "tailing" of Rubin wherein Capone is alleged to have stated on one occasion when Magoon reported his progress, "That Rubin is hurting Lep. We have got to hit him in the head and get rid of him." (This occurred in the fall of 1938, two years after the crime.) And the other was the conversation in which Capone is alleged to have said, "What are you worried about? I worked on the Rosen thing, which was right on Sutter Avenue, and I was not made" (R.p. 3920). As to those two items, the Court said:

> "Those two items, as I have said, are the only evidence from non-accomplice witnesses which can be submitted on the question of corroboration" (R. p. 3920).

The Court then emphasized Magoon's testimony relative to tailing Rubin (the first item submitted by the court as corroboration), because of the "great importance of this feature of the case," by reading all the direct testimony on the subject (R.pp. 3921-2). After reading same, the Court further charged:

"Gentlemen, I think that is the text applicable thereto, unless there was something on cross examination applying to it. You see how it is limited down. It is limited down on corroborative points to what Magoon, the non-accomplice witness, said was his conversation with Capone in which he alleges Capone made reference to the Rosen matter and that he had not been made, and then you have the alleged complicity, according to the testimony I have just read, testified to by Magoon, who is a non-accomplice witness. These are two non-accomplice witnesses. (The court meant two items.)

If you believe that testimony, and it is for you to say whether you believe it or not, then you may ask yourselves is it sufficient as tending to corroborate Berger and Bernstein. If it is, you may convict. If you do not believe it, or, believing it, you don't deem it sufficient as tending to connect, you will have to acquit Capone, because if Capone was in a huddle there and was a conspirator in the proposed trailing or tailing of Rubin for the purpose of another attempt at assassination, then that may be used as evidence of guilt on the part of Capone" (R.p. 3926).

An exception was taken to the instruction permitting the jury to consider this Rubin episode as against Capone (R.pp. 3985, 3986-7).

In conclusion, as to the probative force of Magoon's entire story, Judge Loughran of the New York Court of Appeals, aptly stated:

"(6) The sole support for Bernstein's accomplice-story against Capone was the People's witness Magoon. It was said by Magoon that Capone had made to him an oral utterance in these words: 'I worked on the Rosen thing and it was right on Sutter Avenue and I was not made.' In the declared opinion of the trial judge, the statement so reported by Magoon was 'too indefinite' to be used as a confession of guilt on the part of Capone. At the same time, however, the judge directed the jury that Magoon's testimony (if credited) could be taken as corroborative evidence tending to connect Capone with the murder of Rosen. This was a controlling ruling. Belief in the actuality of Capone's oral admission as reported by Magoon was an indispensable condition of the finding of Capone's guilt. Hence the affirmance of these judgments of conviction must bespeak the conclusion of this court that the testimony of Magoon is not an altogether insufficient ground for the signing of the death warrant of Capone. See People v. Crum, 272 N. Y. 348. On this angle of the case we have felt—and still feel—no little concern.

A testimonial report of an oral admission of a party-litigant is generally the most dangerous evidence that can be received in a court of justice, and the most liable to abuse. (Law v. Merrills, 6 Wend. 268, 277.) Even when the admission is reported by a reputable witness, the testimony is often the weakest and most unsatisfactory of all the kinds of evidence. (See the authorities set forth in 7 Wigmore on Evidence, (3rd ed.) § 2094, p. 468). Magoon was not a reputable witness. He is a self confessed murderer. His appearance on the witness stand had no object but the saving of his own skin. There is thus grave question whether the above word of Magoon standing alone can in good conscience be accepted as a sufficient prop for what (as we are about to see) was a revision of Bernstein of his original evidence against Capone. For the purpose of this opinion only, we shall assume that the finding of Capone's guilt is not against the weight of the evidence; but we stress this phase of the record as a strong contradiction of any assertion of the conclusive quality of the proof for the People" (R.pp. 4082-4083).

II.

THE CASE WAS NOT TRIED BEFORE AN IMPARTIAL JURY. THE COURT ERRONEOUSLY SUSTAINED CHALLENGES FOR CAUSE MADE BY THE PEOPLE AND ERRONEOUSLY OVERRULED CHALLENGES FOR CAUSE MADE BY THE DEFENDANTS. THE DEFENSE WAS PREJUDICED BY THE COMPULSORY ACCEPTANCE OF THE LAST THREE JURORS, AFTER THEIR PEREMPTORY CHALLENGES EXHAUSTED. THE DEFENDANT WAS DEPRIVED OF HIS CONSTITUTIONAL RIGHT TO A FAIR TRIAL UNDER FOURTEENTH AMENDMENT, SECTION 1, OF THE CONSTITUTION OF THE UNITED STATES AND ARTICLE 1, SECTIONS 2 AND 6 OF NEW YORK STATE CONSTITUTION.

The questions involved in this point are based on the voir dire which does not appear in the printed case on appeal. An application that it be so included was made to the Chief Judge of the Court of Appeals, who, however, directed that instead of printing the same a typewritten copy was to be filed and delivered to defense counsel for the purpose of bringing it up for review. This copy consists of 2783 typewritten pages, and was only furnished to defense counsel shortly prior to the argument of the appeal in the Court of Appeals. No opportunity was afforded to defense counsel to move to correct the many deletions and inaccuracies which were encountered in preparing this argument. Reference will, therefore, be made in this point, where necessary, to the alleged deletions and inaccuracies in the record.

At the commencement of the trial the panel consisted of 250 talesmen. It was found necessary to draw a panel of an additional 100 talesmen, which panel was practically exhausted by the time a jury was finally selected. A vast number of these talesmen were excused because of prejudice against the defendants. Many of the peremptory challenges exercised by the defense were because those talesmen, after evidencing a knowledge of the case, contended that they had formed no opinion—which did not justify a challenge for cause. (See voir dire of talesmen William C. Pape, Emanuel Camachi, Thomas G. Jones, Thomas E. Finn, Carl A. Ryder, Frank X. Butler, Thomas W. Madigan, Frederick G. Harris, Wilfred Pagnod, Roland M. Robert and Steward Andrews.) All these talesmen read news items about the case or a series of articles dealing particularly with these defendants, which appeared in the New York Mirror (122-3; 44-9; 1441; 1943-4; 2209-2213; 2254; 2246; 2405; 2590).* This reading matter caused the forming of an impression—but it did not amount to an opinion (132-3 450-1).

The defense exhausted all thirty peremptory challenges to which it was entitled. Ten of these were exercised when challenges for cause were overruled. After the exhaustion of the thirty peremptory challenges by the defense, three jurors were seated. As to those, either a challenge for cause was overruled and an exception taken, or the defense rested on the record.

The prosecution used eighteen peremptory challenges. Of the challenges for cause by the prosecution, it is contended herein that six of them were improperly sustained, to the prejudice of the defendants.

The process of selecting a jury began at a slow pace. Most of the talesmen said that they were prejudiced and could not sit impartially in the hearing of the case. The Judge said that the "Mirror" articles, particularly, were "raising havoc with the jury" (614). And though the court had admonished the talesmen not to read the articles in the Daily Mirror, a copy of that newspaper was found,

---

* All references to voir dire are to pages in the typewritten transcript as pointed out to the court by one of counsel, "on the very front seat of the court room, where jurors were assigned to sit" (s.m.p. 448-9). A good deal of time was lost because of recesses for religious holidays, Primary Day, afternoons devoted to other judicial work, and at least two adjournments to permit counsel to recover from colds. Suddenly, the Court apparently became aware that the leisurely pace of selecting a jury was the subject of newspaper comment. The tempo changed. When talesmen asserted that they could not sit impartially because they were prejudiced against defendants, the Judge said to the defense that the mere fact of asking about the talesmen's prejudices "is clearly establishing an escape medium for the juror if he does not want to serve. You are putting the words in his mouth. • • • You are doing the thinking for the talesmen" (Fitzgerald, 335-6; also, see Kendy 430). A talesman who asserted his inability to be fair was charged with "unwillingness to serve." Another heard himself thus described by the Judge: "I don't think this man is mentally fitted to sit on a jury" (Cone, 439). This same characterization was also applied to still another talesman who was ordered by the Court to "get out" (Herrick, 542). Defense counsel remonstrated that these remarks were calculated to intimidate talesmen and prevent a free revelation of their prejudices (Herrick, 543), but similar judicial comment was repeated in the presence of the panel. Talesmen who said that they would be embarrassed to serve because of friendship with the prosecution or defense counsel, were berated as "wholly unfit to have a job as a juror," and as being hostile "to the Court's questions" (Rosenthal, 726-7). When a talesman was peremptorily challenged by the prosecution, the Judge read into the record some prepared remarks on the abuse of the exercise of peremptory challenges (Cleary, 1295-6; also, Kendy, 426), and his comments were so worded as to apparently furnish the basis for a newspaper story, which sounded as though he was criticizing the defense for deliberately delaying the process of selection, and was so reported.

The errors committed in the selection of the jury, which will be discussed herein, will be subdivided as follows:

A—Erroneous overruling of defense challenges for cause;

B—Erroneous sustaining of prosecution's challenges for cause; and

C—Seating of jurors who were challenged for cause after defense exhausted thirty peremptory challenges.

A

1—JOHN R. HAMILTON (201-239)

He was an accountant employed by the National Carloading Corporation (202). When asked by the prosecutor: "Do you sit in the jury box free from prejudice?" his answer was: "As far as I can tell, yes, sir." (210). Later, when questioned by one of the defense counsel, he stated he had read an article concerning one of the defendants in the "Daily Mirror," about the same time that he had been called as a juror, approximately a month ago (212-213). We quote from his examination:

> "Q. Without mentioning his name, did it prejudice you against that particular defendant? A. I don't think so.
>
> Q. You say you don't think so. I take it that implies some doubt in your mind. Am I correct? A. It is hard to dissociate the impression.
>
> • • • • •

Q. And the impression, I take it was an unfavorable one to that defendant, isn't that so? A. It would be, yes, the way the article was written.

• • • •

Q. And that impression still remains with you? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And that is an impression that is prejudicial to that particular defendant? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And if you were sworn as a juror, it would need some proof or evidence to dissipate that impression is that so? A. I am afraid so." (214)

He then stated in substance that the article seemed to be the truth, to the prejudice of the defendant, and he has not completely eliminated that prejudice (213).

"Q. Do you feel that in deliberating, in pondering over the guilt or innocence of the defendants on trial in the Rosen case, that you could banish any impression that you received from the one reading of that newspaper? A. I think I could." (218)

• • • •

"Q. If you took an oath to be a fair and impartial juror, ready to render a verdict without sympathy or prejudice, and you felt the way you feel now, you would be violating that oath, would you not? A. I don't think so." (221)

He believed that he could discount the prejudice if the defendant took the stand, but it would require an effort on his part. He was then questioned by the Court as to whether he could set the prejudice aside:

"Q. Would you be able to do that? A. I believe so.

Q. Can you give us your promise that you would? A. Yes, sir, I would make every effort." (224)

Ever since he read the article in "The Mirror," the prejudice has remained with him (225) and it caused an impression in his mind, so that he accepted the truth of the facts stated therein without any substantiation on anybody's part (228-9).

> "Q. So that if the trial lasts about four or five or six weeks, you will still reserve that impression until such time; is that so? A. Yes.
>
> Q. And you will be sitting in that box, in that jury box and all the time you will hear this testimony and somewheres in the back of your head will be that impression, waiting for you to either use it or not use it; is that so? A. Yes." (232)

The talesman was then challenged for cause, and the challenge was overruled, and an exception taken (232-3). He was questioned by another counsel for defense:

> "• • • In the ordinary case, if you knew nothing about the individuals or the case, there would not be any question but what you could sit as a fair and impartial juryman without any prejudice against the individual on trial is that right? A. That is right.
>
> Q. But in this particular case, you have a prejudice created by what you read and what you believed when you read it as to the character of one of the men; is that right? A. That is right" (236)

He admitted having answered Mr. Barshay (one of defense counsel) that he had reserved his prejudice or impression until the question of character came in issue and meant by that that if some people came to the stand as witnesses for The People and made detrimental statements as to the defendant's character, that would lend greater weight to his bad character because of what he had read in "The Mirror" (237).

"Q. In other words, because of what you read in 'The Mirror' as to his character, if anybody got on the stand as The People's witness and accused him or said things detrimental to his character, it would have a greater weight because of what you have read? Is that what you just said? A. Purely in that one line." (237)

He was again challenged, and reiterated under oath that if the question were repeated, his answer would be the same (238).

He was then questioned by the Court:

"Q. Are you willing, in that event, in this case, if sworn as a juror, to completely set aside any impression you may have from what you have read? A. On character alone?

Q. On character alone? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Are you sure that you can? A. Yes, sir, I am sure." (239)

The Juror was again challenged for cause. The challenge was erroneously overruled, an exception taken, and the defense was compelled to challenge peremptorily (239).

We call attention to the different standard utilized by the Court in determining the qualifications of at least two other prospective jurymen, one of whom was challenged by the defense, and the challenge sustained, and the other, by the prosecution, and the challenge sustained.

In the case of Woolsey W. Conlin (67-108), he stated that he had formed an impression from reading newspapers which would be difficult to remove though he would try. He further stated, however, that he would not require a greater amount of evidence on the part of the defendants to be produced than otherwise would be necessary in order to establish their innocence, or a lesser amount of credible evidence on the part of the People in order to establish their guilt (107). However, on further questioning, he stated that he was quite sure that he could dismiss what he read from his mind. But asked whether that implied that he had a doubt, he said, "Yes, sir" (107). The prosecutor then attempted to establish he could lay aside his impression and decide the guilt or innocence of the defendants on the evidence he heard in the courtroom and on the Judge's charge of the law, but the Court held that if the answer to the question is "Yes," it would contradict his other answers, and sustained the challenge.

In the case of the instant talesman, however, the juror had evidenced a prejudice which he only believed he could remove, and that the prejudice remained with him and would remain during the entire time that the trial continued. But after he had been challenged on two occasions, the Court asked him whether he would be willing to set aside the impression, (although in the Conlin instance he refused to permit the prosecutor to ask a similar question) and upon procuring an affirmative answer, overruled the challenge made by defense.

In the case of Samuel Silfen (1557-1565), the prosecutor challenged the prospective juryman because he stated that the name of Buchalter is familiar as that of a dentist, whom he does not know personally, but who his mother-in-law used as such (1559). This dentist never visited the home of his mother-in-law, and the relationship was solely that of dentist and patient. He then stated that he had a slight impression as to the guilt or innocence of the defendant from matters which he had read in the press, which would require evidence to remove, and was thereupon challenged by the prosecutor (1560-1). However, when questioned by defense counsel, he stated that if the Court were to charge various questions of law, he would accept the same from the Court, and was willing to undertake to lay aside the slight impression he had and make every effort to dismiss it from his mind (1564). The Court, nevertheless, sustained the challenge made by the prosecution (1565).

2—SAMUEL F. STRONGIN (894-928)

He was employed as an audit clerk for the Metropolitan Tobacco Company, and lived in Brownsville, the section in which the murder was committed, four out of the last five years, at Grafton Street near Livonia Avenue (895), about two blocks from Rose Gold's place (897), which was situated at Saratoga and Livonia Avenues (896).* He was familiar with this corner, knew the name of the proprietor, and patronized the store (896-7). He had known and heard various things about the persons who hung out or congregated at that corner and has seen and heard various things which made an impression upon him (896).

> "Q. And you have heard in that area the mention of various names that you have heard mentioned by the lawyers in the case? Having lived in Brownsville for four out of the last five years, you have some impression about this case, haven't you? A. Persons, yes." (896)

At the time Rosen was murdered, it was a topic that concerned the neighborhood and he supposes he did dis-

---

* This is the store and corner alleged to be the hangout for the so-called combination cuss the subject with people, friends of his, and so on (897). At the time of the commission of the deed, there was a big write-up and it was the subject of discussion in places that he visited, and he was inclined to accept the truth and accuracy about what he read and heard at face value, and probably formed some conclusion with respect to them, but feels, however, that he could lay aside any impression which he had (907-8).

> "Q. Would you require a lesser amount of proof from the District Attorney by virtue of what you heard or read? A. That may be true.
>
> Q. So that, can we go one step further and say you may want some explanation forthcoming from the defendant? A. I believe so.
>
> Q. You have already heard, sir, up to this very minute many times repeated that a defendant need not come forth with any explanation of any charge against him? A. Yes, I know that.
>
> Q. You had that in mind when you answered my question? A. Yes." (909)

He explained that what he meant by his previous answer was that the defendant need not necessarily provide the reason, but that somebody on their behalf should. He admitted being clear on the subject that the defendant might remain silent and no unfavorable inference could be drawn against him therefore (909-910). He reiterated:

> "Q. You still expect that something should be forthcoming from someone on behalf of the defendant in explanation of the charge; isn't that so? A. I answered that before.
>
> Q. What? A. I say I did answer that before.
>
> Q. And you still are of that opinion, isn't that so, sir? A. Yes." (910)

He protested, however, that he could enter the trial with an open mind, and first claimed that he had been led into making the previous answers, although he subsequently admitted, knowing from his presence in the court and having listened to preceding jurors being questioned, that he was not led into the answers by defense counsel (910).

> "Q. Knowing that, sir, without being led into it, yet you said you would require someone to offer some testimony. Didn't you say that? A. I did. Q. That is not fair, is it? A. I am aware of the conflict. I realize that, but I still stick to my previous answer." (911)

He further admitted that he passed Rose Gold's store practically every night, his company sold them tobacco and other products, and he had a definite opinion of the character of the people who hung around the corner, and if their names became a part and parcel of the case, he would have a prejudice against them which would apply either to persons in the prosecution or defense (912-13). The Court then inquired:

> "Q. Reles and Strauss?* A. That's right." (913)

Then questioned by another of defense counsel, he admitted that he knew the individuals whose names had been mentioned by the prosecution and defense counsel and had formed an opinion as to the character of these particular individuals, and that opinion may have amounted to a prejudice against these individuals (922).

---

* It must be remembered that Strauss was a co-defendant in the case at bar.

"Now, isn't it a fact, candidly, Mr. Strongin, that because of your knowledge, first hand knowledge, of the particular location and of some of the people or things that may transpire in this trial, either the amount of the evidence which the prosecution would have to adduce is less or more, or the amount which the defendants would have to produce is less or more than what it would be if you did not know any of the individuals, any of the surroundings, any of the locality? Isn't that true, sir? A. True to a certain extent. Q. Yes, the fact is that you would permit, subconsciously or otherwise, in the juryroom, your knowledge, gleaned from a knowledge of the neighborhood and some of the individuals, to creep into your deliberations, as honest as you are. A. Consciously I would not. Q. But there is that possibility of your mind being in that situation? That is why you said you had a prejudice, isn't it? A. That is true." (923).

The talesman was then challenged for cause and admitted under oath that if the questions were repeated, his answers would be the same, but in answer to the prosecution stated that he could try the case on the evidence, free from any impression or opinion and on the testimony adduced on the trial (923-5).

The challenge was thereupon overruled, and an exception taken (925). Whereupon, defense counsel sought to question the talesman further in view of the answer given to the prosecutor, but the court proclaimed that the challenge had been fully tried and refused to permit further examination, and an exception was taken (926). The talesman was then asked whether he had not stated in answer to Mr. Barshay's question that the amount of evidence that would have to be produced in this case, either by the People or the defendant, would be different because of his knowledge of the individuals and whether he was not fully cognizant of his answer when he made it, and he stated, "Yes," and he meant it when he made that answer (926-7).

The talesman was again challenged (927), and the Court overruled it, with the following statement:

> "* * * The Court understood the talesman. His prejudice, so-called, relates as he stated in the course of his questioning to a proposed witness for the People, but does not activate against the defense. The challenge is overruled." (927-8)

An exception was taken, and the juror peremptorily challenged by the defense (928).

The overruling of this challenge constitutes one of the most glaring examples of error committed by the Court throughout the entire selection of the jury. This prospective juryman was not only acquainted with Brownsville, but patronized the store at the corner frequented by the so-called combination, read a big write-up about the crime in question, discussed it, accepted as the truth what he had heard, formed a conclusion that would require evidence on behalf of the defendant to dissipate, and even was acquainted and prejudiced against the deceased defendant Strauss, and admitted that it would require a lesser amount of proof from the District Attorney by virtue of what he had heard or read. Merely because he stated in conclusion, in answer to the prosecution's question, that he could try the case on the evidence free from any impression or opinion (924-5), the challenge was overruled. The Court erroneously refused to permit defense counsel to question the talesman further in view of the contradictory answer given to the prosecutor, but proclaimed that the challenge had been fully tried, to which exception was taken.

Compare the ruling above to the ruling of the Court in respect to the talesman Nathan Jellin (783-825), who was challenged by the prosecutor for cause on implied bias because he stated that conditions in Brownsville, in reference to certain persons who hung around the corners, were terrible (823), to which challenge counsel for the defense consented (824). Here the Court insisted on the challenge being tried (824), and although the talesman was merely asked thereafter as to whether his responses would be the same, to which he answered "Yes," the court immediately sustained the challenge (825).

In another instance, upon the examination of talesman Benjamin Bergman, Jr. (2049-58), the prosecutor challenged for implied bias, "because of his knowledge of the conditions on the corner there" (2058), notwithstanding the fact that he had absolutely no prejudice against the defendants (2055); that even though he knew the particular corner and had patronized it as a customer on occasions, it would not affect his ability to pass on the evidence in the case nor would he be embarrassed by jury service (2057). Having in mind that in the instant case of Strongin he had stated that he not only knew Reles and Strauss, but had a distinct prejudice against Strauss, we quote the following from Bergman's questioning:

> "Q. As you sit in the jury box now have you any impression about Harry (Pittsburgh Phil) Strauss?
> • • •
> A. I have.
> Q. Is it one that is derogatory to him? A. It is.
> Q. That name will figure in the testimony—I just tell you that as a thought—that is about as far as I can go. Have you some idea about Abe Reles?
> • • •
> A. I have not." (2057)

In spite of the ability of the talesman to be fair, the Court erroneously sustained the challenge, saving the exercise of a peremptory challenge by the People.

3—JAMES F. NAGLE (1122-1171)

He resides at 80 Willow Street and is employed as a salesman by Timm & Behrens, a real estate firm (1122-3). In reply to prosecutor's questions, he testified as follows:

> "Q. If you are charged, as you undoubtedly will be by the Court, that even if you believe an accomplices' testimony, if you believe every word he says, that the defendant's participated in the murder, • • • and you believe everything he says, if there was no other supporting evidence, the law is that you would have to acquit; would you follow the Judge's instructions?
>
> The Court: Without corroboration?
>
> Q. If there was no corroboration? A. If I was convinced they were guilty, I would do it very reluctantly." (1126-7)

He then stated he would follow the Judge's instructions of law if the Judge charged that in addition to the testimony of accomplices there must be, before there can be a conviction, other evidence tending to connect the defendants with the commission of the crime. However, when questioned by defense counsel, he testified as follows:

> "Q. Did I also understand you correctly, in respect to a question that was asked by Mr. Turkus, of you, that even if you believed an accomplice's testimony to be a hundred per cent true, that in accordance with our law, it would be encumbent upon you to acquit the defendant, that your reply to that question was that you would under those > circumstances do so, with great reluctance? A No, that I would accept the ruling of the Court with reluctance." (1133).

When asked whether he had formed any impression about the case, "from any source whatever," he replied, "Possibly from scanning the headlines, I have had an impression," which impression was detrimental to the defendant, but which he thought he would be able to discard during the general course of the trial (1130-31). However, when questioned by another defense counsel, he stated that through some contacts he had in East New York, a section adjacent to Brownsville, he heard discussions concerning crime in that locality; and that those discussions, coupled with what he read, caused an impression adverse to the defendants (1133, 1137). He protested, however, that the impression did not go towards the guilt or innocence of the defendants and was not such as would remain in his mind and activate him in determining that question; there was no doubt in his mind as to his ability to remove that impression (1139-41). He then testified as follows:

> "Q. Mr. Nagle, something would be required in the course of the trial to change the impression? A. Only the ordinary course of the trial.
>
> Q. What in the ordinary course of the trial, do you think would happen, would you require in order that that impression might be removed? A. Only the general testimony given; that is all.
>
> Q. Then it would require some testimony, whether it was general or specific, to remove the impression? A. Possibly.
>
> Q. Not 'possibly.' Actually, is not that the situation? A. No, I think I could cast it aside if I was accepted in the box." (1142)

Finally, to reach a determination after the contradictory replies of the talesman, the following occurred:

> "Q. Mr. Nagle, let us be perfectly fair with each other. I am trying to be fair with you. There have been so many questions asked upon this subject, I am a bit confused as to just what your state of mind is. I will put the question plainly to you: Have you or have you not an impression as to the guilt or innocence of these defendants at this moment? A. I have a slight impression.
>
> Q. And that impression is detrimental to the defendants or some of them? A. Yes." (1143-4).

This impression, he stated, would have to be dissipated during the trial, only after someone gave him testimony as a basis for laying it aside (1152, 1154). He would not expect the District Attorney to furnish such evidence.

Though he protested that he knew of no reason why he could not sit as a fair and impartial juror on the trial of the case (1149), he, nevertheless, testified as follows:

> "Q. Should the Court so charge you, will you follow the instructions of the Court and draw no inference of guilt against the defendant for his failure to take the stand? A. I would, sir, very reluctantly." (1148)

He stated he did not agree with such instruction (1148) and that his reluctance to accept the Court's charge was not based upon the impression he had of the connection of one of the defendants (1149). At that point, he volunteered: "No, my reluctance would be more or less, that a person accused of a crime should be willing to get up and——" The Court then interrupted the talesman and refused to permit him to continue (1149), to which an exception was taken (1150).

He was then challenged for cause and stated under oath that he still retained an impression unfavorable to one of the defendants in the case (1160). He then stated to the prosecutor that he could and would lay aside this impression (1165-6). However, when defense counsel sought to ascertain whether that impression would only be laid aside if and when evidence is produced by a defendant to cause it to be laid aside, an objection by the District Attorney was sustained to which an exception was taken (1166). The challenge was then erroneously overruled, to which an exception was taken, and the talesman was peremptorily challenged by the defense (1170).

The erroneous refusal to sustain this challenge for cause is comparable to the analysis given in respect to the talesman John R. Hamilton. (See pp. 66-69 of this brief).

The discussion as to the erroneous refusal to permit further questioning of the prospective talesman after the court and prosecutor had presumably succeeded in rehabilitating him will be discussed in the analysis at the conclusion of this point.

4—EDWARD GRODEN (1171-1220)

He was auditor of the First National Bank (1171). He had heard District Attorney O'Dwyer speak at meetings many times; knew Assistant District Attorney Rooney very well, and worked for Judge O'Dwyer and was a booster of his (1182). He believes in causes sponsored by O'Dwyer and is positive that O'Dwyer's office would not bring about an indictment unless they felt sure (1182-3). He would not say that he is free from bias or prejudice against the defendants, but it is not based upon the particular case but on the general set-up as a whole (1183). He read some of the articles in "The Mirror" about these defendants and had formed an opinion of the defendants which is detrimental to them (1184-5), and although he was biased and prejudiced, it would not take less evidence to convince him of the guilt of the defendants (1185).

He had discussed criminals with Assistant District Attorney Paul Lockwood many times, and as a result of his association with Lockwood, had a bias against people charged with crime, and in this case, had a prejudice against one of the defendants who had been convicted of crime and is incarcerated for a long time (1187), insisting, however, that the prejudice could be laid aside and that his faith in Judge O'Dwyer would not influence him (1188-9).

From reading the "Mirror" articles, he formed an absolutely unfavorable impression of defendants but it would not take some evidence to remove that impression. Asked what would remove it from his mind, he replied, "I don't think anything would remove it" (1207).

He was then challenged for cause. The challenge was erroneously overruled on the ground that "he has not said it would affect his judgment in this case" (1208). An exception was taken, and the talesman was peremptorily challenged (1220).

Compare the ruling in the instant case with that of Morris Leibowitz (345-377; 409-410) who had merely met District Attorney O'Dwyer as a member of some political club, but would not be prejudiced because of that fact. After a thorough questioning, he was tentatively seated in the box as prospective juryman No. 1 (377). On the next court day, however, the following discussion about the fitness of this juryman took place:

> "Mr. Turkus: I had a discussion with Judge O'Dwyer as regards this talesman (Leibowitz); he is to be of assistance to him in the campaign and it might have some implication on a verdict to be rendered in the case. Under the circumstances, I am going to challenge for cause.

The Court: Do counsel for the defense wish to try the challenge?

Mr. Talley: No, we do not.

The Court: It is unanimous?

Mr. Talley: Yes, all the defendants join in it.

The Court: Then there is nothing to try and the Court has to sustain the challenge. Of course, there has to be ground for it. I am of the opinion that notwithstanding the apparent absolute honesty of this talesman and the fact that he would be an excellent foreman for this jury, he would be in an embarrassing position in the jury room as foreman of the jury in expressing any opinion on this because of his political connection. Challenge sustained." (409-410)

Again, compare the instant talesman with Sidney J. Flamm (1470-74), who stated that he had been arranging some radio political talks for Judge O'Dwyer's representatives and felt, in answer to a leading question by the prosecutor, that because of that fact it would be more fitting and proper that he not be on the jury. Whereupon the prosecutor stated:

"I think so too. I don't want anybody in who would be embarrassed because of that kind of a connection.

The Court: You mean he is challenged?

Mr. Turkus: Yes.

The Court: Try the challenge." (1473)

Whereupon, the challenge was tried on the ground aforementioned. No questions were asked by defense counsel, and the court sustained the challenge (1474).

As to the instant talesman, further comparison should be made with the talesman Sam Silfen, whose challenge for cause by the People was erroneously sustained. (See pp. 100-101 of this brief.)

5—PAUL F. BATTERSON (1251-1288)

He read about the case in the "World-Telegram" (1276), but did not gain any impression from reading the article. Asked whether he gained an impression against the defendants from any other source, he replied, "I have heard of the defendants before I was ever called for jury duty" (1276). The impression which was formed in his mind was unfavorable to the defendants and he still had it (1277).

> "Q. And would it require some measure of testimony to remove that impression from your mind, if accepted as a juror? A. I have an impression of the defendants, but I would not hold that against them were I put on the jury.
>
> Q. But you would enter the jury box with that impression in your mind, wouldn't you? A. I will probably always have the impression." (1277)

The impression which he gained he possibly heard from the radio's unfavorable comment concerning the defendants (1279). Asked whether with his unfavorable impression, should an issue be raised as to the truth or falsity of a statement made by one of the defendants under oath, could he lay it aside without allowing it to weigh on his mind in determining the issue, he replied, "I would set aside any impression that I have before judging the man's guilt or innocence" (1284-5).

The talesman was then challenged for implied bias, but the challenge was erroneously overruled, and an exception noted, and a peremptory challenge exercised (1287-8).

6—JOHN J. ROSE (1361-1393)

He resides at 246 East 32nd Street, Brooklyn, N. Y., and is employed as an electrical engineer by the New York and Queens Electric Light and Power Company (1361). In reply to the prosecutor, he stated that there was nothing which would prevent a fair verdict at his hands (1366).

When first questioned by one of the defense counsel, he stated that he read various news items and two or three articles about Judge O'Dwyer (1367). Asked whether they caused him to form an impression with reference to the case or the defendants, he replied "I had a very slight impression with regard perhaps to his character, but not with regard to the merits of the case," and that such impression was an unfavorable one (1367-68). He insisted that he could dissipate that impression as it did not have any bearing on the particular case (1368). The impression he had was that the defendants were members of Murder, Incorporated (1371). He then stated:

> "Q. Consequently you are prejudiced against them by reason thereof? A. Not prejudiced, no, sir.
>
> Q. Well, I will say an impression detrimental to them? A. Yes, sir." (1371)

He again insisted that this impression was "not regarding the case; only as to their character." Despite this, however, he stated that this wouldn't affect his judgment if the defendants should put their character in issue (1372). He then stated that having had that impression, he would take his seat in the jury box, if selected, with that impression still in his mind (1382). But, in answer to the Court, he replied that, as he stated before, he could lay aside and disregard that impression (1383).

He read articles in the New York Journal concerning the life of O'Dwyer. He read those articles after he was called for jury service in spite of the fact that the Court admonished the prospective jurors not to read anything about the case (1386, 88). The group he referred to was mentioned in the article (1387). He accepted what he read as true (1383).

He was then challenged by the defense for cause and under oath stated that the impression which he then had as he sat in the jury box, is one of detriment concerning the character of the defendants on the trial as members of the group he mentioned (1391-92). The challenge was overruled and an exception taken thereto, and the talesman was peremptorily challenged by the defense (1393).

Compare the Court's attitude as to the instant talesman with that assumed when talesman Herman F. Bell (1688-1706) was examined. This talesman admitted that he had read newspaper articles since he had been called for jury duty, but upon re-questioning by the prosecutor stated that the articles did not leave any impression in his mind as to the guilt or innocence of the defendants. However, the court ruled as follows:

> "The Court: The Court feels this way about it: According to my recollection, the instructions were given on August 4th—I believe that was the date. Apparently this man did not hear the instructions, but nevertheless, it was important that that instruction be observed in order to get an impartial jury. This was not a simple, casual reading of one article, or glancing at the headlines, but was done for the purpose of obtaining information, and it would not make a nice-looking record if this man were taken on the jury. The challenge is sustained." (1706)

It will be noted that an admonition had been given to the panel not to read any newspapers. The instant talesman admitted, however, having done so. He further admitted that he had an impression as to the defendants being members of Murder, Inc. Nevertheless, the challenge was overruled.

In addition, the challenge exercised in the instant case is comparable to the talesman Hamilton. (See pp. 66-69 of this brief.)

7—JOSEPH J. FLANAGAN (1895-1919; 1939-1942; 1960-3; 1970)

He was employed by the Public Service Electric Company (1896). He got a slight impression unfavorable to the defendant from newspapers which he has had all the time he has been in Court (1967). It would require evidence of proper weight to remove this slight impression.

He read articles in "The Mirror" which helped to form the impression. They were special articles related to the particular case (1907). He believes, if selected as a juror, that he would have to have evidence to remove that "unfavorable impression" and that is his honest impression (1908). He was thereupon challenged for cause by defense (1908) and stated that although he had been sitting in the courtroom listening to the remarks of all counsel with respect to the law and has heard the Judge instruct on a number of cases as to the law of our State, the true and correct condition of his present frame of mind is such that it goes to the guilt or innocence of the defendant due to the fact that he read articles regarding the guilt of the defendant and that is his honest state of mind (1909).

Questioned by the prosecutor, he stated that he is not anxious to get off the jury, but that was his opinion, although he could dispel the impression and have will power enough to give a fair decision in the case; that whatever reading he did, is hazy in his mind (1911). He read some articles about the career of O'Dwyer which mentioned the defendant (1912), and he could dispel the impression which he had. However, when further asked whether he absolutely will dispel it, he replied, "I believe I have the will power" (1912).

After it was urged by defense counsel that the ability to dispel was based on belief and therefore the challenge for cause should be sustained, the talesman changed his answer so as to imply that he didn't think he would require any evidence to dispel the impression and he would not allow it to influence him (1912-14), and that when he had previously made the statement that the defendants would have to offer proof, he had lost sight of the fact that the defendants need never prove anything (1916).

> "Q. When you were next asked by Mr. Turkus, did you then say that you 'believed' that you could dispel the impression? A. I meant I thought I had the will power.
>
> Q. You 'thought' you had? A. Yes, sir.
>
> Q. That implied a doubt, didn't it? A. Well, I guess everybody has some doubt to some extent of their will power.
>
> Q. I just want to get your state of mind. That implied a doubt when you answered that question, isn't that true? A. It may have to a slight degree.
>
> Q. Then Mr. Cuff questioned you, you recall, and when he questioned you, you used the word again that you 'thought' you would be able to dispel, didn't you? A. Yes, sir.
>
> Q. That implied a doubt also, didn't it? A. I suppose so." (1916)

Further questioned by defense counsel, he admitted that when he used the word "thought," that implied a doubt and he further admitted that the impression went slightly to the guilt or innocence of the defendants. Questioned by the Court, he stated that he did not think he would need evidence to remove this opinion (1917); he thought he had the will power to dispel it, which he supposed implied a doubt (1918).

> "Q. That was the state of your mind when you were first questioned by Mr. Turkus, when you were questioned by Mr. Cuff, when you were questioned by myself and when you were questioned by the Court? A. That is right." (1918)

He finally stated, in answer to the prosecutor, he has the will power to lay aside the impression that he had and will do so (1918). The challenge was then overruled and an exception taken by the defendants (1919). Prior to his final discharge as a juryman, the question was asked of him whether the quality of evidence that would be necessary for the District Attorney to produce would be less than would be ordinarily true were he sitting in a case where he did not have any impression against the defendant. An objection to this question was erroneously sustained and an exception taken (1960-63). (This question will be discussed in the analysis at the conclusion of this point.)

A peremptory challenge was exercised by the defendants (1970).

Compare with the analysis under talesman Hamilton. (See pp. 66-69 of this brief.)

8—WILLIAM J. KOEHLER (2131-6; 2162-7; 2169-71; 2188-93)

He is an insurance appraiser (2131) and knew something about the flour trucking industry, and was called as a juror in the Silverman case and was excused (2133).

He read about this case in the "Tribune" and "World-Telegram" (2162), but it was hard to say whether he formed an impression from what he read (2163). He had been called as a juryman in about seven capital cases. He has been on practically all of the Amen cases involving perjury (2199). He had come in contact with Max Silverman and Luckman, who had one end of a warehouse in which he had an office (2188). He knew Martin "Buggsy" Goldstein and thought "Mrs. Goldstein married people next door" to him (2191-2).

> "Q. By reason of this episode, have you in anywise followed with any interest the name of Martin (Buggsy) Goldstein? A. No.
>
> Q. Have you read about him in the paper? A. Who? Goldstein?
>
> Q. Yes. A. I knew that he was executed." (2192)

Upon this answer, the juryman was challenged for implied bias, and the challenge was erroneously overruled, an exception taken and a peremptory challenge exercised (2193).

The error in overruling this challenge was particularly prejudicial to the defendant Capone, for it subsequently appeared in the course of the trial, through the witness Rubin, that the prosecution intended to bring into the case the name of Martin "Buggsy" Goldstein as having been in company with the defendant Capone prior to the killing of Rosen.

9—CLEMENT S. JACOBUS (2482-4; 2485-6; 2487-96; 2508-22; 2523)

He is a real estate broker (2482) and has read and seen names in the "Tribune" and the "Sun," but does not know anything about the case (2489-90). He has an impression which he formed that is unfavorable to the defendants, but could lay it aside (2491-91a). If accepted as a juryman, he will begin consideration of the case with an unfavorable impression in his mind about the defendants, or some of them, and some evidence will have to be given to remove that impression.

> "Q. To get rid of that impression, you would expect such evidence to come from the defendants, wouldn't you? A. Yes, sir.
>
> Q. And unless such evidence was produced, you could not disregard the impression that you have now as you are talking to me? A. No, I have that impression." (2492)

Challenge was thereupon made for cause, and he reiterated his statement under oath (2492-3). Further questioned by defense counsel, he answered:

> "Q. You understood Judge Talley when he asked you whether the impression you have in your mind would take some evidence on the part of the defendants in this case to remove? A. To disprove?
>
> Q. Yes, to remove. A. Yes, sir." (2493)

He was then questioned by Mr. Turkus, and stated that the impression went to the character and reputation of the defendants (2493).

Then questioned by the Court as to whether he had formed an opinion of the guilt of the defendants on this specific crime, he stated he had not formed an opinion, but had an unfavorable bearing in his mind from the headlines he had seen in the paper, but that the impression was not so deep that he could not disregard it (2493-4).

The challenge was thereupon erroneously overruled, and defense counsel attempted to further question the talesman on the answers given subsequent to their questioning, but permission was refused, and exception taken.

Counsel for Capone protested the ruling and the overruling of the challenge and noted an exception (2522). A peremptory challenge was exercised by defense counsel (2523).

Compare with analysis under talesman Hamilton. (See pp. 66-69 of this brief.)

10—JOHN J. DUNPHY (2484-5; 2486-7; 2496-2508; 2522-3)

He was treasurer of the Customs Truckers (2485). He had read about the case in the newspapers and has a sort of an unfavorable opinion of these defendants which goes to the guilt or innocence, and would require some evidence to remove, if accepted as a juryman, and he does not think he could remove it unless he heard evidence (2496-7). He was challenged for implied bias, and sworn, and stated that unless he had evidence to offset his opinion, he could not lay aside the impression which he had formed as respect to the guilt or innocence of the defendants (2497).

He further stated that he sat in court, heard the various instructions given to prospective jurors on the law, and notwithstanding that fact and the different principles which he understood as to presumption of innocence, reasonable doubt, and all the other things, his statement to Judge Talley was true, so that the impression or opinion which he had concerning some of the defendants was of such a nature that it would take evidence on their part to remove before he would be able to lay aside the impression or opinion which he had formed. He acknowledged that he had made this statement, notwithstanding the fact that he had been told that the defendants need at no time prove their innocence but that it was incumbent upon The People to establish their guilt beyond a reasonable doubt (2498-9). Questioned by the prosecutor, he said the impression which he had formed had been based on reading the "Times," the "Sun," the "News" and other papers (2499).

Questioned by the Court, he said he recalls that the person who is alleged to have been killed was Rosen (2500). Further questioned by the Court:

> "Q. Does the fact you read in the paper they are accused of the murder of Rosen form any impression that they are guilty? A. Not necessarily.
>
> Q. Yes or no? A. No, sir." (2501)

The Court further, by leading questions, procured the answer that the impression which he formed was that they were presently on trial, accused of the murder of Rosen —and went no further than that; that he would set aside the unfavorable impression; decide on the evidence and could follow the instructions of the court (2502).

After the Court and prosecutor had concluded asking the leading questions, which resulted in the answers hereinbefore set forth (2504-5), counsel for Capone asked whether he could ask one question in the nature of rebuttal, but the Court refused to permit it, and an exception was taken (2505). The Court, subsequently seemingly changed its ruling when counsel for Weiss questioned the propriety thereof, but then again refused to permit further questioning, and a further exception was taken (2507). Counsel for Capone, thereupon, asked the following question:

"Q. I have this question to address to you—do not answer until the court rules. When I addressed you and asked you certain questions and you made certain answers, did you understand the questions which I addressed to you and did you answer them to the best of your ability?

Mr. Turkus: I object.

The Court: Objection sustained.

Mr. Rosenthal: Exception." (2507-8)

The challenge was then overruled, and an exception taken (2508).

On the general question, counsel for Capone again sought to question the talesman, but was refused permission, protested the ruling and took an exception (2522).

Exception was taken to the overruling of the challenge, and a peremptory challenge exercised (2523).

Compare with analysis under talesman Hamilton (pp. 66-69 of this brief).

B

1—ALBERT ROSENTHAL (719-727)

He was a fraternal brother of Mr. Wegman, one of the counsel for defendant Buchalter, and at the suggestion of Mr. Wegman and the prosecutor, approached the trial judge to be excused on that ground, but the Court reserved decision until he was actually in the box (719). The last time he saw Mr. Wegman was quite a long time ago (719). The Court thereupon ruled that he would have to be questioned (720).

He stated he had a high regard for Mr. Wegman and had watched his progress in the profession, and thought it was proper to apprise the District Attorney of the fact that he knew him (720). Although he would rather not serve, he does not know whether it would be embarrassing or not, but he does not think he would pay any greater respect to the argument emanating from Wegman than from any other lawyer in the case, but merely thought it was proper to ask to be excused when he knew one of the defense counsel (722).

Questioned by the Court as to whether he would like to avoid jury service, he said he knew his obligation and even though he would like to avoid it, he would not do it at the expense of doing what he is not supposed to do (722).

Questioned further by the prosecutor, he said if it came to a close question he certainly would not intentionally be inclined to favor Mr. Wegman; in fact he might bend over backwards (724-5). Whereupon, the following took place:

"By the Court:

Q. What is your business? A. Manufacturer.

Q. You presented an application to be excused from jury duty? A. I did not.

Q. What is your concern? A. The Simplex Button Works, Inc.

Q. You are engaged in war work? A. Not extensively; we do a little.

Q. You have no contract to make buttons for soldiers' clothing? A. No, sir, that is a different type of a button.

Q. You mean an electrical button? A. No, sir.

Q. What are they? A. Buttons for ladies' garments, among other things.

Q. What is your position there? A. Up to about October of last year, I was supervisor of production.

Q. What is your position there? A. I do everything, check credit——

The Court: The Court will ask no further questions because the hostility on your part to questions of the Court is obvious.

The Witness: May I correct that impression, if I seem to have given it.

The Court: The whole courtroom is being upset by your attitude and the attitude of counsel. If one counsel challenges for cause, I will excuse for cause.

Mr. Turkus: Challenge on the ground of implied bias.

The Court: I will excuse him. The Court is being upset by the attitude of counsel and of the talesmen. He may leave. I want no repetition of this. There will be no beating around the bush or substitute for excuses by consent.

Mr. Talley: We don't hear you. We would like to hear you.

The Court: Proceed." (726-7)

In comparison to the ruling above, this Court should note the ruling made in respect to talesman Groden (pp. 80-83 of this brief), who was challenged for cause by the defense because of his close association with District Attorney O'Dwyer who, he was positive, would not bring about an indictment unless he felt sure; who further had read articles about the defendant in the "Mirror," was biased and prejudiced, and had formed an impression unfavorable to the defendants, which he did not think anything would remove from his mind. Nevertheless, the Court overruled the challenge.

Further, compare the ruling of the Court in the case of the instant talesman with the Court's ruling in the ten instances cited in subdivision "A" of this point.

2—BENJAMIN PROTTER (825-88; 965 976)

He has been in the real estate business in France and also is a writer (825), and has a brother, Mannie Protter, who is an attorney (825). He resides with his mother at 772 Linden Boulevard, Brooklyn, which is his address, but he is staying at the Maryland Hotel for two reasons —one was that when he came back, his mother had not returned from the country, and the second reason was that after he had been called for jury duty, he thought it best to remain away until the question of his services was decided, but he had voted from Linden Boulevard at the Primary Elections, two weeks before (826-7). His lawyer-brother lived at a separate address, which he did not know exactly, nor did he know his brother's clientele or contacts, nor had he ever discussed the business of the Brooklyn Waterfront with his brother (830). He neither knew any of the lawyers, or anyone connected with the District Attorney's office or any of the various persons or organizations mentioned by the district attorney (831-4). His state of mind was such that he could render a fair verdict and nothing interfered with his ability to be a fair and impartial juryman (842-3). He was then asked by the prosecutor as to whether he had ever heard the name of "Peter Panto" and he replied in the negative (843). He would have no prejudice against the prosecution (846).

Questioned by defense counsel, he stated that he did not even know whether his brother ever had a criminal case, and has not heard a thing or read anything about this case or the defendants (851; 853-4).

After the questioning had finished, the prosecutor stated there was a point of law that he must check up in the Judiciary Law on the question of jurisdiction (884-5), and then stated, "I am going to exercise a peremptory challenge. Your Honor has overruled my challenge on residence." The Court, however, assured the prosecutor that he did not understand that he had made a challenge and asked whether he meant the challenge on the question of residence, and stated that he wanted to look up the law and would submit anything he found on the following morning, after he had an opportunity to check it (886-8). The juryman then tentatively took his seat in the box. On the following day, the Court excused the talesman, and made a detailed statement as to the alleged activities of the talesman's brother in regard to an investigation of a murder of one, Peter Panto (965-6-7), and an exception was taken (967). Thereupon, the prosecutor made a statement for the record in respect to this murder (970-71), and a motion was made, because of the statements of both the Court and the prosecutor, on behalf of the defendant Capone for a mistrial (971-2). The talesman was then again sworn and stated that the answers which he had given on the prior day were true, and reiterated that he did not know whether his brother represented the Brooklyn Waterfront interests, and they had only been distantly friendly, had political differences, and there was not the usual cordiality between them as exists between brothers (973-4-5). He finally stated that he was absolutely free from any prejudice or bias of any kind, had spoken to no one in respect to the case, and would render a fair and impartial verdict based upon the evidence, free of any prejudice, bias or discussion with any member of his family or anyone except the jurymen who were sworn with him (975-6). The Court thereupon stated:

> "So far as the residence is concerned, that challenge is overruled. So far as the other one is concerned, the Court believes that the sitting of this talesman on the jury will create a problem of implied bias which will remain throughout the trial and may affect the result." (976)

He thereupon sustained the challenge, and an exception was taken on behalf of the defendants (976).

Here again is another glaring example of the Court's failure to afford the defendants a fair trial. Protter said that he had no prejudice against defendants or against the prosecution. It was developed by the Assistant District Attorney, however, that Protter had a brother who was a lawyer. Protter had not lived in close association with the members of his family. On the contrary, for many years he had been a resident of Paris and had returned only before the beginning of the present war in 1939. When he resumed his residence in this country, he did not live with his brother. Yet, the Judge took the occasion of this relationship as an excuse for saying in the courtroom that there was a possibility that Protter might have been influenced by the circumstance that his brother, as representative of a Labor Union, had been interested in the murder of Panto. Up to that point, even the most inflammatory tabloid writers had not suggested any connection between defendants and that homicide. The Judge said that he had gleaned the idea from the "Brooklyn Eagle." Finally, he sustained a challenge for implied bias against Protter tendered by the District Attorney (965-976). From the Judge's language, one would derive the notion that the District Attorney was really afraid that Protter would be prejudiced against the defendants. Therefore, the Judge had brought the Panto case into this trial. The defendants were confident that Protter was not biased against the defense. Protter was sure that he was not interested in the Panto case. Nobody in the courtroom was concerned about the Panto murder, but the learned Judge nevertheless found a reason for suggesting in the courtroom, before a second juror had been tentatively selected, that defendants could be linked with the murder of Panto! So the Judge, who was afraid that newspaper reading would hamper the selection of a fair jury, thus created more newspaper hostility, did it without sound reason, and having done it, said and ruled that Protter—who was acceptable to the defendants—could not sit because of "a problem of implied bias." The net result of the Judge's activities was that the prosecution was spared the exercise of a peremptory challenge!

3—WALTER C. PETTERSON (1531-1554)

He was employed by the New York Telephone Company (1547), and there was nothing about the nature of the charge that would prevent him from acting fairly as a juror (1548). He was then asked the following question by the District Attorney:

> "Q. Sir, have you any fault to find or any bias or prejudice against the prosecution for taking one of the perpetrators of the crime and using him as a witness against the others? A. I have nothing against the prosecution, but it would be hard for me to believe the testimony of a confessed accomplice." (1548)

The question was then repeated and an objection taken thereto. The court then asked the talesman whether the prejudice against the testimony of the accomplice is so strong that he would rule it out even though it were corroborated? The talesman replied, "Yes, sir, it would be hard for me to believe that sort of testimony." A challenge was made by the People (1549).

Questioned by the defense on the challenge, he stated he had served on criminal and civil juries and would, to the best of his ability, follow the charge as given by the Judge irrespective of what his own opinion was; and if the Judge were to charge him that an accomplice's testimony should be viewed with suspicion and caution, he would do so. If he were further told that there must be other evidence besides the testimony of an accomplice, which would tend to connect the defendant with the crime, he would have no difficulty in following that instruction and, to the best of his ability, he would follow the law in respect to accomplices and the necessity of their testimony being corroborated (1550-2). After counsel for the defense had concluded, the Court asked > "whether or not the prejudice that you have stated is such that you would not give the prosecution a fair, intelligent attitude as to whether or not an accomplice is telling the truth?"

The answer was:

> "It is in my mind."
>
> "Q. Speak out loudly, so counsel can hear you. A. It is in my mind. It would be hard for me to believe that type of testimony." (1554)

The Court thereupon sustained the challenge, to which the defendants excepted. (1154)

The answers of this talesman when first qestioned were correct as a matter of law (1548). (See People v. Kress, 284 N. Y. 452, 459.)

Comparison should be made with the ten overruled defense challenges contained in subdivision "A" of this point.

4—SAMUEL SILFEN (1557-65)

He is a department store manager for the United Cigar and Whelan Drug Stores, and has no connection with anyone in the clothing district or Brownsville—East New York area (1558-9). The name of Buchalter is familiar as that of a dentist whom he does not know personally, but his mother-in-law used him as such (1559). This dentist never visited the home of his mother-in-law, and the relationship was solely that of dentist and patient (1559-60). He has a slight impression which goes to the guilt or innocence, from matters which he read in the "press" or heard about, which would require evidence on the part of the defendants to remove (1560-1). He was thereupon challenged by the prosecutor (1561).

Questioned by defense counsel—he had heard the Court speak of presumption of innocence and every juryman must accept the law from the Court, with which he agrees, and if the Court charges that the defendants in this case are presumed to be innocent under the law, he would accord that presumption to them (1562). If the Court were to charge that no unfavorable inference could be drawn from the failure on the part of defendants to take the stand and they need offer no proof of their innocence, he would accept that law from the Court (1562-3). He is willing to undertake to lay aside the slight impression he has and accept the law from the court, and will make every effort to dismiss from his mind this slight impression (1564).

The challenge was thereupon sustained (1565).

Comparison should be made with the ruling in respect to talesman Groden. (See pp. 80-83 of this brief.)

5—BENJAMIN COHN (2223-2233)

He is an architect (2223), and some time ago, had contact with builders who have their place of business or were engaged in construction work in Brownsville, East New York section (2224). He heard the name of Martin "Buggsy" Goldstein, but not the name of Strauss or Anastasia, but has also heard the name of Gesule Capone, but it is nothing more than a name to him (2225). Thereupon the prosecution stated:

"I think there is a question of bias." (2226)

He did not recognize the name of any of the nine lawyers for the defense, although he had heard the name of one of them, Mr. Barshay; he never heard any discussions about the Rosen case, but he does not like to see anybody punished, and is not in favor of capital punishment (2228-9). (He was not properly asked as to whether he had any conscientious scruples against same.) Questioned by Mr. Turkus:

> "Q. I think you said to the Judge that you are not particularly in favor of punishment? A. Yes.
> Q. Would that enter into your mind when you are deliberating a case, your feeling that you are not particularly in favor of punishment?" (2229)

This was objected to as not being a proper question or correct statement of law, and it was overruled, and an exception taken, and the answer was:

> "It may prejudice me.
> Q. Yes. So that, as it has been brought out by one of the lawyers for Buchalter that he has been convicted of past crimes and he is serving a long jail sentence, would not that feeling that you have cause you to relax your duty in this case? A. It would." (2229)

He was thereupon challenged by the People (2230), and in answer to questions propounded by defense counsel, stated as follows:

> "Q. If the judge shall tell you, if you are taken as a juror, that the question of punishment is not for you, you must not consider it, it is fixed by law, you have nothing to do with it, will you follow that instruction of law? A. Yes, I will." 2230-1)

Thereupon, Mr. Turkus re-questioned the talesman and asked him whether he had not said that in view of the convictions for past crimes of Buchalter, he would relax his duty as a juror, to which an objection was made on the ground that it had nothing to do with the challenge. This objection was overruled, and an exception taken (2230-1).

> "Q. Was your answer yes? A. I did not hear you." (2231)

Over objection and exception, he admitted having stated that because of the previous crimes for which Buchalter was sentenced, he would be inclined to relax his duties (2231-2). The following then occurred:

> "Q. If that is your state of mind, Mr. Cohn, that you are against punishment and you would relax your duty, how can you lay that state of mind aside? A. I am against capital punishment.
> Q. You are against capital punishment? A. Yes.
> Q. And you have a conscientious scruple? A. Yes." (2232)

Whereupon, the challenge was again pressed.

Questioned by defense counsel, the talesman admitted signing a qualifying affidavit as a special juror (2232-3). He was then asked:

> "Q. Do you remember that? A. I am not in favor of capital punishment. Of course, if the Judge rules, I would follow out his Honor's, whatever he wanted.
> The Court: You understand a murder trial is not a debating society.
> (The talesman speaks to the court.)
> Mr. Barshay: No further questions.
> The Court: Sustained." (2233)

Compare with the ruling in respect to talesman Koehler. (See pp. 88-89 of this brief.)

6—HARRY ROSENBLATT (2367-73)

He is a special representative for the Standard Brands Food Products (2367), and prior to that was selling for a manufacturer in the dress line, out of town, and did not know much about what was going on in the City (2368). However, the names of Lepke and Gurrah are both familiar to him, and he has an impression which does not go as far as an opinion (2368). He casually met the defendant Buchalter about eight years ago (2368-9). Asked by the Court, he stated he was not prejudiced (2369).

The circumstances under which he met Buchalter was while he was with certain friends of his one of the persons introduced him at a night club, but Buchalter did not make much impression (2370-1).

Questioned by the Court, he said he did not drink with him, he was not a member of the same party, he was merely introduced and that was all; and it was about eight years ago and there was nothing more than a single introduction (2371). Whereupon, the Court stated:

> "Is there a challenge here?
> Mr. Turkus: Implied bias.
> The Court: Try it." (2371)

The talesman was sworn and stated that the introduction was at a time when he was dealing with merchants who dealt in flour, but it was not one of those merchants who introduced him (2371).

> "Q. Didn't you tell me you have an impression about the name of Lepke? A. No.
> Q. You associate the name of Lepke with Buchalter? A. Yes.

Q. You are familiar with the name Gurrah? A. Yes.

Q. You earn your livelihood by dealing with people who buy flour? A. I do.

Q. That is one of your commodities? A. I do.

Mr. Turkus: Challenge for implied bias.

The Court: Any questions.

Mr. Rosenthal: No questions." (2372)

The challenge was thereupon sustained, and exceptions were taken thereto (2373).

It should be noted that this challenge for implied bias was sustained because the juryman earned a livelihood by dealing with people who buy flour, and although he had no impression of any character detrimental to the defense, and he was not biased against the People, the challenge was sustained. As a standard of comparison, see analysis under talesman Groden (pp. 80-83 of this brief).

THE LAW

Under subdivision "A" of this point we have fully discussed and analyzed the overruling of the challenges for cause made by the defendants, necessitating the exercise of ten peremptory challenges. It is contended that in each one of these cases the defendants established, upon cross examination, that actual bias existed in the minds of these talesmen because of reading articles, the presence of impressions formed as to the guilt or innocence of the defendants, knowledge and adverse opinions as to the deceased defendant Strauss herein, and various other prejudicial causes therein expressed by the individual talesmen.

The Code of Criminal Procedure of the State of New York defines actual bias as the existence of such a state of mind on the part of the juror, in reference to the case, or to either party, as satisfies the Court that the juror cannot try the case impartially and without prejudice to the substantial rights of the party challenging (Sec. 376).

In the case of People v. McQuade, 110 N. Y. 284, the Court said at page 301:

> "* * * Now, as formerly, an existing opinion by a person called as a juror, of the guilt or innocence of a defendant charged with crime, is prima facie a disqualification, but it is not now as before a conclusive objection, provided the juror makes the declaration specified, and the court, as judge of the fact, is satisfied that such opinion will not influence his action. But the declaration must be unequivocal. It does not satisfy the requirement of the statute if the declaration is qualified or conditional. It is not enough to be able to point to detached language which, alone considered, would seem to meet the statute requirement, if, on construing the whole declaration together, it is apparent that the juror is not able to express an absolute belief that his opinion will not influence his verdict. * * * Fairly construed, their declaration of their belief that they could render an impartial verdict was qualified by a doubt and was not sure and absolute."

In most of the aforementioned overruled challenges, the talesmen had definitely expressed an opinion and had further expressed a doubt as to their ability to overcome such prejudicial opinion without a different quality of evidence than in the ordinary case. In an attempt to overcome this testimony of the talesmen given on cross examination by defense counsel, either the court or the prosecutor sought from the talesmen a categorical answer to the effect that they could disregard this prejudice.

In the case of State v. McCoy, 33 So. 730 (Supreme Court, Louisiana), the defense challenged a juror named Meaux for cause, on account of imperfect acquaintance with the English language and on the further ground that he had formed an opinion on the merits of the case which would require strong evidence to overcome. The Court denied the challenge. Defense challenged him peremptorily. Before the jury was completed, the defense exhausted its peremptory challenges.

Examination of the juror disclosed:

1. That he had heard of the crime;
2. That he had formed an opinion which could be changed by witnesses;
3. That he could try the case strictly on the evidence from the witnesses;

On Cross-examination:

4. That he had formed an opinion which would require strong evidence to overcome;
5. In determining the case, his mind would be influenced by his present opinion;

By the Court:

6. His opinion is not a fixed opinion;
7. It would give way to testimony;
8. He feels he could disregard the opinion and decide the case strictly on the evidence.

The Court said:

"Taking the whole of the examination of this witness together, the most that can be made of it is that he had formed and expressed an opinion that it would have required strong evidence to overcome; that his mind was not in a condition to be influenced solely by the evidence to have been submitted on the trial, and that it would have been influenced to a great extent by the opinion formed already; but that, nevertheless, he could have gone into the jury box and, as we take it, if the evidence proved strong enough to overcome it, have disregarded that opinion and have decided the case upon such evidence. We do not consider that he would have made a good juror, and are of the opinion that the challenge for cause should have been sustained. People v. Casey, 96 N. Y. 115;

Rizzolo v. Com. 126 Pa. 54, 17 Atl. 520. The fact that, having been challenged peremptorily, he did not sit on the jury, does not cure the difficulty, inasmuch as it appears that all of the defendant's peremptory challenges had been exhausted before the jury was obtained. State v. Fouchy, 51 La. Ann. 229, 25 South., 109."

It was said in People v. Casey, 96 N. Y. 115, at pp. 122-3, by Earl, J.:

"• • • When persons called to sit as jurors are otherwise incompetent from actual bias, they must be required to make the declarations specified in the section of the Code quoted. They need not make those declarations literally, but they must make them in substance; that is an absolute prerequisite; and then if there is nothing in their further examination materially impeaching such declarations, the court may receive them as jurors, if satisfied that their opinions and impressions will not influence their verdict."

In Grand Lodge A. O. U. W. v. Taylor, 99 Pac. 570 (Supreme Court, Colorado), the juror Dietz was challenged for cause. The trial court denied the challenge. The Juror was peremptorily challenged. The Court said:

"We think the court should have excused this juror from the panel, as his examination, taken in its entirety, shows bias for plaintiff, and that, as to him, defendant would be required to prove its affirmative defense by a greater preponderance of the evidence than the law requires. The defendant is in a position to urge this point because it had exhausted all its peremptory challenges before the panel was filled, and one of the jurors peremptorily challenged was Dietz."

It will be further noted that in the questioning of these talesmen by the District Attorney and Court, in most instances the Court either attempted to exact a promise from the talesman to the effect that he would lay aside his prejudice, or the prosecutor attempted to exact a promise that the talesman would follow the law as given to him by the Court.

In People v. Wilmarth, 156 N. Y. 566, it was held that such questioning was insufficient to qualify the talesman. At page 568, Parker, Ch. J., said:

> "We will now turn to the record for the purpose of ascertaining whether Hollenbeck made such a declaration as the statute calls for; for if he did, the determination of the trial court, that he was a properly qualified juror, has evidence to support it, and it may not be reviewed in this court. But if he did not, then the court erred as a matter of law in overruling the challenge interposed by the defendant.
>
> A question was asked by the district attorney which presents the appearance of having been intended as a compliance with the statute. It reads: 'Q. In spite of any prejudice or any opinion you might have, you would go into the box and decide the case upon the evidence that was given here under the law as laid down by the court, would you not? A. I would.'
>
> It will be observed that the question did not call for the belief of the juror, nor did it direct his mind to the inquiry which the statute demands, whether, in his opinion, he believed that such an opinion or impression would not influence his verdict. The statute calls for the belief of the witness upon two subjects: First, whether the opinion or impression which the juror has will influence his verdict; and, second, whether he can render an impartial verdict according to the evidence. The question put omitted entirely to inquire of him whether he believed that the opinion or impression he had would not influence his verdict. The statute not only requires such inquiry, but it is a most important feature of its provisions. It directs the attention of the witness to the fact that he is expected to make a careful analysis of his opinions or impressions, and then to declare on oath his belief as to whether they will influence his verdict. This was entirely omitted, as we have seen; the question did not even attempt to cover anything except the succeeding provision of the section, which is that the juror believes he can render an impartial verdict according to the evidence. And as to that provision, the belief of the witness was not asked, nor was an equivalent expression employed, as in People v. Martell (138 N. Y. 595). Instead, the witness was asked whether he 'would decide the case upon the evidence?' The question suggested to him his duty, and, as an upright man, he readily promised to do it. But such a promise is not in compliance with either the letter or the spirit of the statute, which seeks, First, to direct the mind of the juror to a careful introspection, to the end that he may be able advisedly to declare on oath his belief whether the opinions or impressions which he has will influence his verdict; and, second, whether he can render an impartial verdict according to the evidence. This statute is the outcome of many years of experience of lawyers and judges in the trial of criminal causes, and it should not be frittered away by a recognition on the part of the courts of loose or ill-considered substitutes as equivalents."

Under Sections 383 and 384 of the Code of Criminal Procedure of the State of New York the right is given to either side to examine the talesmen under the rules of evidence applicable to the trial of other issues, governing the admission or exclusion of testimony. The error committed by the court was aggravated by the refusal to permit defense counsel to indulge in recross-examination of the talesman after perfunctory questions had been asked by either the court or district attorney, which seemingly dispelled the prejudice expressed by the juror in his cross-examination by defense counsel. (We cite: Flannagan, 1960-3; Jacobus, 2522; Dunphy, 2505-8; 2522). Although these three talesmen had definitely expressed prejudice to defense counsel prior to being challenged for cause, which as aforstated was presumably dispelled by the pro forma questions asked of them by the court or the prosecutor, defense counsel had no opportunity to question further. It needs no citation of law to convince this Court that the elementary rules of evidence permit recross-examination of any witness on seeming contradictions established on redirect examination. But notwithstanding this refusal to permit defense to recross-examine, an entirely different standard was established in those cases where the prosecutor had challenged for cause and defense counsel had dispelled same. In such case, the prosecutor was permitted to re-examine.

In the cases aforecited the courts have universally held that where a talesman had formed an opinion which would require strong evidence to overcome, it would be grounds for his disqualification. However, the Court erroneously ruled on several occasions during the course of the examination of talesmen that counsel had no right to ask of the talesman questions similar to the following:

> "Do you feel, sir, that because of your condition or state of mind that the quality of evidence that would be necessary for the District Attorney to produce in this case would be less than would be ordinarily true were you sitting in a case where you did not have any impression against the defendants?" (1960)

Moreover, the Court's remarks in the presence of the jury relative to the alleged abuse of the exercise of peremptory challenges (Cleary, 1295-6; also, Kendy, 426) further aggravated the conditions and deprived the defendants of procuring a fair and impartial jury. How unjust this accusation of the Court was can readily be ascertained by a perusal of the testimony of talesman Gillespie (1742-1861) who stated that he had found a body in the rear of his building, which he attributed to "Murder, Inc.," had found the dead body of Mrs. "Legs" Diamond in one of his buildings, and who further stated that Mr. Moorehead, the Chief of the Indictment Bureau in the District Attorney's Office, was an acquaintance of his, but against whom the defense did not even present a challenge for cause, but excused peremptorily.

In People v. McQuade, supra, at p. 294, it was said:

> "• • • Both the prosecution and the accused may reject, on peremptory challenge, a qualified juror without assigning cause. The right of peremptory challenge was originally given to the accused that he might exclude from the jury a juror against whom he entertained a prejudice, although not founded upon any reason which would disqualify him. So, also, where he has a preference in favor of a juror legally selected and qualified to sit, who is not peremptorily challenged by the prosecution in the first instance, the observance of the statute secures to the accused his presence on the jury."

At page 293:

> "• • • The right of peremptory challenge given to an accused person is a substantial right. BLACKSTONE says: 'It is full of tenderness and humanity to prisoners, for which the English laws are justly famous.'"

The standard set up by the Court in overruling the challenges of the defendant was entirely different from the standard utilized in sustaining the six challenges urged by the People and contained in subdivision "B" of this point.

The talesman Rosenthal was merely an acquaintance of one of the counsel, which under the law is not a valid cause for challenge (See People v. McQuade, supra), but the challenge was sustained.

The talesman Protter stated he had absolutely no bias whatsoever, but the Court interjected that his brother, who was a lawyer, had represented some waterfront interests, and the challenge for cause was sustained.

The talesman Petterson merely stated that he would exercise caution before accepting the testimony of an accomplice, and the challenge for cause was sustained.

The talesman Samuel Silfen—his mother-in-law had used a dentist named Buchalter, whom he did not know personally, but the challenge was sustained for cause.

The talesman Benjamin Cohn had heard the name of Martin "Buggsy" Goldstein and the name of Gesule Capone (not the defendant), which was nothing more than a name to him, and although against capital punishment, would accept the law, but the challenge was sustained.

Lastly, the talesman Harry Rosenblatt had been casually introduced to the defendant Buchalter eight years before, but it had left no impression. His challenge was sustained.

In no one of the six cases aforementioned was there any legal case of implied bias or actual bias established by the prosecution which would warrant the Court in sustaining the challenge. However, the erroneous rulings of the Court saved the prosecution six peremptory challenges. The sustaining of these challenges were erroneous as a matter of law.

We have dealt with the question of the challenges exercised by the defense prior to their exhausting the thirty peremptory challenges alloted to them. Prior to dealing with subdivision "C" in relation to the talesmen Rorke, Links and Coleman, we would like to call attention to certain circumstances concerning two of the jurymen who had been seated in the jury box as jurors "8" and "10" respectively.

Juror No. 8, Philip Strober, upon his examination, had made known his acquaintanceship with Irving Feinstein and Feinstein's deceased brother, "Puggy" Feinstein. (See People v. Goldstein & Strauss, 285 N. Y. 376). He was tentatively permitted to remain in the jury box. At that time, the defendants had exhausted but nineteen of their peremptory challenges. Although the Court had been requested on several occasions to remove this juryman, it was not until the defendant had exhausted twenty-nine peremptory challenges (2578) that the Court excused this juryman from the box.

John D. Butt had been seated in the jury box as Juryman No. 10, and upon the removal of Strober, became juryman No. 9. He was the Vice-president of the Seaman's Bank for Savings, and throughout his questioning had stated that he had never read about the case and had formed no opinion or impression nor had he ever heard the names of the defendants discussed (2246-54; 2258-60; 2261-3). He remained in the jury box for a number of days and until the jury box was completed, at which time it was suggested by counsel for the defendant Capone that the Court inquire whether anything had happened that would change any of the answers previously given by any member of the jury. Whereupon, this juryman raised his hand, and a discussion ensued at the bench, at which time he stated: "There has just been a great conviction on my part towards prejudice in this case," although he had spoken to no one since his entry into the jury box. The Court thereupon stated that the challenge could not be tried and it had to be done quietly, without the presence of the jury, and asked counsel whether they all consented, which was agreed to; defendants' counsel reserving the exceptions which had theretofore been taken (2690; 2691).

C

1—JOHN J. RORKE (2586-9; 2603-27)

He is a nephew of Inspector Rorke, who has been on the police force for thirty odd years, assigned to Brooklyn traffic (2588; 2603). He had been a prospective juror on a blue ribbon panel in which Mr. Turkus had been the prosecutor (2605). At that time, he did not hear the name "Buggsy" Goldstein, but, of course, he heard the name "Maione" when he was previously questioned. The other names, however, do not mean anything to him (2605-6).

Questioned by defense counsel, he stated he had been excused as a juryman in the Maione case* (2607).

> "Q. Well, about how many names would you say that were mentioned then, that you recollect as being mentioned here today or yesterday or the day before? A. One of the defendants.
>
> Q. Maione and one of the defendants at the present time? A. Maione.
>
> Q. Was mentioned then too? A. That is correct.
>
> • • • •

---

* The Maione case was a murder trial in which counsel for this petitioner appeared for the defendant Maione.

Q. And thereafter did you follow the case with interest in the press? Did you read about it? A. Only to the effect of the decision that was arrived at.

Q. I do not know whether you remember all the counsel in that case? A. I do remember two of them.

Q. I was not one? A. Just Mr. Rosenthal was there of the present group and Mr. Turkus." (2606-7)

At this point counsel requested the Court's permission to approach the bench, and a conference was held as to this juryman's qualifications, in view of his having been called in the Maione case and excused by defense counsel. For some reason, this conference has been omitted from the record. After the conference, however, the court asked the talesman a number of questions as to whether he had formed any opinion concerning any of the defendants and whether he had any impression because of the prior case that he had been called as a juryman, and he answered in the negative. A challenge was thereupon made on the ground of implied bias (2609). He was examined upon the challenge and stated that he had been called as a juryman about five or six months ago, in a murder case in which Mr. Turkus was the prosecutor and Mr. Rosenthal was one of the counsel for the defense, and he was challenged as a juror by Mr. Rosenthal (2610-11).

"By the Court:

Q. Do you attribute your excuse to either of the counsel in the case? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you charge it against one particularly? A. Yes. I would charge it against one who was questioning.

Q. Do you carry a grudge? A. No." (2611)

He admitted that certain names were mentioned in that case, and at least one of those names he heard since he was called in this case. Questioned further as to whether he followed the developments of that trial with any interest, after he was excused, he answered, "I just made it a point to——" (2613).

The challenge was thereupon overruled, and an exception taken. (2617).

2—WILLIAM P. LINKS (2660-89)

He as a radio producer and was on one of the panels of one of the murder cases that Mr. Turkus prosecuted and in which Mr. Rosenthal was one of the attorneys. At the time, he had stated that he was the radio announcer on a program known as "Mr. District Attorney", and had been called into consultation with reference to the script thereon (2660). He has trained various actors and actresses in technique (2661). When called as a juror in the previous case, he heard some of the names mentioned in the case, among which were Maione, Abbandando, Strauss, but does not recall whether he heard the names of any of the defendants in this case (2661-2).

> "Q. Did you follow the case thereafter with any degree of curiosity? A. Not to any great extent except I wanted to find out what became of the case on the last day of the trial." (2662)

He was not excused on a cause challenge on the last trial, and was not prejudiced one way or the other, because of his having been excused peremptorialy (2665). He read headlines about this case but it did not leave any extraordinary impression (2669). He had been excused by the People in the other case (2682). Mr. Turkus thereupon questioned him:

"Q. At that time I believe you were identified with a program of some sort? A. Yes.

Q. Do you understand that that may have been a question of propriety at that time? A. Yes, sir.

Q. In other words, there is no resentment because The People excused you? A. No, sir." (2689)

Mr. Turkus thereupon stated the talesman was satisfactory, and, the peremptory challenges having been exhausted, the defense rested on the record. A similar discussion with the Court in respect to this talesman was had, as hereafter set forth.

3—JOHN E. COLEMAN (2691-2707)

He was a business representative of the Brooklyn Edison Company (2691), and questioned by one of the defense counsel, said he had read quite extensively about this case in the "World-Telegram" and the "News." He stated, however, that he would be impartial although it was inconvenient for him to serve because of conditions at home (2697).

The People announced that he was satisfactory, and the defendants, having exhausted their thirty challenges, rested on the record (2707).

The three jurymen, Rorke, Links and Coleman, who actually served on this case as jurors numbered "10," "11" and "12," mentioned in Subdivision "C" of this point, were all questioned subsequent to the exhaustion of the thirty peremptory challenges accorded to the defendants.

As to the juryman Rorke, his examination is fully set forth under subdivision "C" (pp. 115-117), but the record is barren as to the discussion with the Court relative to the challenge made by the defendants for cause. This challenge was made before the Court, without the hearing of the jury, because of the situation with which the defense counsel were confronted. This juryman had been summoned as a talesman in the Maione-Abbandando case and had been peremptorily challenged by the present defense counsel for Capone. He had heard the name of Capone, and had followed the verdict in that case. He was the nephew of a prominent Police Inspector which presented a question of implied bias far more critical than anything displayed in the examination of Protter, supra, against whom the People's challenge for cause was sustained. Nevertheless, the Court, overruled the challenge and an exception was taken.

As to juryman No. 11, William P. Links, the typewritten record is also incomplete. Like Rorke, he had been called to serve on the jury in the Maione case, but had been excused by the District Attorney who stated in that case that because of the connection of said Links with the radio program known as "Mr. District Attorney," he, the prosecutor, did not consider he would be a fair juror to the defendant. A similar discussion was had as to a challenge against Links, without the hearing of the jury, but the Court did not entertain same, and the very same prosecutor who, in the Maione case, considered this man to be prejudiced against the defendant, announced he was satisfactory to the People. Whereupon, the defense excepted and rested on the record. (This exception does not appear in the typewritten record.)

As to the 12th juryman, John E. Coleman, upon questioning, he said he had read quite extensively about this case, but protested, however, that he would be impartial. Having no further peremptory challenges, defense counsel rested upon the record.

The law laid down in the cases heretofore cited definitely establish the fact that the defendants were deprived of a fair and impartial jury for the following reasons:

1. Ten defense challenges for cause were erroneously overruled, necessitating ten peremptory challenges;
2. Six challenges for cause made by the People were improperly sustained, depriving the defendants of the presence of those individuals upon the jury, or saving to the prosecution the exercise of six peremptory challenges; and
3. After the defendants had exhausted their thirty peremptory challenges, two biased jurors were improperly permitted to remain and deliberate on the guilt or innocence of the defendants.

The pragmatic proof that the defendants were deprived of a trial before a fair and impartial jury is found unequivocally in the fact that the defendants found themselves unable to exercise peremptory challenges against Rorke and Link. (People v. Casey, 96 N. Y. 115, 123).

It may be contended by the learned district attorney that the allowances or disallowances of the challenges by the trial court are not subject to review by reason of the provisions of Section 749-aa of the Judiciary Law of the State of New York. Subdivision 7 of that statute, so far as pertinent here, provides.

> "Challenges; trial. The parties to such an action shall have the same number of peremptory challenges and the same challenges for cause to be tried in the same manner as upon a trial with an ordinary jury. The rulings of the trial court, however, in admitting or excluding evidence upon the trial of any challenge for actual bias shall not be the subject of exception. Such rulings and the allowance or disallowance of the challenge shall be final."

It surely cannot seriously be contended that this statute would preclude this court from reviewing the rulings of the trial court as to challenges where they lead to a conviction without due process of law in contravention of the Fourteenth Amendment of the Constitution. The district attorney surely cannot contend that even if such rulings lead to the impanelling of so prejudiced and biased a jury (who, incidentally, had already formed an opinion as to the guilt of the person on trial), as to result in a trial which was one only in form, that such action could not be reviewed. Such contention would be specious. If there were any merit to such contention, a prejudiced court could deny a defendant a trial and only grant the pretense of one. This court undoubtedly has jurisdiction, regardless of any statute providing for the finality of a ruling by a state court, to review such ruling where it is claimed that it abridged or denied a constitutional right. Therefore, such portion of the Judiciary Law of the State of New York as provides for the finality of the allowance or disallowance of challenges is in contravention of the Constitution and should be declared unconstitutional.

III.

Under the facts in this case, and the prejudice created against the defendants because of the adverse newspaper publicity, coupled with the atmosphere in the courtroom, and the condition of the prospective juror's mind, the Court's constant refusal to grant a severance to defendant Capone utterly deprived him of a fair and impartial trial, and granted him but a mere pretense of one. If the facts in this case do not warrant a severance, we doubt whether any case within the annals of criminal law will warrant one.

It cannot be gainsaid that the numerous errors committed upon the trial, plus the abundance of prejudicial evidence admitted, but not in any wise applicable to defendant Capone, was of such a nature that the jury must have been unduly influenced to such a degree that it could not dismiss such prejudice from its mind and fairly determine the issue, thus depriving the petitioner of his constitutional rights to a fair and impartial trial, and affording him but a pretense of one.

Although we quote from the minority opinion in People v. Fisher, 249 N. Y. 419, at 432, we do so for the reason that the facts affecting Capone in this case peculiarly fit the wording of Chief Judge Lehman. We quote:

> "Certainly jurors are not accustomed to weigh evidence in that manner, and I confess that neither legal training nor long judicial experience has given me the ability to do so. The jury might perhaps separate the issues raised by each defense and consider only the competent and relevant evidence bearing on those defenses, but it seems clear to me that in weighing the credibility of the testimony against Fisher, they could not and did not ignore knowledge derived from other evidence which lent credibility to that testimony. In the final analysis the confession of Dreitzer and the admissions of Helfant led inevitably to the conviction of Fisher, and if the testimony relevant to Fisher's guilt had been weaker and his own testimony stronger, the result would have been the same."

Prior to the trial (June 5, 1941) a motion was made for a severance (R.pp. 31-54) which was denied without prejudice to renewal before the trial court (R.pp. 29-30).

This motion was orally renewed before the trial court on August 4, 1941.* (s.m. pp. 12-13), and a further affidavit, dated the same day, was submitted in support thereof (R.pp. 55-64). This motion was denied (s.m. p. 27) and an exception taken (s.m.p. 28). On September 15, 1941, before the trial court, after defendant "Farvel" Cohen had moved for a severance, to which the District Attorney consented, (s.m.p. 59), the application of Capone was again renewed on additional papers (Mirror articles s.m. p. 59) but was denied (s.m.p. 60).

Subsequently, and throughout the trial, motions were constantly renewed for a mistrial and severance. (See testimony of Tannenbaum, R.p. 2240; Rubin, R.p. 2377; Aman, R.p. 2683; Bell, R.p. 2698; Ryan, R.p. 2703; Winne, R.p. 2706; end of People's case, R.p. 2715; end of entire case, R.p. 3541 and on sentence R.p. 3996).

Thus, throughout the trial, the jury had a parade of witnesses, none of whom referred to Capone, but who constantly testified to matters which would have been excluded were Capone on trial alone. Days were devoted to talks of Union activities and alleged gangsterism commencing in 1923 (thirteen years before the killing of Rosen) coupled with the names of persons, living or dead, none of whom ever knew or saw Capone or had any connection with the issues involved. (See testimony of Berger (R.pp. 1781-95 et seq.), Rubin (R.pp. 1293-1320 et seq.), Mrs. Rosen (R.pp. 246-56), Harold Rosen (R.pp. 466-83), and Sylvia Greenspan (R.pp. 567-84). The flight of Rubin and alleged flights of Buchalter (charged as not connected with this case) and Weiss were prejudicial to Capone, although not admissible if he were on trial alone.

---

* This motion is also omitted from printed record. Reference to unprinted stenographer's minutes.

 Previously denied by trial court on August 4th (s.m.p. 27).

(See testimony of Rubin (R.pp. 1381-1420, 1685-1700 et seq.), Maguire (R.p. 1761), Berger (R.pp. 1814-25 et seq.), Aman (R.pp. 2607-86), Bell (R.pp. 2687-98), Ryan (R. pp. 2699-2703), Winne (R.pp. 2704-06), Malone (R.pp. 3493-3508), Whalen (R.pp. 3509-17), and Newman (R.pp. 3518-21); also, People's Exhibits Nos. 33 to 57 inclusive). At the opening of the trial, counsel for Buchalter admitted he was then serving a long term prison sentence. In summation, Buchalter's counsel admitted and condemned his past activities and the vicious circle domineering the Unions (R.pp. 3546-7), and after counsel for Capone had concluded summation, the District Attorney reminded the jury of the statement of Buchalter's counsel and further named Buchalter as "the Czar of the industrial rackets with a half a million dollar take (R.pp. 3783, 3801). Spoliation of evidence was charged as to the alleged shooting of Rubin (R.pp. 3882-3).

These are some of the major happenings which permeated the atmosphere during the trial, and taken together with the notoriety surrounding the co-defendants, fully discussed in the motions for a Change of Venue (R.pp. 110-175) (the denial of which is also urged as a Specification of Error, and is fully discussed in the petition and brief of the co-defendant Buchalter), plus the fact that practically all of the prospective jurymen examined, as well as the twelve men who finally constituted the jury, had heard about defendant Buchalter or Weiss or both, and you find a situation unparalleled in any case heretofore reported.

The error was substantial and deprived defendant of a fair trial at the hand of his peers. Moreover, the motion made before the trial for such relief was predicated on the ground that a denial thereof would deprive petitioner of a trial guaranteed to him by the Constitution of the United States (R. pp. 36-7; 42-3). Thus was a constitutional question presented and passed upon by the court below.

IV.

THE COURT'S UNWARRANTED INVASION OF THE PROVINCE OF THE JURY THROUGHOUT THE TRIAL, ITS CHARGE, AND DURING THE REQUESTS TO CHARGE. UNWARRANTED RESTRICTION OF CROSS-EXAMINATION BY DEFENSE COUNSEL AND CONDUCT THROUGHOUT THE TRIAL DEPRIVED THE DEFENDANT OF A FAIR AND IMPARTIAL TRIAL.

It was upon the veracity of the testimony of Bernstein and Magoon, and that alone, that the jury was compelled to determine the issue involved as to Capone. For that reason, counsel for Capone in his summation to the jury called their attention to the various major discrepancies and contradictions which permeated the testimony of both, including Bernstein's affirmance of the fact that where Cohen's life was at stake in the mountains he lied, "knowing that he did wrong" and Magoon's statement that since childhood he had indulged in "little white lies." Unquestionably, the trial court must have felt that the summation had made a definite effect upon the jury, for throughout the charge the Court indulged in what might be termed a second summation for the People in an attempt to destroy the effect thereof. The Court's invasion of the jury's province particularly affected Capone's right. It can easily be seen why the jury convicted, despite the paucity of evidence, when we analyze the charge and note the deft manner in which the court sought to and succeeded in destroying the effect of the summation. Nor did the Court permit the jury to hear the exceptions to the charge noted by defendants' counsel. In effect, the court's charge deprived the jury of exercising its free will in judging the effect of the contradictions contained in the testimony of the witnesses Bernstein and Magoon.

(A) The Court informed the jury that cross examination was a "hit or miss; it is blank cartridge shooting;" and that no two people can agree on its fairness (R.p. 3903). Exception taken thereto (R.p. 3981).

(B) The Court thereupon went on to explain to the jury that it was "an unholy thing" to expect witnesses to remember answers given on previous trials and characterized it as a "normal response" for a witness, when confronted with his previous testimony, to answer, "If it is in the book, it is so" (R.p. 3894-5). Exception taken (R.pp. 3985). This charge was particularly applicable to the defendant Capone since it applied to answers given by the witnesses Bernstein and Magoon, and was dwelt upon in summation by Capone's counsel (R.pp. 3726, 3728-9).

(C) The Court emphasized Magoon's answers in relation to the "little white lies" and warned the jury "not to let the decision of so important a case as this turn on a question of mockery or ridicule • • • of a specific witness for a stupid answer such as that." This portion of the charge was specifically directed at Capone's counsel, who discussed the question in his summation, and is particularly applicable to the defendant Capone as it involved the so-called corrroborating witness Magoon (R.pp. 3750-1; 3753).

(D) The Court instructed the jury to disregard matters in regard to the alleged recollection concerning testimony the witness had given before the grand jury as compared to that given at the trial (R.pp. 3899-3900). This portion of the charge was also directed at counsel for Capone, as reference to accomplice Bernstein's discrepancies between the grand jury minutes and the testimony on the trial was called to the jury's attention in the course of his summation (R.pp. 3733; 3744-5): This erroneous instruction is also particularly prejudicial to Capone since it involved the credibility of the admitted accomplice's testimony.

(E) The Court further charged the jury in connection with the discrepancy existing between the testimony of the People's witnesses Berger, Rubin and Bernstein regarding the alleged meeting between Bernstein and Capone in respect to the theft of the automobile in preparation for the crime. The invasion of the jury's province, by the trial court, to determine the credibility of the witnesses in respect to any alleged fact involves the rights of all defendants, but like in the other instances quoted, it particularly involves defendant Capone since the veracity of the testimony of the accomplice Bernstein was again questioned.

Coupled with the court's criticism of counsel in its charge to the jury (R.p. 3896), to which exception was taken (R.p. 3986), and the fact that it is elementary law that, when submitted to a jury, the credibility of all witnesses is exclusively within their province, the unwarranted invasion by the court of that inherent right deprived defendant of his right to a fair trial.

(F) The Court unjustly curtailed the cross-examination of counsel for Capone on numerous occasions and refused to permit counsel to examine the witness on matters which were either brought out on direct examination or on previous cross-examination on behalf of other defendants. At the same time, in many instances the trial court made disparaging remarks either about the purpose of counsel or the materiality of the evidence sought to be adduced, and at various times invaded the province of the jury and gave the Court's interpretation of the import or meaning of the testimony and the ability of the witness to testify concerning certain matters.

Both Court and prosecutor sought refuge in the magic word "Repetitious" to bar the right of proper cross-examination, the Court holding that if the prosecutor had originally asked the question, it would be repetitious to cross-examine the witness thereon and elicit, if possible, a contradictory reply, which would thereby tend to destroy the witness' credibility.

The instances are so many that, for the sake of brevity, we merely quote some of the pages from the record. (Bernstein's testimony: 1131-4; 1139; 1169; 1175; 1176; 1177-8; 1180; 1194; 1195; 1198-1200; 1201-2; 1227-8; Mc-goon's testimony: 2532; 2586-9.)

(G) The Court unwarrantably restricted cross-examination of People's witnesses on questions (a) directly affecting their credibility and (b) tending to show what consideration was being given to them for their testimony. Objections and exceptions were taken thereto (R.pp. 1094-5; 1136-9; 1144; 1146; 2531-2; 2597-8.)

(H) Numerous instances appear throughout the trial where the Court also invaded the right of the jury by interpreting the witnesses' answers and ability to answer (R.pp. 3894; 3898-9).

These actions persisted until counsel for defendant Capone finally moved for a mistrial on the ground "that the action of the Court toward defense counsel and upon the observations of this Court throughout this trial as to the testimony of various witnesses and what the import of their testimony is throughout the trial, being an invasion of the jury's province" (R.p. 2603.)

(I) The court adopted a unique method of concentrating attention upon every circumstance which might be regarded as pointing to guilt and yet, disregarding the numerous circumstances developed on cross-examination which would negative such inference. Under the pretext that the court wished to assist the jury by segregating all of the incriminatory matter against the several defendants, the court restricted its review of the facts (R.p. 3903, et seq.) to a recitation of all of the incriminatory statements made by Bernstein and Magoon against the petitioner. Exceptions to this charge were made in the absence of the jurymen since the court refused to permit their presence during counsel's exceptions thereto (R.p. 3968).

(J) The Court erroneously charged on reasonable doubt (R.p. 3930) and further damaged the interest of defendants on a request to charge by asserting, "I think it is up to you not to hook me that way" (R.p. 3959).

(K) The Court further damaged the interest of the defendant in its main charge by stating, "When rogues fall out, it is a wise man's delight" (R.p. 3903), and then very naively offered to withdraw the remark saying, "It is just one of those things that do not amount to anything" (R.p. 3974).

(L) The Court upon being requested to charge that "one accomplice cannot corroborate the testimony of another accomplice" aggravated conditions by modifying its charge and stating: "I will modify it in this respect. He may not corroborate it, standing alone, to an extent sufficient to entitle the jury to accept the other accomplice's word. The corroboration by outside testimony which tends to connect the defendant with the commission of the crime must come from a non-accomplice, but the testimony of every accomplice witness, other than aforesaid, may be considered by the jury for what probative value it is worth, but not as sufficiently corroborative to accept another accomplice's testimony." This charge was definitely erroneous (People v. Nitzberg, 287 N. Y. 183; People v. O'Farrell, 175 N. Y. 323 at 327).

(M) The Court erroneously admitted testimony of the witnesses Rubin and Berger with reference to union activities and gangsterism commencing in the year 1923 which seriously prejudiced the rights of defendant Capone (R.pp. 1293-1321; 1781-1802). This testimony was in nowise connected with the Rosen killing, but, nevertheless, a motion for a mistrial was denied (R.pp. 1492; 1877).

In respect to the foregoing, even Chief Judge Lehman, who voted for affirmance, admitted in his opinion:

> "True, as I have said earlier, the court in the charge instructed the jury as matter of law upon some questions of fact which only the jury had the right to determine, and I may add parenthetically that I doubt whether I would agree with the inferences drawn by the trial judge even if he had been the trier of the facts. I recognize that no intrusion by the trial judge upon the field reserved for the jury may be lightly disregarded." (R.p. 4077-8).

Judge Loughran, one of the dissenting judges, in his opinion fully agreed with the above contentions of the defendant Capone (R.pp. 4078-4090).

The summation of the district attorney conveyed to the jury an erroneous accent upon the assertion by the defendants (none of whom took the stand) of their constitutional privilege against self-incrimination, and his actions throughout the trial and during summation were highly improper, inflammatory and prejudicial to the interest of the defendant Capone, and prevented the jury from a fair deliberation of the issues involved.

Our system of jurisprudence has maintained one proposition as a beacon of our enlightenment—that a defendant accused of crime is entitled to a fair and impartial trial. This has been scrupulously maintained by our appellate courts when individuals, always human, have by attack on public welfare become blinded to justice by the desire for vengeance in the name of public interest.

Berger v. U. S., 295 U. S. 78;
Graves v. U. S., 150 U. S. 118;
Wilson v. U. S., 149 U. S. 60;
Hall v. U. S., 150 U. S. 76;
People v. Malkin, 250 N. Y. 185;
People v. Slover, 232 N. Y. 264.

That the prosecuting attorney in any case has much to do with the manner of conduct of the trial and that he can influence the atmosphere of such trial is clear. That there is a burden upon the district attorney as a quasi-judicial officer to aid and maintain the proper judicial atmosphere, and in doing so, to prosecute the defendant solely on the facts of the case and by legitimate methods is well recognized. Improper questions, statements not based upon evidence, browbeating of witnesses, and excessive argumentativeness is forbidden. All these are prohibited because they tend to distract the minds of the jurors from the actual facts and real issues and create against the defendant a prejudice born of the fact that the district attorney is recognized as a public officer who has apparently no interest in the case and who is at heart an altruist and interested solely in obaining justice.

A study of the record in the instant case discloses that this defendant did not receive the fair and impartial trial to which every defendant is entitled. It also discloses that the prosecuting attorney went beyond the limits of non partisanship and impartiality and attacked the defendant and the case with the virulence and venom of the nearly barbaric advocate who tilted in the lists for the case of his principal. But the age of defenders and trials by combat have long since gone. Our civilization at least in its penal law and procedure prides itself on having through evolution clearly annihilated primitiveness and barbarity. Yet, occasionally as here, our consciousness of civilization is pricked by ugly throwbacks.

The entire summation of the District Attorney constituted an appeal to passion and contained numerous errors which seriously prejudiced the rights of this defendant. Although it is customary to object to these statements when made, counsel for all defendants were instructed and admonished by the Court that the District Attorney's summation was not to be interrupted (R.p. 3782). When one of defense counsel disobeyed this admonition, he was admonished by the court that there would be no further interruptionsbut that all exceptions would have to be taken at the conclusion of the summation (R.p. 3821). The objections were, therefore, made after the conclusion of the summation and under the further instructions from the court, in the absence of the jury (R.p. 3860), thereby depriving the jury of the knowledge of counsels' objection to various portions of the summation. The reason for the failure to interrupt the district atorney was then stated (R.p. 3864), and a motion for a mistrial made briefly setting forth the grounds therefor (R.pp. 3864; 3869-70), since the court informed counsel that it was not proper and would serve no useful purpose to enlarge thereon (R.pp. 3939; 3861-4; 3865-9).

With the evident intent of inducing the jury to believe that the testimony of the accomplice Bernstein in relation to his narration of the details of the crime itself and the participants therein was true, the District Attorney utilized over one-third of the summation in enumerating facts which were peculiarly within the knowledge of said accomplice and could not be disputed by the defendant, but which did not tend to connect him with the crime.

At the outset, he directed the jury's attention to the fact that thirty-five witnesses and fifty-eight exhibits were introduced (R.p. 3784), and urged them to analyze and reason as "I will take you through the opening statement, sentence by sentence, paragraph by paragraph, to refresh your recollection, if that, indeed, needs any, that every fact stated therein has been conclusively proven and that the guilt of Lepke, Capone and Weiss has been established beyond a shadow of a doubt" (R.p. 3785). Thereafter, constantly using the phrase, "Continuing with the opening and representation of the proof that the District Attorney of this County said would be submitted to you," or words to like effect, he narrated in detail how a uniformed officer, hearing the cry of "Police—Murder," quickly ran to a civilian, then into the candy store and there found Rosen, describing in detail the condition of Rosen in the store (R.pp. 3785-6); how the police officer questioned the tailor across the street and received the license of the automobile; how the police officers, ambulance surgeon, medical examiner arrived; the taking of photographs by detectives at the scene, the removal of the body and its identification by the son (R. pp. 3786-7). He described in detail the course of each bullet (R. pp. 3787-8), the recovery of same and how they were turned over to the Police Department (R.p. 3788). He described the abandoned automobile and the photographs taken of it (R.pp. 3789, 3790). He described what the operator of the newsstand saw and how the abandoned Chevrolet was stolen (R.pp. 3790-1), even stating, "Didn't we bring from Peoria, Illinois, the owner of that automobile?" • • • and the policeman that received the alarm? • • • and the picture designating "the very spot where the car was stolen from?" (R.p. 3792). He described the theft of the license plates, how the detectives found the broken padlock, and how the owner of the car testified regarding their theft (R.pp. 3792-3). He described the investigation of the police for fingerprints (R.p. 3793). He then described the finding of the gun by a citizen, the delivery of it to a police officer (R.p. 3794) and its subsequent delivery to the Ballistic Bureau (R.pp. 3795-6), whose examination and findings on the various bullets he described in detail (R.pp. 3796-7). He then described and exhibited a photostatic copy of the appointment of Special Prosecutor Dewey (R.p. 3801) and, also, read the entire indictment to the jury explaining that he had informed them in the opening that an indictment had been found—and wasn't it TRUE? (R. pp. 3805-6).

He continuously reminded the jury of the fact that he was reading sentence by sentence from his opening and constantly interrupted his summation and interjected the word "True?"—and asked, "Is there a single word, in the representation of proof that has not been established beyond a shadow of doubt?" He would also ask of the jury whether there was anyone in the courtroom who could deny each and every one of these facts had been proven?

All of these facts, which he was impressing upon the jury as true, were in nowise disputed by the defendant Capone, did not tend to connect him with the crime and were peculiarly within the knowledge of the accomplice

Bernstein. The error was further aggravated by the statement made by him (after narrating all of these undisputed circumstances) to the jury, "To begin with, did anybody here tell you that Sholem Bernstein did not steal the murder car? Did anybody do that? Did anybody say to you that he did not steal the plates? Did anybody say to you that he did not chauffeur the murder car when Rosen was killed?"; and as to the other circumstances relating to the police officer, the tailor who turned in the alarm, the grocer, the medical examiner, the ambulance surgeon, the owner of the stolen car, the owner of the stolen plates and the newsstand operator, he further inquired of the jury whether there was any one person in the courtroom that could deny that each and every fact therein stated had been proven. This portion of the summation was intended to convince the jury that since the District Attorney had, in effect, undisputably corroborated the testimony of the accomplice Bernstein in these factual details, thereby demonstrating his truthfulness concerning same, therefore, the remainder of Bernstein's testimony tending to connect the defendant with the crime must likewise be true.

The defendant Capone rested upon the People's case. In the course of summation, the District Attorney made the following statement:

> "To begin with, did anybody here tell you that Sholem Bernstein did not steal the murder car? Did anybody do that? Did anybody say to you that he did not steal the plates? Did anybody say to you that he did not chauffeur the murder car when Rosen was killed?" (R.p. 3806)

This statement was highly improper and accomplished by indirection what the District Attorney could not openly and directly state, to wit: that the defendant did not take the stand or offer any proof in his own behalf. At the conclusion of the summation, the defendant Capone took exception, in the absence of the jury, to the reference herein made (R.p. 3870). As stated by Judge Loughran in the instant case, "This was a direct violation of the defendant's constitutional rights against self incrimination" (R.p. 4086).

We have established that over one-third of the summation dealt with the factual testimony not connecting any of the defendants with the crime. Much of the remaining time was spent in dealing with the activities of the Union and Rosen's and Rubin's travels and activities. Constant reference was also made throughout the remainder of the summation to what other persons in the courtroom, exclusive of the jury, as well as other lawyers in the courtroom seated in the opposite jury box, thought, according to the prosecutor, about the guilt of the defendant and as to whether any of them were in doubt as to the representation of proof the District Attorney claimed he had presented (R. pp. 3786, 3790, 3792, 3793, 3794, 3797, 3804).

At another point in the summation, he referred to the Goldstein and Strauss case, alleging that Judge Talley had lifted a part of his summation therefrom without benefit of the author (R.p. 3784). During the course of his summation, he exhibited the gun to the jury, and was told by the court to lay it aside.

He referred to the pay received by defense counsel as "tainted money" and stated that if defense counsel did not know that it was a hopeless case when they received their retainer, there is no lawyer in the courtroom that does not know it now, thereby implying that defense counsel knew that the defendants were guilty (R.p. 3804).

After his mention that the Rosen murder was a challenge to Judge O'Dwyer and his entire staff (R.p. 3807), he described how the police swept down on Brownsville and the people scattered to the four winds. He then inquired of the jury whether they thought that "Judge O'Dwyer sat down and out of seven million people in New York City or out of twelve million people in New York State, he selected Lepke, Capone and Weiss for a witch hunt" (R.p. 3807).

He raised a false issue regarding the integrity of the District Attorney and his office by stating that Judge O'Dwyer, he and others who had something to do with the case were accused of murdering or attempting to kill the defendants (R.pp. 3803-4), and later requested the jury to use their head and imagine what went on in the District Attorney's office when the District Attorney saw a challenge like the Rosen case and other matters he wanted to investigate (R.pp. 3814-5). He reiterated, "Judge O'Dwyer and the rest of his staff—would they sit by and let Rubin or anybody pick three people out of seven million and send them up on a false murder charge?" (R.p. 3856), again pitting the integrity of the District Attorney's office against the guilt or innocence of the defendants. Finally, he conveyed to the jury the District Attorney's firm belief in the guilt of the defendants, using the following language, "for if they had not been three of the killers of Rosen, you would not have been sitting here" (R.p. 3820).

In an attempt to justify Bernstein's falsehoods relating to his opportunity to write letters, he referred to the desire of Bernstein to protect some employee in the hotel (there being no evidence to that effect), and he referred to the right of convicts in Sing Sing to write letters (R.p. 3809).

He assured the jury that they did not have to worry about what was going to happen to the witnesses in this case, and stated:

> "Don't let anybody fool you with Christmas-present nonsense. Gentlemen, the courts have confidence in the integrity and common sense of juries and jurors. Have a little faith in the integrity of the courts and the prosecutor as to what will happen to witnesses. Right now they are too valuable pieces of bric-a-brac to be dealt with as Lepke, Weiss and Capone would want" (R.p. 3879).

It will be remembered that soon after the trial both Bernstein and Berger were set scot free, and paid considerable money by the State for the time spent in first class hotels as material witnesses. It would be fantastic to believe that the prosecuting attorney was telling the truth, when he made the foregoing statements to the jury, that he actually did not know that these murderers were to be set free.

He further emphasized the error committed by the Court in respect to the charge of attempted spoilation of evidence on the part of Capone by referring to same as evidence of his guilt (R.p. 3839).

He made improper references to defendants and defense counsel (R.pp. 3818, 3839-48).

During the trial, the District Attorney was permitted to prove the alleged association of the witness and of the defendant with Martin "Buggsy" Goldstein, Harry "Happy" Maione, Frank "the Dasher" Abbandando and Abraham Reles (R.pp. 698-9; 2431-2), although these named persons had no connection with the case at bar.

The evident purpose of introducing this testimony was to prejudice the defendant in the eyes of the jurors, at least two of whom had been called in the case of People v. Maione and Abbandando and knew the result thereof. The question of the qualifications of these two jurors, Rorke and Link, has been previously discussed herein.

A summary finds that the prosecuting attorney in his zeal was guilty of almost every act of misconduct which has many times been proclaimed error:

> "Altercations between counsel, including imputation as to veracity, interjection of prejudicial matter by way of remarks during the trial, asking incompetent questions, merely for purpose of prejudice, the improper browbeating of witnesses, • • • improper argument to the jury." 26 Ruling Case Law 1022.
>
> "Persistence of the prosecuting attorney in asking improper questions in order to prejudice the jury may amount to such misconduct as to require a new trial." (Citing:) State v. Greenland, 125 Iowa 141; Baldwin v. State, 11 Oklahoma Criminal Reports, 228; State v. Roscon, 119 Iowa 390; Corpus Juris, Vol. 16, p. 1143.
>
> "A counsel's argument is in its purpose a connected presentation of the facts supposed to have been proved by the evidence tending in favor of his client. • • • Any representation of fact, therefore, which is made by him in the argument, must not be an assertion made upon his own credit • • • To bring forward in argument an assertion of fact • • • is to become a witness; and to be a witness without being subjected to cross examination is to violate the fundamental principle of the Hearsay rule." 3 Wigmore Evid. 837.
>
> "The same general principle governs the putting of questions to witnesses. The jury may under > certain circumstances obtain an impression, from the mere putting of illegal questions which are either answered in the negative or are not answered because illegal and excluded, that there is some basis of truth for the question." Id. 850.

That the misconduct of counsel for the prosecution during the trial prejudiced the defendant and his case so as to deprive him of a fair and impartial trial is clear. Johnson v. U. S., 131 C. C. A. 613, 3 Wigmore Evid. §1808; Berger v. U. S., supra, Graves v. U. S., supra, Hall v. U. S., supra, Wilson v. U. S., supra.

CONCLUSION

The jurisdiction of this Court is invoked by reason of the denial to the petitioner of his constitutional rights to a fair trial as guaranteed to him by the Fourteenth Amendment of the Constitution of the United States. This point was previously raised in the Court below where it was considered and necessarily passed upon. (See Remittitur of the Court of Appeals R.pp. 4028).

It is contended on all of the foregoing specification of errors that a Writ of Certiorari for a review of the judgment of conviction herein should issue. The judgment of conviction herein was not obtained by due process of law; it resulted from the mere pretense or semblance of a trial. This departure from the proper course of trial proceedings was grossly unfair and improper and calls for this Court's power of supervision over such proceedings. As was said by Mr. Justice Roberts of this Court in Lisenba v. California (decided by Supreme Court of the United States, October Term, 1941):

> "As applied to a criminal trial, denial of due process is the failure to observe that fundamental fairness essential to the very concept of justice. In order to declare a denial of it we must find that the absence of that fairness fatally infected the trial; the acts complained of must be of such quality as necessarily prevent a fair trial.'

To the same effect see

Moore v. Dempsey, 261 U. S. 86;
Norris v. Alabama, 294 U. S. 589.

It is respectfully submitted that the prejudicial and inflammatory newspaper publicity directed against the petitioners herein prior to the trial; the denial of the numerous motions for a severance made on behalf of this petitioner; the atmosphere in the courtroom and the conduct of the trial; the seating of a prejudiced and biased jury; the conduct of the trial judge; and the misconduct of the prosecutor, condoned and permitted by the trial Court, was as much a denial of due process of law as the domination of a Court by mob violence, since in such case, while there is the form of a hearing, a hearing in substance, within the meaning of due process of law, is denied.

It is therefore respectfully prayed that a Writ of Certiorari issue to the Court of Appeals of the State of New York and the County Court of Kings County of the State of New York, for a review of the judgment of conviction convicting the petitioner herein of the crime of murder in the first degree.

Respectfully submitted,

SYDNEY ROSENTHAL,
Attorney for Petitioner.

Of Counsel:
SYDNEY ROSENTHAL,
BENJ. J. JACOBSON,
(Both of 10 Court Square,
Long Island City, N. Y.)

FILE COPY

Office - Supreme Court, U. S.
FILED
APR 30 1943
CLERK

IN THE

Supreme Court of the United States

OCTOBER TERM, 1942

No. 606

LOUIS BUCHALTER, Petitioner,

against

THE PEOPLE OF THE STATE OF NEW YORK, Respondents.

No. 610

EMANUEL WEISS, Petitioner,

against

THE PEOPLE OF THE STATE OF NEW YORK, Respondents.

No. 619

LOUIS CAPONE, Petitioner,

against

THE PEOPLE OF THE STATE OF NEW YORK, Respondents.

BRIEF FOR PETITIONERS

I. MAURICE WORMSER,
J. BERTRAM WEGMAN,
Counsel for Petitioner Buchalter.

ARTHUR GARFIELD HAYS,
JOHN SCHULMAN,
Counsel for Petitioner Weiss.

SYDNEY ROSENTHAL,
Counsel for Petitioner Capone.

INDEX

PAGE

Opinions Below 1

Jurisdiction 1

Statement of the Case 2

The Propaganda 10

The Jury 14

The Physical Trappings of the Trial 28

The Conduct of the Trial Judge 29

The Conduct of the Prosecutor 32

The Court's Charge 35

Specification of the Errors to be Urged 36

Argument 37

Due Process of Law 37

I—The Jury Was Not Impartial 41

(A) The Jury as Selected 41

(B) The Physical Trappings 46

(C) Prejudice Created by Court and Prosecutor 49

II—The Right to an Impartial Jury Was Not Waived 49

III—Relevant Evidence Was Suppressed 53

IV—The Trial Judge Assumed the Role of a Protagonist for the Prosecution; His Conduct and that of the Prosecutor Misled the Jury 60

(A) The Prosecutor's Actions 60

(B) The Trial Judge's Actions 64

(C) The Charge 67

Conclusion 76

Appendix

PAGE

Constitution of the United States:

Amendment XIV 80

New York State Constitution:

Article I, Section 2 80
Article I, Section 6 81

Judicial Code of the United States:

Title 28, U. S. C., Section 344 (Section 237 of the Judicial Code, as amended) 82

New York Judiciary Law:

Section 749aa. Special Jurors in Certain Counties 82

CASES CITED

	PAGE
Adams v. United States, 317 U. S. 269	37, 38
Avery v. Alabama, 308 U. S. 444	45
Backus v. Fort, 169 U. S. 557	53
Barrington v. Missouri, 205 U. S. 483	42
Brown v. Mississippi, 297 U. S. 278	38
Brown v. New Jersey, 175 U. S. 172	38, 50
Burt v. Smith, 203 U. S. 129	63
Centoamore v. State, 105 Neb. 452	59
Chambers v. Florida, 309 U. S. 227	41, 46, 53
Commonwealth v. Petrillo, 338 Penna. 65	75
Coughlin v. People, 144 Ill. 140	42, 44
Curtis v. State, 46 Tenn. 9	59
DeJonge v. Oregon, 299 U. S. 353	43
Edward Guerin, 23 Cohen's Criminal Appeal Cases 39	54
Edwards v. United States, 312 U. S. 473	56
Frank v. Mangum, 237 U. S. 309	38
Glasser v. United States, 315 U. S. 60	37, 38, 52
Hayes v. Missouri, 120 U. S. 68	38, 50
Hill v. Texas, 316 U. S. 400	79
Hooker v. Los Angeles, 188 U. S. 314	37
Howard v. Fleming, 191 U. S. 126	53
Hurtado v. California, 110 U. S. 516	37
Johnson v. United States, 317 U. S. (Feb. 15, 1943)	42
Johnson v. Zerbst, 304 U. S. 458	52
Jordan v. Massachusetts, 225 U. S. 167	38
The King v. Sagar (1914), 3 K. B. 1112	57
Lisenba v. California, 314 U. S. 219	61, 76
Lyons v. Goldstein, 290 N. Y. 19	61

	PAGE
Moore v. Dempsey, 261 U. S. 86	38, 45
Mooney v. Holohan, 294 U. S. 103	52, 54, 61
Palko v. Connecticut, 302 U. S. 319	38
Patterson v. Colorado, 205 U. S. 454	63
Patton v. United States, 281 U. S. 276	38
People v. Barbato, 254 N. Y. 170	77
People ex rel. Battista v. Christian, 249 N. Y. 314	49
People v. Becker, 210 N. Y. 274	77
People v. Casey, 96 N. Y. 115	53
People v. Cosmo, 205 N. Y. 91	52
People v. Crum, 272 N. Y. 348	53, 76
People v. Davis, 52 Mich. 569	59
People v. Kross, 284 N. Y. 452	23
People v. McQuade, 110 N. Y. 284	53
People v. Nitzberg, 289 N. Y. 523	8
People v. Ohanian, 245 N. Y. 227	74
People v. Walsh, 262 N. Y. 140	59
People v. Watson, 216 N. Y. 565	62, 63
People v. Wilmarth, 156 N. Y. 566	53
Powell v. Alabama, 287 U. S. 45	45
Pyle v. Kansas, 317 U. S. (Dec. 7, 1942)	37, 54
Rawlins v. Georgia, 201 U. S. 638	63
Reynolds v. United States, 98 U. S. 145	38, 42
Saunders v. Shaw, 244 U. S. 318	56
Stephens v. People, 38 Mich. 739	44
Simon v. Craft, 182 U. S. 427	45
Smith v. O'Grady, 312 U. S. 329	61
Spies v. Illinois, 123 U. S. 131	50
State v. Kring, 64 Mo. 591	47
State v. Nash, 7 Iowa 347	46
State v. Rice, 347 Mo. 812	47
State v. Wood, 127 Me. 197	58
Stokes v. People, 53 N. Y. 164	52
Tumey v. Ohio, 273 U. S. 510	37, 38
Twining v. New Jersey, 211 U. S. 78	37, 63, 74

STATUTES CITED

PAGE

Constitution of New York State:

Art. I, Sec. 2 ..... 49, 80
Art. I, Sec. 6 ..... 63, 64, 81

Constitution of the United States:

Fourteenth Amendment 80

Judicial Code:

Sec. 237 (Sec. 344, Title 28, U. S. C.) 1, 82

Judiciary Law of New York State:

Sec. 749aa, subd. 2 ..... 52, 82
Sec. 749aa, subd. 7 ..... 50, 52, 83

TEXTS

The Supreme Court, The Fourteenth Amendment and State Criminal Cases (1936), 3 U. of Chicago Law Review 244 ..... 49, 50

Wigmore on Evidence (3d Ed.), Vol. V, p. 128 64

IN THE

Supreme Court of the United States

OCTOBER TERM, 1942

Nos. 606, 610, 619

LOUIS BUCHALTER, EMANUEL WEISS, and LOUIS CAPONE,
Petitioners,

against

THE PEOPLE OF THE STATE OF NEW YORK,
Respondents.

PETITIONERS' BRIEF

Opinions Below

The four opinions written in the Court of Appeals of the State of New York are reported officially, 289 N. Y. 181. The Per Curiam opinion of that Court denying the motion for reargument is reported officially, 289 N. Y. 244.

Jurisdiction

The jurisdiction of this Court is invoked under Sec. 344(b), Title 28, U. S. C. (Sec. 237 of the Judicial Code, as Amended),* on the ground that petitioners were denied their constitutional rights under the Fourteenth Amendment to the Constitution of the United States* in that they were deprived of due process of law in the proceedings below. The petitions for a writ of certiorari were denied by this Court by order filed February 15, 1943. Thereafter, on March 15, 1943, this Court granted a petition for rehearing, vacated the order denying certiorari and granted the petition for a writ of certiorari.

---

* Appendix, infra, pp. 80, 82

Statement of the Case

Joseph Rosen was murdered on September 13, 1936.* In May, 1940, petitioners (and others who were not tried) were indicted of the crime. In September, 1941, the trial began. In December, 1941, they were convicted of murder in the first degree, and sentenced to death.

"The theory of the prosecution's case was that the defendant Weiss was one of the slayers; that the defendant Capone was one of those who had arranged for the murder, who had laid out the route to be taken by the automobile used in it and that he and others were waiting with two cars at the other side of the trestle on Junius Street, to assist in the escape of the slayers; that the defendant

---

* In the prosecution's brief submitted to the New York Court of Appeals, what the People claimed to have proved regarding the discovery of the crime was thus stated (the figures in parentheses which are part of the following quotation have reference to the folios of the printed record on appeal):

"On Sunday, September 13, 1936, at about 7 o'clock in the morning, a police officer's attention was attracted by the cry of a man standing in the middle of the street, shouting, 'Police! Murder! Help!' Upon responding to the call the officer was directed to a small candy store located at 725 Sutter Avenue, Brooklyn. Inside the store lay the proprietor, Joseph Rosen, flat on his back, his face, neck and shirt drenched with blood, his body riddled with seventeen bullet holes (999-1007, 1928-29).

"The man whose cry summoned the police officer was a tailor who lived across the street from the Rosen candy store. At about 6:45 o'clock that morning he heard a shot; he ran to the window, saw an automobile driving away from in front of Rosen's store, and at the same time observed Rosen's body lying on the floor. Fortunately, the tailor memorized the license number of the automobile and quickly ran to the street to call for help. He then reported his information to the police officer, who immediately sent out an alarm for a black sedan bearing license number L-19[illegible]7 and carrying three or four occupants (965-80, 1002-05).

"Later that morning the wanted automobile was found abandoned on Van Sinderen and Livonia Avenues near an L. R. T. and B. M. T. railroad station, at which there was a trestle or footbridge leading to the other side of the railroad tracks (1138-49). The operator of a newsstand at the station testified that at about 7 o'clock that morning the automobile came speeding around the corner of Livonia Buchalter, referred to as Lepke by the witnesses throughout the trial, had ordered the death of Rosen through fear that he would testify against him in the so-called Dewey investigation, involving racketeering and extortion" (Conway, J., R. 4031).

No witness saw the actual murder.

The entire case against petitioners depended upon the testimony of the witnesses Bernstein, Rubin, Berger, Tannenbaum and Magoon.* Bernstein was the only one who

---

and Van Sinderen Avenues, 'screeching' as it made the turn, and then came to a sudden stop. Four men, he said, emerged from the automobile, walked by his newsstand and then up toward the trestle or footbridge. He could not, however, identify any of the men (1152-77).

"At about 11 o'clock on the same morning a pedestrian discovered a gun lying in the grass near the sidewalk quite some distance away from Rosen's candy store. The gun was turned over to the Ballistics Bureau of the Police Department (1190-1219, 1228-29). The ballistics expert also had in his possession eight spent bullets which were found at the scene of the crime (1238-41). Two of these bullets were removed from the victim's head and neck (1054-61, 1079); four others were pried out of the floor directly beneath the body; another was extracted from the floor near the body, and still another, which passed through the wall of the candy store, was recovered in the millinery shop next door (1090-1124).

"The ballistics expert found that four of these bullets had been fired from the gun found by the pedestrian and that the others had been fired from a gun of similar make (1283-1302). Further examination disclosed that the serial numbers of the gun had been mechanically removed and that the obliteration was so thorough that all scientific means generally employed to reveal those numbers were of no avail (1259-67). In addition to the obliteration of the serial numbers it was also discovered that the gun had received other mechanical treatment after it had left the factory. At the muzzle end of the barrel a thread had been cut for the attachment of a 'silencer' to muffle the sound of a report. The 'silencer' was not affixed to the gun, but the threading for it was covered by a 'collar' (1244-47)."

* Rubin, Berger and Tannenbaum did not implicate Capone; Bernstein and Magoon did not mention Buchalter; Rubin said nothing about Weiss. Although it does not appear in this Record, it is a matter of official Court Record in New York that each of these witnesses has gone scot-free, except Tannenbaum, who was permitted to plead guilty to manslaughter, whereupon sentence was suspended.

said he was at the scene of the crime, although he did not see the shooting. Rubin and Berger testified regarding preparation; Tannenbaum and Magoon testified to alleged admissions. Of this, and of these individuals, the Chief Judge of the New York Court of Appeals, who voted to affirm, said (R. 4070-71): "There can be no question that the only proof against these defendants comes from witnesses who in their testimony against these defendants proved their own guilt of the murder of Rosen and from other witnesses who, though denying guilty complicity in the Rosen murder, admitted guilty complicity in other murders and hideous crimes."*

Bernstein, described by the dissenting Judges below (R. 4079) as "* * * a former perjurer who perversely and flagrantly lied again to the jury on this present trial" "* * * was the chief of the prosecution witnesses." He is an admitted murderer with a long record of nefarious activities. His testimony was that, early in the afternoon of September 11, 1936, he was an onlooker at a street corner meeting of petitioners Weiss and Capone with Strauss and Cohen (the latter two, named as defendants in the indictment, were not tried). Upon instructions then given by Strauss, Bernstein stole an automobile which he later used to drive the alleged murderers to and away from the scene of the murder. He said he was taught the "get-away" route by petitioner Capone. In effect, he purchased immunity by testifying.

---

* This sentence, which appears in the Record, and was contained in the opinion as filed, has been deleted from the official report (cf. 289 N. Y. 222).

 The dissenting Judges said (R. 4081-82): "For more than a year prior to this trial Bernstein had been kept in custody at a hotel as one of a group described by him as members of 'the mob'. The main contention of the defense was that Bernstein's testimony against the defendants had been there fabricated by this group in an endeavor to shift the incidence of the death penalty for the killing of Rosen. This contention went to the heart of the People's case. (People v. Becker, 210 N. Y. 274, 308-309.) As an answer, Bernstein testified that during his confinement in the hotel he was under surveillance day and night by the police. Though that testimony was uncorroborated, the trial judge refused to let the jury pass Rubin, an admitted liar and extortionist, who expressed intense hatred for Buchalter (R. 1494), was called as a witness to provide proof of motive for the murder. The substance of his testimony was that Rosen had been forced out of business by Buchalter; that with the appointment of Special Prosecutor Dewey, Buchalter became worried over the possibility that Rosen might furnish Dewey with information; that on September 11, two days before the murder, Buchalter had made threats against Rosen; that after Rubin reported his inability to placate Rosen, Buchalter then sent him to summon Berger, and that subsequent to the murder Buchalter had induced Rubin to flee from the jurisdiction.

---

upon its credibility. More than that, the judge certified to the trustworthiness of that testimony in this way: 'You cannot lock criminals together when they are waiting their turn to be called to testify and let them put their heads together and maybe plot something behind the backs of the police. That would be sloppy police work, to permit discussion.' The judge was without power so to invade the province of the jury.

"On cross-examination, Bernstein denied any letter had been written or sent by him while he was in custody at the hotel. Confronted then with three letters written in his own hand upon the hotel stationery, he owned he had lied. The quality of these documents is exhibited by the following excerpt: 'Do you know how many guys are pinched just for conversation. Why do you make me write like this. I don't want to hurt you. Again I want to know did I do you any harm the way you are defying me. Well there is no sence of me trying to threaten you if you want it that away. So Cherry you are making me do this that I don't want all for $200 dollars. I just want to remind you years don't mean anything to me.' (The emphasis was first hand.)

"The trial judge refused to receive these letters in evidence. Here again there is need to remember how the case for the People hangs on the credibility of Bernstein as a witness. Once more there is need also to keep in mind the theory of the People that at the hotel Bernstein was never free to consort with others in respect of his role upon this trial. In both aspects, these letters were proximately relevant evidence on the side of the defendants. We think the text thereof should have been put before the jury. (See People v. Becker, 210 N. Y. 284, 298.)

"After Rosen had been killed but before the trial of the present case, Bernstein was a prosecution witness on a trial held at Monticello, Sullivan County. On that trial, he tried to swear away the life of one Gangy Cohen who was there accused of another murder.

It was shown, however, that in December, 1937, when Rubin would have implicated Buchalter if he could (R. 2400-01), as he had already implicated him in other crimes, he had made a statement to Mr. McCarthy (then an Assistant District Attorney of Kings County), who questioned him about the crime, in the presence of Mr. Hogan (then an Assistant District Attorney, and now District Attorney of New York County), in which Rubin completely exculpated Buchalter of any complicity in the Rosen murder.*

As regards his former testimony in the Cohen case, Bernstein was examined on the present trial as follows: 'Q. Did you testify in the trial of Gangy Cohen to anything that was not true? A. Yes, sir, I knew I was doing wrong. Q. Did you fail to testify to some things that were true? A. Yes, sir, I knew I was doing wrong. * * * Q. Were you asked these questions and did you give these answers? A. My mind is very clear. Go ahead. * * * "Question: And you had nothing to do with any murder on any occasion? Answer: That is right." Q. Were you asked that question and did you give that answer? A. Yes, sir.'

"It was manifestly the duty of the trial judge to warn the jury specifically of the necessity of wariness on their part in consequence of this confession by Bernstein that where another life depended on his oath he had corruptly suppressed his participation in the murder here ascribed by him to two of these defendants. (Cf. Dunn v. People, 29 N. Y. 523.) The judge said: 'The answer given to the question you have just read in the other trial could be viewed as being meant to be true if the witness considered it referred to the actual shooting. It would be untrue in relation to his being a principal under section 2 of the Penal Law, in the other ways than killing.' This animadversion was very much in the nature of a charge to the jury. (People v. Wood, 126 N. Y. 249, 260.) In our judgment, the exception taken thereto is valid."

* To quote the dissenting opinion below (R. 4088-89): "When counsel for Buchalter requested that the jury be directed to take notice of Rubin's contradictory statement to Mr. McCarthy, the trial judge said: 'On the second point of that request, he (Rubin) did not testify before McCarthy at all. He was not under oath. That is not perjury. That is a contradiction and he has explained it. He says he had been shot through the head because of testifying before the Dewey grand jury, and he was afraid to give McCarthy any information about the Rosen case. I charge the jury that they can consider the explanation in connection with the apparent evasion on that point before Mr. McCarthy. If Berger, a confessed participant in numerous crimes of violence, was held on his own story to have been an accom-

---

it was on the basis of fear, they can consider the extent, if any, to which it ameliorates the contradiction and whether or not the contradiction, admittedly so before McCarthy, really amounts to anything at all. He was under no obligation to give any evidence; it was not sworn to before any official, so far as legal procedure is concerned; it was not compulsory.' This argument in support of Rubin's credibility was inadmissible. Evidence of a prior self-contradiction by a witness, 'is founded on the obvious consideration that both accounts cannot be true, and tends to prove a defect of intelligence or memory on the subject testified of, or, what is worse, a want of moral honesty and regard to truth; and so, in either case, that the witness is less worthy of belief.' (Shaw, C. J., in Commonwealth v. Starkweather, 10 Cush. (Mass.) 59, 60.) Hence the fact that Rubin had not sworn to his contradictory statement to Mr. McCarthy was immaterial. (3 Wigmore on Evidence (3rd ed.), § 1044, p. 727.)

"Rubin's testimony was offered to show the alleged motive for this crime,—fear lest Rosen vent a business grievance by instigating criminal prosecution of Buchalter. To the same end, members of the family of Rosen endeavored by their testimony to show his prominence in the commercial field in which Buchalter was active in labor affairs; but the trial judge struck out that testimony as being 'too sketchy to have any value as evidence.' As a result there was no contradiction of witnesses for Buchalter who testified to the indifference of Rosen's success as a man of business. In that state of the case, Buchalter at least was entitled to have the jury consider whether he was right in his claim of the absence of any compelling reason why he should have been greatly afraid of the enmity of so inconspicuous a person as Rosen. (People v. Becker, 215 N. Y. 126, 135.)

"On this issue, the trial Judge in his charge said to the jury: 'So far as the People's case is concerned, the furthest you can go in figuring out motive on Buchalter's part for wanting Rosen out of the way is that because of a business grudge carried by Rosen against Buchalter, having to do in some manner with the trucking company affairs in relation to the Pennsylvania business, and apparently blaming Buchalter for it, Buchalter feared that Rosen would reprise by giving information to Mr. Dewey which would get him, Buchalter, in trouble with the authorities.' But the next phrase of the judge was this: 'That is enough as motive evidence, if you find these facts to be established to your satisfaction, reasonably.' The judge was without power so to deal with the effect of evidence as proving the case against Buchalter. At this point again, there should have been a presentation of both sides of the issue,—and the question of the weight of the evidence also should have been submitted to the jury."

plice in the Rosen murder. He testified that late in the afternoon of September 11, 1936—two days before the murder—he was instructed by Rubin to call at Buchalter's office at 200 Fifth Avenue, New York City (R. 1804). He went there, and then with Buchalter went to see Weiss.

His story was that he received instructions to point Rosen out to Weiss. He and Weiss went to Brooklyn late that evening. From the testimony of both Rubin and Berger it appears that Buchalter's alleged decision to have Rosen killed was not made until after 5 o'clock in the afternoon of September 11, 1936.

This is in conflict with Bernstein's testimony. Bernstein had fixed the time when he saw Weiss in Brooklyn (R. 1165) at not later than 1 o'clock that same afternoon (R. 1160-61), and said it was then that the order had been given to him to steal the murder car (R. 1166-67). The manner in which the Trial Judge dealt with this conflict in the "time table" is discussed in the Argument, infra, pp. 67-69.

Tannenbaum and Magoon were "corroborators". (Cf. People v. Nitzberg, 289 N. Y. 523.)

Tannenbaum, a confessed professional murderer who led a life of crime since youth, said that he had been present in the office at 200 Fifth Avenue, New York City, where he had heard Buchalter talk with Rubin on September 11, 1936, and again when he heard Weiss report the murder on September 14 or 15.

Records of the New York City Police Department containing reports made by police officers who had Buchalter under constant surveillance during the time in question (as well as long prior and long subsequent thereto) were of material importance to the defense to refute the stories told by Tannenbaum, Berger and Rubin. These reports were subpoenaed by the defendants, were brought to court and were withheld by the prosecutor. The Trial Judge refused to permit defense counsel to see them; he refused to look at them himself or even to have them counted (R. 2148-54). The effect of the suppression of this evidence is discussed in the Argument, infra, pp. 54-59.

Magoon's contribution to the People's case was his testimony that, in April, 1939, two and a half years after the murder, Capone had said to him: "I worked on the Rosen thing and it was right on Sutter Avenue and I was not made." It was held that this statement could be taken as corroborative evidence tending to connect Capone with the crime charged.*

The dissenting Judges below said (R. 4083): "Magoon was not a reputable witness. He is a self-confessed murderer. His appearance on the witness stand had no object but the saving of his own skin." Magoon was a professional auto thief, who participated in several murders.

In respect of all these witnesses the Chief Judge of the Court of Appeals said (R. 4070-71):

> "* * * in any discussion of the questions presented upon this appeal we should bear in mind that all the essential facts which the People claim demonstrate beyond reasonable doubt the guilt of these defendants are proven, if at all, only by the testimony of degraded criminals whose credibility is impeached, if not completely destroyed, by a cross-examination in which they admitted a callous disregard of every law, human and divine—including the provisions of both the penal law and of the divine commands against bearing false witness against their neighbors."

Our purpose is not to argue about the weight or the character of the evidence adduced, or even to demonstrate how justified was the reasonable doubt of guilt entertained by a majority of the Court of Appeals, and the belief of one of the Judges of that Court that there was not enough to have warranted submission of the case to the jury.

Petitioners would have been convicted on practically no proof; they were for all practical purposes convicted before the trial began, because of the propaganda, the atmosphere in the courtroom, and the composition of the jury. All that was done at the so-called trial was directed to the single end that by no possible chance might the jury be diverted from a predestined verdict of guilt. To judge this, the totality of the proceedings below must be viewed in perspective.

* This statement is discussed in the supplemental brief of petitioner Capone.

The Propaganda

In advance of the arraignment, a newspaper campaign began with lurid stories that the prosecutor had visited petitioner Buchalter in the Federal Penitentiary, with details (all false) of Buchalter bargaining for his life to escape the consequences of this crime, of which, of course, it was taken for granted he was guilty.

Calculated to condition the collective mind of the community was the conduct of the first arraignment of Buchalter, at which the court room resembled an armed camp (V. 2-3).* The Court (not the Trial Judge) was moved to protest at the manifest impropriety—yet in that very protest gave expression to the common, induced belief that Buchalter was a bad and dangerous man who required closest guard. What purpose other than to fan the flames can be ascribed to the speech of the prosecutor on the adjourned date of the arraignment (V. 6), and again at the final arraignment (V. 9-10), for surely those remarks were not germane to the proper conduct of the proceedings.

Part of the Record in this Court is the compilation in photostat form of some small part of the newspaper stories which preceded, accompanied and followed each step along the path of this case up to and during the selection of the jury.

Some few examples are given to indicate their tenor.

As early as October, 1940, there appeared in a newspaper a story which said in part (R. 87):

> "But now Lepke faces the electric chair as a result of the smashing of Murder, Inc. by District Attorney William O'Dwyer of Brooklyn."

* N. B.—The designation "V." is used to distinguish pages in Vol. VI through VIII, from pages in the preceding volumes, which are designated "R."

Another portion of the story (R. 89) quotes Mr. O'Dwyer as exclaiming "jubilantly":

> "At last I've got Lepke and Capone on their way to the chair."

In November, 1940, there was a statement in a newspaper (R. 90) that Buchalter was officially reported "last night to be ready to buy his life by revealing to District Attorney O'Dwyer of Brooklyn all that he knows about the underworld".

On May 16, 1941, the day Buchalter was arraigned, the New York World-Telegram carried this story:

> "LEPKE WOULD TELL OF U. S. CRIME RING.
> Official, Labor Chief Might
> Be Implicated.
>
> Louis (Lepke) Buchalter is negotiating to turn informer and betray the inmost secrets of the magnates of crime who dominate the rackets of America, the World-Telegram learned today.
>
> This newspaper learned that squealers have informed District Attorney William O'Dwyer that Lepke was in a position to deliver a nationally prominent labor leader on a murder charge, a noted public official of New York City on a conspiracy charge, and a close relative of a very high federal office holder as a front man for at least two of the six men credited with controlling racketeering throughout the United States.
>
> Before he was laid by the heels on a federal dope ring conviction Lepke was one of the most powerful racketeers in the country, a member of the highest council of the rackets industry. And if Lepke really talks, the lid's off the underworld.
>
> The status of the negotiations remained a closely guarded secret today, but the World-Telegram learned that already there have been a series of conferences between representatives of District Attorney William O'Dwyer of Brooklyn and Lepke's relatives and attorneys.
>
> Lepke's price is freedom from prosecution on the murder charge he now faces in the Murder, Inc., debacle in Brooklyn and commutation of the 30-to-60-year sentence hanging over him for extortion in the flour-trucking industry in Manhattan, the World-Telegram is informed.

If he got his price Lepke would be a free man when he finished his federal term at Leavenworth. He will be eligible for parole from Leavenworth in about nine years.

Calls Price Too High.

However, District Attorney O'Dwyer is understood to feel that Lepke's price is too high. It is understood that it has been suggested to his representatives that the best deal Lepke could hope to get would allow him to plead guilty to murder in the second degree in the Brooklyn case and serve the 20-to-life term on his plea concurrently with the 30-to-60-year term in the flour-trucking racket. This would make Lepke eligible for parole in about 17 years. He is now about 43" (R. 83-4).

The Mirror and the News carried the same story the next day.

Thus the prosecutor's office, on the very eve of the date originally set for trial, was said to have claimed that Buchalter had confessed to the prosecutor his guilt of this murder, and was willing to implicate high City and Government officials in an effort to avoid the punishment of death which, according to all the newspapers, he acknowledged was his own due.

In an affidavit filed on behalf of Buchalter it was said (R. 86-7) that it was the fact (which the District Attorney should acknowledge) that neither he nor his representatives had ever conferred with the District Attorney or anyone connected with the District Attorney; that the reported conversations never took place; that Buchalter had never acknowledged guilt; that he had never attempted to bargain with the District Attorney. This was not denied or disputed by the prosecutor.

This atmosphere of hostility was intensified and made a matter of even greater public interest when the District Attorney was acclaimed as a likely candidate for the office of Mayor of the City of New York. According to the Daily Mirror of July 10, 1941 (R. 91):

> "One reason given yesterday for O'Dwyer's first place position is that he 'seems to be the only man who could beat LaGuardia'. The Brooklyn prosecutor is expected to strengthen his candidacy further by a successful prosecution of Louis (Lepke) Buchalter, due to go on trial Aug. 4 for the murder of Joseph Rosen, ex-member of the Murder Syndicate, 'erased' as an informer."

These, and statements of similar import, continued to fill the public prints.

In July, 1941, applications had been made by petitioners for a change of venue (R. 76-109). Their counsel had prognosticated that a fair trial could not be had in that community. These motions were denied (R. 165-167). The Court said: "It is inconceivable that in a cosmopolitan community such as Kings County, with a population of over two million people, a jury cannot be found, qualified to fairly and impartially try the defendant on the evidence." The Court also expressed the opinion that the publicity was so widespread that Kings County was not likely to be more prejudiced than anywhere else.

The case came on for trial on August 4, 1941 (R. 178-179). Out of a jury panel of 250, all but 95 either failed to appear or presented excuses to be relieved from service (V. 31). As the Trial Court then said: "This jury situation is unprecedented. It is practically a run-out" (V. 44). He attributed the reluctance of jurors to serve to the hot weather, but subsequent events support the inference that this was not the reason. The case was adjourned until September 15th, when the trial commenced.

In the interim, however, on August 25, 1941, the New York Daily Mirror began the publication of a vicious series of articles, restricted in distribution to Kings County. These articles were published every day thereafter, and continued for some time even after the trial commenced and while the jury was being selected. (These articles are referred to at R. 159, and are included in the sheaf of photostats submitted to this Court as part of the Record.) The following caption and preface of the first article is merely indicative of their lurid tenor:

> "MURDER INC. EXPIRES AS LEPKE GOES ON TRIAL
>
> Today, Arthur Mefford presents the first instalment of a thrilling new series of true-fact articles divulging the behind-the-scene workings of 'Murder, Inc.,' the Brooklyn killers—who murdered to order for rates as low as a dollar—and the crime-packed life story of the gang's boss Louis 'Lepke' Buchalter, who goes on trial for murder on Sept. 15. The murderous crew's deadly power has been broken by Brooklyn's crusading district attorney, William O'Dwyer, but the complete story of their machinations is revealed here for the first time in complete, authentic detail:"

On September 8, 1941, a new application for change of venue was made, based largely on these articles (R. 155-174). It was denied, without opinion (R. 175-176).

The Jury

It is not surprising that the impaneling of a jury was made difficult by such publications.

The unprecedented flow of inflammatory and prejudicial newspaper publicity, before the trial and during the selection of the jury, conditioned the community to believe that the petitioners were guilty. This resulted in a panel so infected with the virus of prejudice, that it was impossible to obtain a fair and impartial trial, as can be found conclusively from a cursory reading of the voir dire examinations of the talesmen. Seldom—if ever—could there be found such unanimity of expressions of prejudice in advance of a trial as was voiced by the talesmen drawn from every part of the community.

This prejudice was played upon, and advantage taken of, the newspaper "build up" which, even if not induced or engendered by the prosecutor, was not denounced or deplored by him. The prosecutor having successfully opposed a change of venue and having a Trial Judge who expressed himself as powerless to prevent this propaganda (although the simple expedient of a change of venue would have afforded a solution), no device was overlooked to obtain the benefit of its full effect upon the jury which had been exposed to its insidious and prejudicial force.

With the trial proceeding in the County of Kings, full use was made by the prosecutor of the newspaper stories, which had alleged the association of one or more of these petitioners with various notorious characters, by asking talesmen and witnesses about acquaintance with such mouth-filling names as, e.g. (R. 2925 et seq.), "Charlie the Bug", "Toots Feinstein", "Shimmy Salles", "Yeggy Feinberg", "Joe Strawberry", "Dimples Wilensky", "Cuppy", "Wolfie Goldis", "Dutch Schultz", for the implications to be derived therefrom, without any evidence of their connection with the case.

Between the 15th of September and the 24th of that month, 24 veniremen were examined. Of them, 3 had been excused because of acquaintanceship with the District Attorney or his associates; one had said he would not accept accomplice testimony. Only one juror had been accepted as satisfactory to both sides. Of the remaining 19, 14 had derived some impression from reading the newspapers. Of these, 10 had formed an impression adverse to the defendants, and of these 10, 2 had formed an impression that they were guilty.

Little wonder that the Court stated at the beginning of the afternoon session on September 24th (V. 460):

> "You are requested not to talk about the case. Let nobody talk to you about it. Please read nothing, especially The Mirror. Those Mirror articles which are still being published seem to be raising havoc with the jurors in this case, and there is no way of the court stopping them under the law." (Italics supplied.)

Even the Court was influenced by statements which had appeared in the newspapers. The record shows that after a talesman, Protter, had been examined, the Court called attention to the fact that Protter's brother was chairman of a committee which had investigated the murder of one Peter Panto. He said that it was possible that the murder of Peter Panto might at some time during the course of the trial be in some way connected or involved (V. 722). His statement was (V. 723):

> "The Court: The Court got its information from the newspapers, particularly the Brooklyn Daily Eagle publication, following the examination of this talesman."

Mr. Turkus, the prosecutor, remarked (V. 724):

> "Before you bring in the talesmen may I say that there was a newspaper article, and the newspapers have been replete with conferences with Marcy Protter and a certain group had with the District Attorney in connection with the Peter Panto case. As a matter of fact, in a newspaper which was printed over recess there was a statement made that it was divulged by the District Attorney, Mr. O'Dwyer, in proceeding with the Panto investigation, that the defendant Weiss was implicated in the slaying of Peter Panto. That was in the press over recess. There have been many such articles. There were many articles in the press too, prior to this case, in connection with the alleged participation of the defendant Weiss in the Peter Panto killing. Now, this prospective talesman said that the reason——" (Italics supplied.)

The prosecuting attorney interposed a challenge to Protter both because of his residence and on the ground of bias and was sustained on the latter ground. Defense counsel objected, and moved for a mistrial (V. 725):

> "Mr. Talley: In view of the fact that the defendant Weiss was brought into this matter by the Assistant District Attorney two or three days ago, the defendant Weiss in connection with the Panto case, I want to note a further exception to your Honor's reference to that case as being extremely prejudicial to the defendant Weiss. The same newspaper that printed this story last week will have ample opportunity to print the story of your Honor's reference to the Panto case in connection with this talesman. I want it noted, in view of the fact that I am appearing for Weiss, that the exception which has already been expressed to your Honor's remarks likewise be joined in by me."

• • • • • • •

"Mr. Rosenthal: In behalf of the defendant Capone, in view of this discussion which has been now engaged in, in view of the District Attorney's statement of what is alleged in the newspapers to have been divulged by Mr. O'Dwyer's office to the newspapers, and in view of your Honor's statement, I now ask for a mistrial in so far as the defendant Capone is concerned. And I renew my motion for a severance, which was heretofore made."

The Record shows that Protter would have made a fair and impartial juror (see infra, pp. 22-23).

As an indication of the temper of the community, the sworn statement of Mr. Stevens, the first juror to be accepted, and who actually served, is most significant. The record shows (V. 369-370):

"By Mr. Climenko.

"Q. Mr. Stevens, did any of your office associates attempt to prejudice you against any defendant in this case? A. I would not say they attempted to prejudice. The remarks they started to make, if I had interpreted them as such, might have prejudiced me; in other words, if I had accepted what they were saying as facts and absorbed them as such, I could have possibly been prejudiced.

• • • • • • •

"Q. The statements that you heard under those circumstances were prejudicial against that particular defendant; is that correct? A. That is correct, yes."

He said further (V. 387):

"My feeling is this: that frankly I would rather not serve on this jury, but if I am called upon to serve, it seems to me such a terrific responsibility that I can't understand why people who——

"Q. Who know nothing about it? A. Can attempt to influence a man who might have to make such a grave decision."

The record discloses that the Trial Court, instead of being careful to mitigate petitioners' obvious predicament, took the opposite course, and added to the almost insurmountable obstacle in the path of a fair trial by his rulings on challenges for bias. These rulings extinguished whatever chance petitioners may possibly have had of an impartial consideration of the evidence.

The Trial Judge in his zeal to force the selection of a jury under these adverse conditions, became impatient with and critical of both jurors and defense counsel.

When, for example, the prospective juror Samuel Cone honestly testified (V. 328-330) that he would not accept testimony of an accomplice even if it were corroborated, the Court, dismissing him, said (V. 330): "I am sustaining the objection because I don't think the man is mentally fit to sit on a jury." Joseph O. Herrick, another juror, testified that he was acquainted with the prosecutor Mr. Turkus and that his honest opinion was that this might prejudice him because of his belief in that gentleman's integrity. The Court said (V. 406): "I sustain the challenge, upon the ground that the man is wholly unfit to have a job as a juror. Get out." When defense counsel attempted to object to this strictures, the Court said (V. 406): "Sit down please. This gentleman will leave at once and there will be perfect order until he gets out of this room."

It requires little imagination to recognize the effect of the Court's language upon the remaining prospective jurors. No man likes to be told in a public tribunal that the expression of an honest opinion is a sign of mental unfitness. Nor is it. Objection was made by counsel, who said (V. 406-407):

"I wish to have the record show that I object on behalf of all counsel to your Honor's statement to the talesman who has just been excused, upon the ground > that it has a tendency to prevent a fair expression of opinion on the part of talesmen, and it will be difficult, and I think it makes it difficult for us, to get the fair and impartial jury that we are seeking."

Not only did the Court become impatient with the talesmen, but he rebuked defense counsel for exercising their legal right of peremptory challenge. The Court said (V. 959-960):

> "We are going to work late. I am not prepared to say how late. That depends upon future conduct. If capricious conduct in peremptory challenges is indulged in on either side it will have a bearing upon the length of time in which the Court will work."
>
> "By the ardency of the protest just rendered by defense counsel, the Court is prompted to say something it had not intended to say, and that is, that this morning has been wasted by the excusing of two obviously competent and unbiased jurors. The Court, in its opinion, views these as capricious exercise of peremptory challenges.
>
> "Mr. Climenko: To which remarks the defense takes exception.
>
> "The Court: Which will do you no good whatever, either now or at any time."

When counsel objected to the observations of the Court in respect of a juryman's alleged answer to a question, he was unjustly accused of "fighting back with the Court on rulings" (V. 864) and was admonished by the Court to proceed expeditiously, as time was being wasted and "it is becoming a public scandal" (V. 864).

Obviously, these comments were so worded as to place upon the defense the onus for deliberately delaying the process of the selection of the jury, which was actually caused by the prejudice in the community. At every opportunity the Court accused the defense of wasting time and indulging in dilatory tactics (e. g., V. 847, 1066, 864, 959-960). Although the Court was prompt to accuse the defense of delaying the selection of the jury, a cursory reading of the record will demonstrate how much time was consumed by the Trial Court in asking irrelevant questions of almost every talesman called for examination (e. g., V. 926-927, 929, 778, 779-780, 697, 729).

At the commencement of the trial, the panel consisted of 250 talesmen. It was found necessary to draw a panel of an additional 100 talesmen, which was practically exhausted by the time the jury was finally selected. A number of these talesmen were excused by the Court because of expressed prejudice against petitioners. Peremptory challenges had to be exercised by the defense directed to talesmen who, although they denied that they had formed an opinion, nevertheless disclosed that they had read newspaper items about the case, or the series of articles which appeared in the New York Mirror.*

A "special jury" was ordered drawn for this case. To this no objection was interposed by petitioners. That failure to object has been held by the Court of Appeals to have constituted a consent to waive appellate review of the rulings of the Trial Court upon challenges for actual bias. As a result, petitioners were deprived of any consideration of those factors which made impossible the selection of a fair and impartial jury. The New York Court of Appeals has thus held that New York State provides no corrective process in the case of a "special jury" even though tainted with actual bias. (That subject is discussed in the Argument, II, infra.) Talesman after talesman asserted that so strong an opinion had been formed from newspaper reading that it could not be put aside. This was no "special jury" at all within the meaning of the statute. This jury was selected only after repeated efforts of the Trial Judge to induce talesmen to abjure prejudice whether or not actually entertained. It is certainly a matter of fair doubt that any informed resident of Kings County was entirely free of at least a subconscious prejudice in this case by reason of the unprecedented propaganda

* E. g., Talesmen Pape (V. 99, 108), Camachi (V. 338, 356), Ryder (V. 1065, 1075, 1083), Butler (V. 1429-1431, 1437-1438), Robert (V. 1776).

Against this background must be viewed the action of the Trial Judge on challenges for cause, which will be subdivided as follows:

(a) Overruling defense challenges for cause;

(b) Sustaining prosecution challenges for cause, where none existed; and

(c) Seating a juror who was challenged for cause after defense had exhausted all their peremptory challenges.

(a)

Defense challenges overruled

The talesmen John R. Hamilton (V. 162, 175, 177), Samuel F. Strongin (V. 679, 681, 684-685), James F. Nagle (V. 844-846), Edward Groden (V. 878-879, 881), Paul S. Batterson (V. 946, 948), John J. Rose (V. 1014, 1012-1013, 1018), Joseph J. Flanagan (V. 1411-1413), Clement S. Jacobus (V. 1834-1837) and John J. Dunphy (V. 1840-1841) stated, upon examination: that they were prejudiced against one particular defendant or the group with which he was reputed to have been associated; that this prejudice was created by radio reports and the reading of newspapers since being called to serve as jurors;* that this prejudice would either remain during the hearing and consideration of the evidence in the case and could not be removed, or that it would require an effort to disregard it; and that the prejudice could only be removed or dissipated by the introduction of proof by the defendants or someone on their behalf, or that because of it less proof would be required from the prosecution in order to convict. These latter expressions gain significance when it is realized that they were made by the talesmen with the knowledge that a defendant need not prove his innocence, and that no unfavorable inference may be drawn from his failure to testify (e. g., V. 158, 164, 175; 681; 848, 854-855; 876, 880; 937, 944).

* The Trial Court had admonished the talesmen not to read any newspaper items relative to the case. Nevertheless, some of the talesmen continued to read a series of articles which appeared in the Daily Mirror (V. 1258, 1261-1266, 1026-1029).

 A detailed analysis of the examination on voir dire of these talesmen may be found in the Petition on behalf of Capone, pp. 66-93.

The refusal to sustain the challenge in Groden's case is startling since he said that he worked for and was a "booster" of William O'Dwyer, the District Attorney, and that he was positive that O'Dwyer's office would not bring about an indictment unless they were sure (V. 877-878); Strongin stated that he lived near what he called the "hang-out" of the so-called combination and that he was prejudiced against those individuals, among whom was included Strauss, a co-defendant who had been executed (V. 683-684, 670-671); and Koehler stated that he knew "Buggsy" Goldstein, a notorious character who had been executed and with whom an attempt was made to link the defendant Capone (V. 1616-1617).

Though these rulings manifestly made more difficult defense efforts to obtain an unbiased jury, the gravity of the prejudice instinct therein is accentuated when comparison is made with the rulings on challenges for cause by the prosecution.

(b)

Prosecution challenges sustained

Benjamin Protter had lived in France until the early part of 1939 (V. 619, 651); he knew none of the numerous names mentioned as being connected with the case (V. 652, 645, 620, 621, 640, 624, 622-623, cf. 637); and his state of mind was such that he could be a fair and impartial juror (V. 728, 626-627, 631). He was tentatively selected as a juror, but on the following day a challenge by the prosecution was sustained, at which time the Court and prosecutor made detailed statements concerning the alleged activities of the talesman's brother, an attorney, in the investigation of the murder of one Peter Panto, involving the Brooklyn waterfront (V. 722-724). The tales-man testified under oath that he had never heard of the name Peter Panto (V. 631); that he did not even know whether his brother ever had a criminal case (V. 638, 621, 653), or whether he represented any waterfront interests; and that, in fact, he had been only distantly friendly with his brother, had political differences with him, and that the usual cordiality existing between brothers was lacking (V. 726-727, 621, 632, 631, 652, 638). Nevertheless, the prosecution's challenge for cause was sustained (V. 728).

Walter C. Petterson was excused upon a challenge by the prosecution (V. 1149, 1151) for the reason that he stated that it "would be hard for me to believe the testimony of a confessed accomplice" (V. 1147), despite his assurance that he would follow the instructions of the Court as to the weight to be given an accomplice's testimony and as to corroboration thereof (V. 1150, 1149). Even though the talesman's reply was a correct statement of the law—that an accomplice's testimony should be viewed with suspicion and caution (People v. Kress, 284 N. Y. 452, 459)—the prosecution's challenge was sustained. This ruling should be compared with that which relates to the talesman Nagle, where a defense challenge for cause was overruled (V. 868) though he had said that he would accept "very reluctantly" the instructions of the Court that corroboration of accomplice testimony was required to convict and that no inference of guilt could be drawn from a defendant's failure to take the stand (V. 841, 855).

Samuel Silfen was excused upon the prosecution's challenge (V. 1157, 1160). He stated that the name Buchalter was familiar to him as that of a dentist whom he did not know personally, but whom his mother-in-law visited (V. 1156). The relationship between his mother-in-law and this dentist was solely that of dentist and patient (V. 1156). Beyond that, neither his mother-in-law nor he knew anything more about this dentist. Nevertheless, the prosecution's challenge was sustained. This ruling should be compared with the ruling on the defense challenge to the talesman Groden (supra, pp. 21-22).

Benjamin Cohn was excused upon a prosecution challenge for cause (V. 1645, 1648) when he stated that he had heard of the name of Martin "Buggsy" Goldstein and the name of Gesule Capone, which was no more than a name to him (V. 1642). He also stated that he was not particularly in favor of capital punishment, but said that regardless of his feelings, he would follow the instructions of the Court (V. 1646, 1644-1648).

Harry Rosenblatt was also excused on a prosecution challenge (V. 1748, 1747) when he stated that about eight years previously, while with a group of friends at a night club, he was casually introduced to Buchalter; that Buchalter did not make any impression on him; that he was not a member of and did not drink with Buchalter's party; that he was merely introduced and that was all, and that he was not prejudiced (V. 1745-1747). This ruling should also be compared with the Court's ruling as to the talesman Groden (supra, pp 21, 22).

Albert Rosenthal (V. 539) was a fellow fraternity member of Mr. Wegman, one of the counsel for the defendant Buchalter, but he had not seen him for a long time (V. 539). He stated that he would not intentionally favor Mr. Wegman; in fact, he might bend over backwards (V. 542, 543). For no discernible reason, the Trial Court accused the talesman of hostility (V. 544). This situation should be compared with that in the case of the O'Dwyer "booster", talesman Groden.

(c)

The last three jurors

The following jurors were impanelled after all peremptory challenges allowed to the defense had been exhausted (V. 1928-1930).

John J. Rorke (V. 1928, 1982, 1918, 1900), a nephew of a police inspector assigned to traffic (V. 1918, 1921-1923), had been called as a talesman in another murder case (People v. Maione and Abbandando) in which counsel for petitioner Capone had appeared for defendant Maione, and Mr. Turkus, the prosecutor here, had appeared for the People (V. 1923, 1919-1920, 1963). Rorke admitted that during his voir dire examination in the earlier case, he had heard mentioned the name of one of the petitioners (presumably Capone) in connection with that of Maione (V. 1929, 1919, 1923-1927); that he had there been peremptorily challenged by defense counsel (V. 1923-1924, 1921, 1922); and that he had followed the developments of that trial in the newspapers to ascertain the outcome (V. 1920). Nevertheless a defense challenge for cause was overruled (V. 1928).*

William C. Links (V. 1959), a radio producer, had also been examined as a talesman in the Maione case (V. 1960-1961). At that time he had stated that he had been called into consultation with reference to a radio program called "Mr. District Attorney" (V. 1960). He had heard the names Maione, Abbandando and Strauss mentioned in that case (V. 1961), and had been excused from the jury by the prosecutor (V. 1961). He, too, followed the newspapers "to find out what became of the case on the last day of the trial" (V. 1961).

* Although during the course of his examination, a conference was held at the Bench (which is not reported in the Record, V. 1921), it is significant to note that the prosecutor stood silently by at this challenge, knowing at the time that he would adduce testimony that petitioner Capone was allegedly associated with Maione and Abbandando. When Magoon was on the stand, the prosecutor asked whether he knew Maione, Abbandando, petitioner Capone and numerous other persons. Upon an affirmative reply, the prosecutor further asked whether the named persons were associated and what the name of the association was. Magoon answered that they were; that the association was known as the "Combination" (R. 2423-5). That this testimony would be adduced, counsel for petitioner could not reasonably anticipate, as Maione was in no wise connected with the Rosen case.

 The prosecutor stated (V. 1987, 1960) he had excused Links in the Maione case because he felt that, by reason of Links' connection with the "Mr. District Attorney" radio program, it was not altogether proper that Links serve as a juror. But here, when all the defense peremptory challenges had been exhausted, Links was satisfactory to the prosecution.

The discussion in the footnote concerning Rorke is equally applicable to Links.

John E. Coleman (V. 1983) had read quite extensively about this case in the "World-Telegram" and the "News," but claimed he would be impartial (V. 1987, 1990, 1993). As all defense challenges had been exhausted (V. 1928-1930) the defense rested on the record (V. 1995).

These last three jurors were selected after petitioners had exhausted all of their peremptory challenges. Of the thirty peremptory challenges allowed petitioners collectively, ten were exercised because of the Trial Court's refusal to sustain challenges for cause; eleven because of expressed prejudice against petitioners, with the reservation that it would not interfere with a determination; and one other (Myron Gillespie) who, although he had read all about petitioners and the instant case, and protested that it had left no impression (V. 1295, 1340), nevertheless testified as follows (V. 1341):

> "Q. Well, have you formed an impression with respect to the defendants, irrespective of this case? A. To be honest with you, I find it a tough question to answer." *

Nothing could more clearly demonstrate the prejudice which affected the jurors, even before the first witness was sworn, than the following excerpt from the record relating to Juror No. 9, Mr. Butt, the Vice-President of a Bank (V. 1981-1982):

> "The Court: Before selecting the alternates, of course, the oath will have to be administered to the jury. This question is asked of all twelve members of the jury: Since you were tentatively accepted by

* This talesman insisted he would be impartial (V. 1309-1310) even though he had found a body in the rear of his building which he attributed to "Murder, Inc." (V. 1301), had found the dead body of Mrs. "Legs" Diamond in one of his buildings (V. 1302), and was well acquainted with Mr. Moorehead, the Chief of the Indictment Bureau in the Kings County District Attorney's office (V. 1339-1340).

both sides at the conclusion of your examination, you have been repeatedly cautioned by the Court not to discuss the case, not to let anybody talk to you about it, not to read the newspapers or otherwise read about it, not to listen to the radio about it. I am going to ask each one of you gentlemen individually if you have strictly followed those instructions.

"(Mr. Stevens, Mr. Prentice, Mr. Murphy, Mr. Day, Mr. Gill, Mr. Cummings, Mr. Hall, Mr. Cross, Mr. Butt, Mr. Edghill, and Mr. Rorke each answered individually, 'I have.')

"The Court: Mr. Link, I do not have to ask you; you were only accepted this morning.

"Mr. Rosenthal: May I suggest to the Court that one other question be asked: Has anything happened in any way that would change any of the answers they have given?

"The Court: The question is now: Has anything happened to change your viewpoint in regard to the case in the meantime, to change your attitude as impartial jurors? If so, raise your hand.

"(Juror No. 9, Mr. Butt, raises his hand.)

"The Court: This will have to be at the bench, and not in the hearing of the jury.

"(Counsel for the defense and Mr. Turkus appear before the bench with Mr. Butt.)

(Mr. Butt was questioned by the Court without the hearing of the jury, as follows:)

By the Court.

"Q. What has happened? A. There has just been a great conviction on my part towards prejudice in this case.

"Q. Based upon what? A. Based upon the various questions that have been asked in court.

"Q. Nothing outside of the court-room? A. Nothing outside of the court-room, no, sir.

"Q. You know that the questions that are asked jurors or talesmen do not indicate in any way the guilt or innocence of the accused. Are you sure this is not just a design to go back to the savings bank? A. No, sir, it is not. It is more important. I realize it, too. There has been great prejudice in my mind about the case. All last night I thought about it. I have not talked about it to anybody.

> "Q. Do you mean it would prevent you from rendering a fair and impartial verdict? A. I am afraid so." (Italics supplied.)

Butt was excused.

It is certainly doubtful, then, whether any member of this jury started out entirely free of at least a subconscious prejudice. And there is at least doubt that the exposure to this prejudice did not continue after the trial had begun and while the jury was supposedly segregated and immunized from further such assaults,—cf. R. 3760.

The Physical Trappings of the Trial

The trial then commenced. Petitioners were brought into the court room manacled to police officers. The process of unshackling took place in the presence of the jury and after the jurors had taken their places in the jury box (R. 766-768). The defendants were seated in court surrounded on all sides by officers. Objection made by counsel for the defense to this procedure was disregarded (R. 764-765). Witnesses for the prosecution, when on the witness stand, were surrounded by police and court officers (R. 764). When defense counsel moved for a mistrial because of this show of force, the Court, in denying the motion, partly described the scene as follows (R. 688-689):

> "The Court: In the court room, behind or at the end of one of the rear corners of the jury box, are two men with badges whom I assume to be detectives. One is against the side window and one is directly in the corner. There are two court officers in their proper places, one directly behind the witness, another one to his left, at the steps. You have your record. It calls for no ruling. Of course, I deny the motion for a mistrial."

It needs no imagination to follow the insidious suggestion to the jury. Rosen was murdered because he threatened to inform. The witness is now an informer. Because of that the witness must be protected against the individuals on trial.* Therefore the individuals on trial must necessarily have been the murderers of Rosen.

The Conduct of the Trial Judge

Throughout the trial, the Court's constant participation in, and interruptions of, the examination of witnesses and his interpretations of their answers, served to bolster the case for the prosecution and to belittle the defense. Solely as illustrative of this, typical instances are quoted:

The Court more than once came to the rescue of the People's witnesses by endeavoring to excuse flagrant perjury. For example, Tannenbaum had been forced to admit that he had signed and sworn to a false affidavit when charged with murder in Sullivan County, New York (R. 2323-2330). The Trial Judge thereupon interposed a question suggesting that this was justifiable perjury. This is shown by the following excerpt from Tannenbaum's redirect examination (R. 2358):

> "Q. (By the district attorney) At any rate, at the time you entered the plea of not guilty and signed Defendants' Exhibit 2, you were then a defendant resisting conviction on the indictment therein alleged, namely, the killing of one Irving Ashkenas, is that right? A. Yes.
>
> "The Court: You were then fighting to save your own life, is that it?
> "The Witness: Yes, sir."

On other occasions, the Trial Judge made repeated efforts to save the People's witnesses from damaging admissions which would militate against their credibility. A striking illustration appears during the cross-examination of the witness Bernstein when defense counsel inquired into his knowledge that an automobile stolen by him was to be used in connection with the murder. He was asked by the Court (R. 1181):

---

* On one occasion, the prosecutor asked (R. 687): "Is the objection to the protection of the witness?"

> "Q. Then the impression was, if the car was found, it was stolen for the purpose of stripping? A. Yes, sir.
> "Q. And not for the purpose of committing any other crime? A. Yes, sir."

Defense counsel then inquired (R. 1181):

> "Q. What were you trying to conceal, if the car was found, so as to make it look as if it was only for stripping and not for any other purpose?"

Thereupon the Court prevented a response by interrupting and asking (R. 1182):

> "Q. (Interrupting) Just answer the next question yes or no—Did you have a suspicion as to what Strauss wanted the car for?"

Counsel objected, stating (R. 1182):

> "Mr. Rosenthal: I object.
> "The Court: The objection is sustained. I thought you wanted that evidence.
> "Mr. Rosenthal: I don't want words put in the witness' mouth. I wanted him to tell me, not have your Honor ask him a question which would call for yes or no—I want him to tell the jury the reason. I don't want the reason furnished.
> "Mr. Turkus: I object to that.
> "The Court: It does not penetrate the Court's skin. Go ahead."

After some sparring without any responsive answer by the witness, the Court again intervened (R. 1184):

> "By the Court.
> "Q. Was that the reason? A. I did not know there was to be a murder or I would never have him take out the radio of the car."

So at last the witness answered the unanswered question in the way the Court intended it should be answered.

On the vitally important issue of the "time table", almost invariably the Court gratuitously protected and bolstered the People's witnesses adversely to the petitioners (R. 1974-1975, 1972-1973, 1964, 1658, 2173, 2179). For instance, during the cross-examination of the People's witness Berger by Mr. Barshay, the following occurred (R. 1974-1975):

"Q. And the best time you can give us is 9:30? A. Between 9:30 and 10. I left that place 9:30, to the best of my recollection.

• • • • • •

"Q. How much time did you spend in Brownsville near the vicinity of Sackman and Livonia, Saratoga and Livonia, and Rosen's candy store, all together?

"Mr. Turkus: I object to it as already answered to the best of his recollection.

"The Court: His testimony shows it is all guesswork.

"Mr. Barshay: He has fixed himself the time as between 9:30 and 10.

"The Court: Pardon me, he has not fixed the time. The Court won't discuss that.

"Q. Mr. Witness, did you say between 9:30 and 10?

"The Court: I know what he said, but the Court knows it means nothing." (Italics supplied.)

"Mr. Barshay: I take an exception to the Court's remarks.

"The Court: Now proceed.

"Mr. Barshay: And I ask for the withdrawal of a juror and the declaration of a mistrial.

"The Court: On what ground?

"Mr. Barshay: On the ground of prejudice, when the Court said that does not mean anything.

"The Court: You mean to have a withdrawal of a juror because the Court will not agree with you that guessing as to time is accurate?

"Mr. Barshay: No, sir, that is not my point.
"The Court: I think it is. Denied.
"Mr. Barshay: Exception, sir." *

The Court constantly accused defendants' counsel of "manufacturing a record" (R. 3870, 3867), of attempting to make a "padded record" (R. 3865), and of being "disorderly" (R. 3869, 3868).

The Conduct of the Prosecutor

The prosecutor must have known that the testimony of the widow and children of the deceased was so fantastic as to be beyond the Trial Court's considerable capacity for credence. Yet they were put before the jury to enhance, by the sympathy which their bereavement naturally induced, the prejudice against petitioners who were accused as the cause of their sorrow. Weeks later, their testimony was stricken from the record (R. 3525-3534), but by that time their appearance on the witness stand had had full effect on the jury.

Time after time officials of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers of America were brought into the court room in the custody of police officials, and placed before the jury to be identified by the witnesses—but to no legitimate purpose whatsoever, for these officials were not contemplated witnesses, were not charged with complicity, and their identity was not in the least in dispute. The real reason? It may have had something to do with the then

* Additional examples similar to the instances just quoted are to be found at R. 2073-2075; 2135-2138; 2170-2171; 2951-2952; 2955; 3229-3230; 2967-2968; 3025-3026; 1883; 654-659; 1209; 2006; 2603; 2131; 1273; 1511; 1512; 1187-1188, 1113-1114. There are many others.

Both Court and prosecutor sought refuge in the magic word "repetitious" to bar the right of proper cross-examination, the Court holding that if the prosecutor had originally asked the question, it would be repetitious to cross-examine the witness thereon and elicit, if possible, a contradictory reply, which would thereby tend to destroy the witness' credibility. The instances are many. A few are referred to: R. 1131-1134; 1139; 1169; 1175; 1176; 1177-1178; 1180; 1194; 1195; 1198-1200; 1201-1202; 1227-1228; 2532; 2586-2589. See, also, pp. 66-67, infra.

current campaign of the District Attorney for election as Mayor of the City of New York, or it may have been for the effect upon the jury of seeing that these union officials were apparently in custody.

The prosecutor's summation added fuel to the flames of prejudice and passion. For example:

No one disputed that Joseph Rosen had been murdered; that was at most in issue only technically. Nevertheless there had been paraded before the jury all the gory details; and lest the macabre tale as related by the respectable witnesses—not one of whom connected petitioners with the crime—should lack some horrifying force, the prosecutor dwelt upon it ad nauseam in summation, and coupled his review and embellishment with repeated references to the absence of contradiction of these undisputed facts, thus subtly and by indirection commenting on the failure of the defendants to testify.*

To overcome the natural reluctance of a jury to convict on the testimony of witnesses of the stripe of Bernstein, Rubin, Berger, Tannenbaum and Magoon, obviously given to buy absolution for their own crimes, the prosecutor assured the jury (R. 3830):

> "Don't you worry as to what is going to happen to the witnesses in this case. Don't let anybody fool you with Christmas present nonsense. Gentlemen, the courts have confidence in the integrity and common sense of juries and jurors. Have a little faith in the integrity of the Court and the prosecutor as to what will happen to witnesses. Right now they are too valu-

* E.g. (R. 3785-86): "he saw a ghastly sight. There on the floor of this little candy store lay the proprietor, Joseph Rosen, flat on his back, with his arms outstretched, his face, neck and shirt were drenched with blood, pools of blood flowed from the body in the direction of the counter. Scattered newspapers were strewn on the floor. The body was at an angle; he was facing toward the rear; feet facing toward the front and side, legs spread apart. The eyes of the corpse were wide open, staring toward the ceiling. That is paragraph number one. Has that been proven beyond the shadow of doubt? Is there one person in the court room that can deny each and every fact therein stated has been proven?"

able pieces of bric-a-brac to be dealt with as Lepke, Weiss and Capone would want. Let us use common sense here."

Some further examples of his transgressions of the bounds of fair summation are set forth in the margin.* These were sanctioned and approved by the Trial Judge. The question is whether these were merely "regrettable", as was said by the Chief Judge of the Court of Appeals, or were calculated to deprive petitioners, as was said below by Rippey, J., "of any remote outside chance of any fair consideration by the jury".

---

* R. 3788: Reference to race; R. 3794: Appeal to the court room audience; R. 3802: Charging defense counsel with an effort to confuse and "finagle" the jury; R. 3803-04: Stating that defense counsel were paid with tainted money; asserting his own great integrity and making the issue to be decided by the jury the integrity of the District Attorney, saying that if the defendants are not guilty the District Attorney and his staff should be tarred and feathered, run out of town on a rail and put in jail, and that every lawyer in the court room (necessarily including defense counsel) knew the defendants were guilty; R. 3810: Characterizing one of defense counsel as "the wiliest of lawyers", and insinuating a conspiracy among counsel for these defendants and counsel for other defendants for ulterior purposes; R. 3814-15: Offering his own testimony as to facts; R. 3820: Accusing defense counsel of sabotaging investigation; R. 3821: Injecting again the issue of his own integrity; R. 3828: Denying there had been police surveillance of Buchalter, thus abusing the more emphatically the harm done defendants by the suppression of the police reports (cf. Argument, III, infra); R. 3829: Charging defense counsel with desiring to have the witness Bernstein "cut up"; R. 3830: Again injecting the issue of his integrity and the integrity of the Court as assurance that the accomplice witnesses would not receive absolution (as a matter of fact, they later did); R. 3845: Referring to an exhibit not in evidence, and criticizing a private in the army for wearing his uniform; R. 3850: Referring to a prospective juror (not chosen) who had seen Buchalter in a night club; saying that defendants got a fair and impartial trial because "they got an indictment; they got nine lawyers * * *"; R. 3856: Saying no decent man would stand for the defendants; R. 3859-60: Saying it would be monstrous and unthinkable that any verdict other than guilty of murder in the first degree would be returned.

On the motion for a change of venue this prosecutor was quoted (R. 111) as having said: "I don't need any evidence or witnesses to try this case, all I need is the indictment and a summation." While he denied so stating, the Record evidences the accuracy of the quotation.

The Court's Charge

The Court's charge capped the climax. It is discussed in the Argument (infra, pp. 67-75). The charge was both a condemnation of petitioners and an apologia for the prosecution.

For example: At one point (R. 3903-3904) he let slip the phrase, "When rogues fall out, it is a wise man's delight".*

Referring to the attack upon the credibility of the witness Magoon, who, when he was asked on cross-examination whether he ever lied in his life, replied, "Only little white lies" (R. 2514-2515), the Court said (R. 3898-3899):

> "Now, I want to take up a little matter with you. I heard it in the summation of one of the counsel, and I feel that I really should see that none of you is misled by it. Much was said about a foolish remark —it might better be characterized as a fool remark— by one of the witnesses to the effect that he had never told an important lie. I would not specifically allude to this if so much had not been made of it in the argument. I charge you not to let the decision of so important a case as this turn on a question of mockery or ridicule, I mean your reaction to mockery or ridicule, of a specific witness for a stupid answer such as that. This case is too important to be decided on the basis of ridicule. It must be decided on a basis of reason. I dare say there is not one of us who has not at some time or other made a foolish break which caused him to lose face due to the ridicule of others; but ridicule, gentlemen of the jury, is a childish trait. This case has to be decided by grown-up serious men, who will decide it upon an adequate comprehension of the record. Ridicule is an emotional reaction. It works contrary to reason. It is a bad substitute for reason. It is primeval. That is why I say it is childish. It is something that appeals to and activates the immature mind, but does not and should not affect intelligent men whose minds are mature."

---

* After exception had been taken (in the absence of the jury), the Court, when the jury was recalled, said (R. 3989) that he had not intended to call the defendants names. The damage had already been done.

Specification of the Errors to be Urged

Petitioners urge that error was committed to their manifest prejudice in the proceedings below whereby they were deprived of due process of law in that:

I. The trial was held in a poisoned atmosphere in which a fair and impartial jury could not be and was not obtained, and a fair trial could not be and was not had. In a situation where the prejudice against petitioners was bound to affect the jurors, the physical trappings of the trial were such as to amplify and vitalize that prejudice.

II. The Court of Appeals should have reviewed the action of the Trial Court which prevented the impanelling of an impartial jury by its rulings upon challenges for actual bias. The right to such review was not waived by petitioners' consent to be tried before a "special jury". The rulings of the Trial Court prevented the impanelling of a fair and impartial jury; and an impartial jury is essential to due process of law. In this case, the State of New York failed to supply a corrective process for this denial of due process.

III. Evidence relevant and material to the defense, in the possession of the prosecution, was suppressed by the State. Petitioners were thus deprived of a fair opportunity to present their defense. They were likewise deprived of an opportunity of adducing proof that evidence offered by the prosecution was in fact perjurious.

IV. The Trial Court's usurpation of the province of the jury by the resolution of issues of fact against petitioners in its charge to the jury as well as by comments during the course of the trial, the attitude of the Court toward the defense throughout the trial, and the summation of the prosecutor wherein, among other unprofessional things, he made improper promises to the jury concerning the future treatment of confessed criminals who had testified for the prosecution, and wherein he purported to give testimony, all combined to deprive petitioners of the right to fundamental fairness in the trial.

V. Petitioners were not accorded a trial by an impartial judge and an impartial jury; and the State, through the prosecutor, misused its power.

VI. In the case of petitioner Capone, the denial of a severance of the trial. The argument on this subject is contained in the supplemental brief submitted on behalf of that petitioner.

ARGUMENT

*Was the trial so grossly unfair as to leave the defendants without even a remote outside chance of any free consideration by the jury of their defenses?

Due Process of Law

Although this Court has refrained from defining comprehensively the concept of "due process of law" (Twining v. New Jersey, 211 U. S. 78), it has uniformly adhered to the minimal standard that the accused must be accorded a fair opportunity to meet the case of the prosecution. Twining v. New Jersey, 211 U. S. 78; Tumey v. Ohio, 273 U. S. 510; Adams v. United States, 317 U. S. 269; Glasser v. United States, 315 U. S. 60; Pyle v. Kansas, 317 U. S. (Dec. 7, 1942).

A State is at liberty to prescribe the mode of procedure by which this opportunity to defend will be afforded. Hooker v. Los Angeles, 188 U. S. 314, 318; Hurtado v. California, 110 U. S. 516. It may choose one method in preference to another, despite novelty or departure from tradition, so long as the essential requirements are met. Cf. Palko v. Connecticut, 302 U. S. 319.

* Dissenting opinion of Rippey, J. (R. 4090).

Though the method chosen by the State meets the minimal standards, if in the actual administration of the law these criteria are disregarded, the defendant is deprived of his constitutional rights, and a judgment of conviction cannot stand.

In Brown v. Mississippi, 297 U. S. 278, the Court said (p. 286):

> "• • • The due process clause requires 'that state action, whether through one agency or another, shall be consistent with the fundamental principles of liberty and justice which lie at the base of all our civil and political institutions.' Hebert v. Louisiana, 272 U. S. 312, 316."

A primary requisite of due process of law is that the trial be before an unbiased and impartial tribunal. The Judge, it has been said, must have no interest other than the pursuit of justice (Adams v. U. S., 317 U. S. 269, 275, citing Tumey v. Ohio, 273 U. S. 510). The jury must be impartial and competent to afford a fair hearing (Jordan v. Massachusetts, 225 U. S. 167; Brown v. New Jersey, 175 U. S. 172; Hayes v. Missouri, 120 U. S. 68; Reynolds v. United States, 98 U. S. 145; Glasser v. United States, 315 U. S. 60, 85-86; Patton v. United States, 281 U. S. 276).

In Moore v. Dempsey, 261 U. S. 86, this Court, employing in part the language of Frank v. Mangum, 237 U. S. 309, stated (261 U. S. 90-91):

> "If in fact a trial is dominated by a mob so that there is an actual interference with the course of justice, there is a departure from due process of law; and that 'if the State, supplying no corrective process, carries into execution a judgment of death or imprisonment based upon a verdict thus produced by mob domination, the State deprives the accused of his life or liberty without due process of law.'"

The minimal requirements of the constitutional guarantee of due process of law are:

(1) A fair and impartial jury, free from influences extraneous to the proof adduced at the trial. This means just what it says; that when the jurors enter the jury box, their minds will not have been prejudiced, surely not poisoned against the defendants. The influence of newspaper articles and the failure of the State to provide remedial process raise the question of due process. Not only this, but the defendants are entitled to a jury that will throughout the trial remain free from improper influences extraneous to the proof. Thus, if the Court is unfair or the State is unfair, if, for instance, the Court prompts witnesses or condones perjury, or decides questions for the jury, or if the State, through the prosecutor, makes improper statements to the jury, deceitfully promises punishment of criminal witnesses, or if both the Court and the State surround the proceedings with a show of force which may affect the jury, all of such things may well tend to subject the jury to improper influences, so that it cannot be said that the defendants are tried by a fair and impartial jury.

(2) An impartial Judge. No contention is made here that this Court should consider mere error as a deprivation of due process of law. However, if errors are so gross, so continuous, so regular and so marked, that the record shows that the Court itself is prejudiced, the result might well be that the defendants have not been accorded due process of law. This may be due to prejudice by the Trial Judge or it may be due to overzealousness, or it may be that the Judge has made up his mind that the defendants are guilty and imposes his views upon the jury. It can hardly be questioned that even though a record seems to be simon-pure, yet, if a Judge had received a bribe, a verdict perforce would be set aside. On the other hand, there may be no bribery; the Judge may honestly have a fixed point of view from the outset and the record may show this, not because of any error of law into which the Court may fall, but because regularly and from the beginning of the trial, his rulings were such as to show that he was prejudiced. We have already indicated his inconsistent and discriminatory rulings on the challenges to jurors. The dissenting opinion of Judge Loughran* recited facts which show that the Trial Judge practically instructed the jury that it should not pay too much attention to the inconsistencies in the time-table which the defendants claimed upset the prosecution's theory; that the Judge practically told the jury that the prosecution's witnesses had had no chance to collaborate on their stories; that the Judge refused to admit letters of supreme importance on this issue; that he put words in the mouth of witnesses; and that he condoned perjuries. All of these matters will be taken up hereafter. The point we make here is that the record shows that the Judge was not impartial.

(3) Fairness in the use of the State's power. If the State, through the prosecutor, withholds or suppresses evidence, or if it uses unfair means to influence the jury, there has been a denial of due process. The importance of the evidence withheld by the State, with the sanction of the Trial Judge, will be discussed hereafter. Again referring to Judge Loughran's opinion, it appears that the prosecutor made it clear that inferences should be drawn from the failure of the defendants to take the witness stand. The State staged the trial with trappings of power and of armed force, so as to impress the jury with the fact that the defendants were desperadoes; manacles were removed from the defendants in the courtroom and in the presence of the jury; the State surrounded the "informer" witnesses with police officers to protect them, as suggested by the prosecutor, from the defendants. Perhaps more

* The opinion of Judge Loughran was concurred in by Desmond and Rippey, JJ., but the facts he related were confirmed in the opinion of Chief Judge Lehman (R. 4073), who said: "The errors and defects in this case are, it seems to me, many. Judge Loughran has set forth some which in his opinion cannot be disregarded."

shocking is the fact that the prosecutor practically bribed the jury by promising them, on his integrity as a prosecutor, that if they would convict the defendants, the State would see to it that the vicious witnesses for the prosecution would get their just desserts.

This would have been bad enough if said in good faith. It becomes utterly abhorrent in view of the fact that these self-confessed murderers were afterwards let off scot free and recompensed.*

It is impossible, when referring to a fair trial, to draw a fine line of demarcation between the functions and acts of the Court, the prosecutor and the jury. Prejudicial conduct by the Court, and improper acts on the part of the District Attorney, sanctioned by the Court, which, in turn, affect the impartiality of the jury, must be taken together. The basic question is whether or not the trial was fair, whether the minimal requirements have been met. In other contexts, this Court has recognized the necessity for consideration of all elements of a situation and has sometimes spoken of a "bundle of rights". Here, it is not amiss to say that there was a bundle of wrongs.

As Judge Loughran said (R. 4090): "We believe the judgments of conviction should be reversed so that the defendants may have a fair chance to defend their lives before another jury."

Petitioners submit that they were not "fairly tried in a public tribunal free of prejudice, passion, excitement and tyrannical power" (Chambers v. Florida, 309 U. S. 227).

I

The Jury Was Not Impartial

(A) The Jury as Selected

Counsel disclaim any intention of urging that newspaper publicity, as such, caused a denial of due process of

* The official records with respect to these men will be submitted, if permitted by this Court, upon the argument.

law. That publicity may not have been the fault of the State. But when the effects of the newspaper stories reached into the courtroom and tainted the trial proceedings, the State was under an obligation to provide adequate corrective process. It is the failure of the State to provide this corrective process which we urge as the denial of due process.

Because of the damning newspaper articles, petitioners had asked for a change of venue, which was twice denied (supra, pp. 13, 14). The failure to grant the motions for change of venue may not in itself furnish the basis of a claim of deprivation of due process. Barrington v. Missouri, 205 U. S. 483. But the denial of these applications is a part of the record which must be re-lived in order to appreciate the atmosphere in which the petitioners were condemned. Cf. Johnson v. United States, Frankfurter, J., 317 U. S. (Feb. 15, 1943).

The record on the voir dire discloses that even before any evidence had been adduced, the petitioners faced at best an uphill struggle before a jury selected from a panel mentally conditioned to convict. While the jurors said they were unbiased, and swore to act impartially, it is clear that their frame of mind was such that they did not "stand indifferent between the parties." Coughlin v. People, 144 Ill. 140, 163; Reynolds v. United States, 98 U. S. 145, 154. Under conditions such as these, events at the trial take on increased importance.

It has been seen that Mr. Stevens, who was sworn and acted as a juror, was faced with the necessity of staving off prejudicial influences. There can be no assurance that, despite his commendable efforts, he was not subconsciously affected, particularly since he still faced the prospect of justifying himself to his co-workers, should he vote for a verdict of acquittal.

Mr. Butt, who was accepted as a juror and then excused, developed a feeling of prejudice even before a word of testimony had been adduced. Whether Mr. Butt was more sensitive than the others who had been tentatively selected, or whether he had a greater realization of his prejudice than the others cannot, of course, be known. His action demonstrates that there was some taint in the atmosphere of the courtroom.

The Trial Judge gave voice to the "havoc" which the Mirror articles were wreaking in the jury panel. He, himself, acted upon a report which he read in the newspapers about the Panto case and the connection of petitioner Weiss with it. The prosecutor's challenge of Protter, for bias, was sustained not because of anything which occurred in the courtroom, but because of something which the Court had read in a newspaper in the midst of the trial.

Prejudice from without was thus taking its toll in the courtroom. Petitioners' prediction had come true. An impartial jury could not be obtained.

In order that a jury might be selected, the Court overruled challenges for cause which should have been sustained. It was therefore necessary for petitioners to use up their peremptory challenges where challenges for cause should have been sustained. A jury was selected only after the Court had browbeaten talesmen, thereby leading others in the panel to deny prejudice to avoid criticism. The last three jurors put into the jury box would obviously have been challenged peremptorily if the Court had not theretofore forced the defense to exhaust all of their peremptory challenges.

Under these circumstances, it cannot fairly be said that the defendants were tried before a truly impartial jury. One's eyes must be closed to reality to believe that in this milieu it was possible to obtain a jury which stood indifferent between the State and the petitioners.

If the Court itself obtained and was influenced by information from the newspapers, can it be said that the jurors and prospective jurors were entirely free from that influence? Were these petitioners convicted upon proof of the charge laid in the indictment, or upon matters dehors the record? Cf. DeJonge v. Oregon, 299 U. S. 353, 362.

The language of the Court in Stephens v. People, 38 Mich. 739, 743, is particularly apt in this case:

> "Under such circumstances it is idle to inquire of jurors whether or not they can return just and impartial verdicts; the more clear and positive were their previous impressions of guilt the more certain may they be that they can act impartially in condemning the guilty party. They go into the jury box in a state of mind that is well calculated to give a color of guilt to all the evidence; and if the accused escapes conviction, it will not be because the evidence has [sic]* established guilt beyond a reasonable doubt, but because an accused party, condemned in advance, and called upon to exculpate himself before a prejudiced tribunal, has succeeded in doing so."

True, the twelve men who took their places in the jury box swore that they would render an impartial verdict and said they would judge fairly between the State and the petitioners. But as the Court said in Coughlin v. People, 144 Ill. 140, 184:

> "* * * Whatever may be the weight ordinarily due to statements of this character by jurors, their value as evidence is in no small degree impaired in this case by the mode in which they were, in a certain sense, forced from the mouth of the juror. The theory seemed to be, that if a juror could in any way be brought to answer that he could sit as an impartial juror, that declaration of itself rendered him competent. Such a view, if it was entertained, was a total misconception of the law."

Again at page 186:

> "Nor should a defendant be compelled to rely, as his security for the impartiality of the jurors by whom he is to be tried, upon the restraining and controlling influence upon the juror's mind of his oath to render a true verdict according to the law and the evidence. His impartiality should appear before he is permitted to take the oath. If he is not impartial then, his oath cannot be relied upon to make him so. In the terse > and expressive language of Lord Coke already quoted, the juror should 'stand indifferent as he stands unsworn'."

* The word "not" seems to have been omitted by the reporter.

Petitioners urge that they were deprived of their constitutional guarantees by the failure of the Court to intervene to prevent this travesty upon justice. The spirit which permeated the panel was no different from that of the mob which this Court condemned in Moore v. Dempsey, 261 U. S. 86. There (p. 91) "counsel, jury and judge were swept to the fatal end by an irresistible wave of public passion, and the State Courts failed to correct the wrong". Here was the same vice, but in more subtle form. Yet the same result—deprivation of due process of law—ensued. Men may, if they are strong-willed and courageous, resist an open show of force. The mob spirit which is engendered in the mind is not so easily repelled, because the individual may have no consciousness of being prejudiced. When the fact of the prevalence of the hostility towards the petitioners became apparent, there was no longer the possibility of a trial by reason. From that moment, the proceedings became a sham.

In Simon v. Craft, 182 U. S. 427, 436, this Court said:

> "• • • The essential elements of due process of law are notice and opportunity to defend. In determining whether such rights were denied we are governed by the substance of things and not by mere form."

Cf. Avery v. Alabama, 308 U. S. 444, 446; Powell v. Alabama, 287 U. S. 45, 58.

It is no answer for the State to say that the petitioners were wicked men and had brought upon themselves the hostility of the community. Nor is it an answer to say that the ends of justice can be served only by a speedy trial and a conviction even though in that process the rights of defendants are trampled upon. While speed in the administration of justice is desirable, fairness is essential.

As this Court said in Chambers v. Florida, 309 U. S. 227, at 240:

> "We are not impressed by the argument that law enforcement methods such as those under review are necessary to uphold our laws. The Constitution proscribes such lawless means irrespective of the end."

In State v. Nash, 7 Iowa, 347; the Court wrote (pp. 371-372):

> "An excited state of public feeling and opinion is always the most unfavorable for the investigation of truth. Not only should the mind of the juror be wholly without bias and prejudice—it should not only be free from all undue feeling and excitement in itself—but it should be, as far as possible, removed from the influence of prejudice and feeling, and excitement in others. A circumstance of small importance in itself, may often, in the midst of a community stirred by passion and excitement, serve to turn the scales of justice."

Petitioners earnestly urge that because of the contamination of the jury before whom they were tried, they were deprived of their right to be heard before an impartial tribunal.

(B) The Physical Trappings

The entire trial was so staged, with the sanction of the Court, as to impress the jury with the idea that petitioners were desperate and violent characters.

Petitioners were brought into the court room manacled to police officers. The process of unshackling took place in the presence of the jury and after the jurors had taken their places in the jury box (R. 766-68). Thus the State manufactured and placed before the jury mute but telling testimony that it considered petitioners to be not men who must be proven guilty, but desperate characters of whose guilt there was no doubt. Objection made by counsel for the defense to this procedure was disregarded.

In his brief in opposition to the petitions for the writ of certiorari, the District Attorney attempted to excuse this procedure by saying (p. 34):

> "* * * It is enough to say, concerning petitioners being manacled to police officers when brought to and from the courtroom, that Buchalter and Weiss were formerly fugitives from justice and at the trial were Federal prisoners in the custody of a United States marshal. They and Capone, as the record shows, were desperate criminals."

The Trial Court, however, gave another reason. It said (R. 767):

> "The Court: These defendants have been brought into this court-room for trial in a court which is not adapted to the trial of criminal cases. They have to be brought through the public corridor down a public staircase and through a door which leads into the Judge's chambers, shocking as this may seem, in order to come into this room. The Court has ruled on this and has said all it is going to say."

Neither reason can justify this prejudicial display before the jury.

Standing alone, the manacling of a defendant in a criminal trial is not necessarily ground for condemnation of the judgment. It may be justified where defendants are violent or disorderly in the proceedings or where they give evidence of an intent to escape during the course of the trial. State v. Rice, 347 Mo. 812; State v. Kring, 64 Mo. 591. In this case, where there was not even any intimation of violence or disorderliness by petitioners at the trial, and no indication that they would attempt to escape, this show of force in the presence of the jury must be considered as part of the mosaic which reveals the unfairness of the trial. To use the language of the Court in State v. Kring, 64 Mo. 591, 593:

> "* * * When the court allows a prisoner to be brought before a jury with his hands chained in irons, and refuses, on his application, or that of his counsel, to order their removal, the jury must necessarily conceive a prejudice against the accused, as being in the opinion of the judge a dangerous man, and one not to be trusted, even under the surveillance of the officers."

It is no excuse that the court room was not adapted to the trial of criminal cases. Part of the concept of due process of law, we submit, is that a State must furnish a seemly place for trial. The appropriate remedy was not this unwarranted exhibition before the jury. At least, the manacles could have been removed before the jury was brought in.

If, on the other hand, the excuse of the District Attorney be considered, the vice of the practice is clearly disclosed. Manifestly, the prosecutor was communicating to the jury the impression that the defendants must be guilty, otherwise they would not be in chains.

Intensifying the spirit of condemnation which the State's officers engendered by all the foregoing, there was likewise the close surrounding of the witnesses by numerous attendants and guards. This condition was graphically described as follows (R. 764-65):

"Mr. Talley: Before I commence to examine this witness, I request your Honor to remove the court officer who stands within six inches behind the chair of the witness. I ask your Honor to remove from the sight of the jury the two detectives who escorted this witness to the witness chair. There is another officer standing, in uniform, immediately alongside of the witness chair. I have no objection to his standing in that general vicinity, but the other display I ask to be removed, as prejudicial to these defendants and interfering with proper cross-examination and prejudicial to the defendants in this court-room. There are plenty of detectives in this court-room and there are other uniformed policemen who are kept outside of the court-room. These three defendants are brought in here, in sight of the jury, in chains, literally in chains. There are three or four officers sitting alongside of these defendants, and I object to this display as unnecessary, > unprecedented, and here for no other reason than to prejudice the jury against these defendants. I ask that they be removed, and that we proceed in a legal, judicial manner in the conduct of this trial from now on, and that we take away this theatrical display."

This request was denied (R. 766).

Considered in the light of all of the proceedings at the trial, these matters cannot be disregarded. Even if the jury entered upon its duties conscientiously intending to be impartial, the insidious influence of theatrical display must have weighed when the jury came to consider its verdict.

(C) Prejudice Created by Court and Prosecutor

This subject is discussed under IV, infra.

II

The Right to an Impartial Jury Was Not Waived

This case presents the further question whether, through inadvertence or indirection, the right to trial by a fair and impartial jury may unwittingly be waived and lost.

(A)

It is an essential part of due process of law in the State of New York that the trial of a capital case must be by jury, and the jury cannot be waived. Article I, Section 2, New York State Constitution*; People ex rel. Battista v. Christian, 249 N. Y. 314. "Though a state may, apparently, deny an accused person a jury trial entirely, if one is granted, the selection of the jury must be conducted in a manner calculated to secure an impartial body * * *." Natting, The Supreme Court, The Fourteenth Amendment and State Criminal Cases, (1935) 3 U. of Chicago Law Review 244, 247-248.

* Appendix, infra, p. 80.

Petitioners sought review of obviously improper rulings by the Trial Court upon challenges for actual bias. But the Court of Appeals in refusing to review said (R. 4121) that because petitioners consented to be tried before a special jury "a majority of this court is of the opinion that he thereby consented also to the statutory provision* that rulings of the trial court upon challenges for actual bias are final and not appealable."

---

* N. Y. State Judiciary Law, § 749aa, subd. 7, Appendix, infra, p. 83.

In Spies v. Illinois, 123 U. S. 131, this Court held that on its face the Illinois statute did not deny due process by providing "that it shall not be a cause of challenge that a juror has read in the newspapers on account of the commission of the crime with which the prisoner is charged, if such juror shall state on oath that he believes he can render an impartial verdict according to the law and the evidence." But the Court also ruled that a denial of due process under the Fourteenth Amendment could result from "the actual administration of the rule of the statute by the court." At page 170 the Court said:

> "We proceed, then, to a consideration of the grounds of challenge to the jurors Denker and Sanford, to see if in the actual administration of the rule of the statute by the court, the rights of the defendants under the Constitution of the United States were in any way impaired or violated."

The Court then quoted at length these jurors' statements on voir dire (pp. 170-179), and concluded (p. 179) that "the question thus presented is one of mixed law and fact, and to be tried, as far as the facts are concerned, like any other issue of that character, upon the evidence." The final decision by this Court was (p. 180) that the trial court's rulings were not "so gross as to amount in law to a denial by the State of a trial by an impartial jury to one who is accused of crime." Clearly this holding demonstrates that even in the face of a similar statute a question of the denial of due process may arise from a trial court's rulings on the qualifications of a talesman.

The District Attorney may in this connection refer to Hayes v. Missouri, 120 U. S. 68, and Brown v. New Jersey, 175 U. S. 172. The attack in each of these cases was upon the validity of the statute itself, and it was "not even suggested that the jury by which the accused was tried was not a competent and impartial one" (120 U. S. 68, 71).

Consent to be tried by a special jury cannot be tortured into a consent to be tried by a contaminated jury. The panel was so infected by prejudice and bias that there was little, if any, likelihood of obtaining a fair and impartial jury. If, in this situation, recognized by the Trial Court in his comment that the newspaper articles were "raising havoc with the jurors", it was not his duty to declare a mistrial and permit renewal of the motions for a change of venue, then at the very least he should have allowed the widest scope to the investigation of the state of mind of each juror. Indeed, at the outset he had promised to do so, saying (V. 49):

> "It will be difficult to select a jury in this case. There is no doubt about that. The Court will allow abundant latitude to all counsel to make searching examination of every member of the panel who is drawn, for the purpose of determining whether such member has any prejudice that will prevent a fair and impartial trial of these defendants."

When it became apparent that such examination would inevitably disclose such prejudice on the part of almost every prospective juror, not only did he improperly restrict that examination, but, by his comments and strictures, he virtually bludgeoned the venire into abjuring prejudice and bias in order to qualify.

Where it is charged, as here, that rulings of the Trial Judge prevented the proper examination of the talesmen upon challenges for bias, it is no answer to say that the local statute makes such rulings immune from review. The Fourteenth Amendment's guaranty of due process would be idle words were its purpose so easily circumvented. How otherwise would a defendant be guarded against an admittedly hostile jury?

A fair and impartial tribunal is essential to due process. To say, as is implicit in the decision below, that a consent to trial by special jury carries with it a consent to surrender the right to question the fairness and impartiality of the jury impanelled, is not consonant with any concept of due process.

A waiver of so fundamental a right can never result from inference or as a consequence of a failure to object to a trial by a "Special Jury". "To preserve the protection of the Bill of Rights for hard-pressed defendants, we indulge every reasonable presumption against the waiver of fundamental rights." Glasser v. U. S., 315 U. S. 60, 70; Johnson v. Zerbst, 304 U. S. 458, 464. Any act of the Legislature which prescribed a trial by a jury which was not unbiased and impartial "would be a violation of one of the essential elements of the jury referred to in and secured by the Constitution." Stokes v. People, 53 N. Y. 164, at 171.

When petitioners' counsel below interposed no objection to trial by special jury, they had a right to assume that every talesman called would be qualified under the statute,* which provides: "No person shall be selected as such special juror * * * who doubts his ability to lay aside an opinion or impression formed from newspaper reading or otherwise, or render an impartial verdict upon the evidence, uninfluenced by any such opinion or impression."

Upon the voir dire examination there was conclusive proof that the talesmen summoned for this case did not meet these qualifications. Yet the "majority of" the Court of Appeals has ruled that a provision of the special jury statute forbids a review of the rulings of the Trial Judge.

In an earlier case that Court, having held that the right of jury trial cannot be waived (People v. Cosmo, 205 N. Y. 91, at p. 96), said: "It must follow that if the right itself cannot be waived neither can there be a waiver of anything that is essential to the full benefit or protection which the right is designed to safeguard."

An appellate court cannot be precluded by such a statute from a review of the rulings of the Trial Court upon challenges for prejudice, because otherwise there could be no preservation of "the fundamental idea that no man's life

* N. Y. State Judiciary Law, § 749aa, subd. 2, Appendix, infra

 Idem, subd. 7, Appendix, infra.

* * * be forfeited as criminal punishment * * * until there had been a charge * * * fairly tried in a public tribunal free of prejudice, passion, excitement and tyranical power." Chambers v. Florida, 309 U. S. 227, 236-37. A "properly constituted tribunal" is essential to due process (Backus v. Fort, 169 U. S. 557, 569) and, where jury trial is required as in New York, there can be no such tribunal unless the jury be impartial.

There can be no doubt that this jury was not properly impanelled, because the rulings upon the challenges for actual bias were clearly erroneous under New York law. People v. McQuade, 110 N. Y. 284, 293, 294, 301; People v. Casey, 96 N. Y. 115, 122, 123; People v. Wilmarth, 156 N. Y. 566, 568. These rulings would have been reviewable but for the "special jury" statute. People v. Crum, 272 N. Y. 348. Under the authorities just cited, a review must have resulted in a reversal of this conviction.

(B)

On the motion for reargument of the appeal petitioners emphasized (R. 4105-06) the point that the rulings of the Trial Judge deprived petitioners of due process of law, and that the refusal of the Court of Appeals to review those rulings constituted a further denial of due process.

If this were a matter merely of State law, the construction announced by the Court of Appeals on the motion for reargument might be final. Howard v. Fleming, 191 U. S. 126. But on the elementary principle that State Courts are charged with the duty of protecting rights guaranteed by the Federal Constitution (Mooney v. Holohan, 294 U. S. 103, 113), the Court of Appeals, despite the statute, should have examined the rulings of the Trial Court on challenges for actual bias to determine whether by such rulings petitioners were deprived of "due process of law".

If the Court of Appeals was by statute barred from considering the rulings of the Trial Court on challenges, and this denial of review was itself no violation of the constitutional rights of petitioners, yet the question of the effect of such rulings is still one for this Court to consider. The State may, for instance, provide that the judgment of a trial court be final and not subject to appellate review. Nevertheless, on the issue of due process of law, a constitutional question would still exist whether the judge and jury were impartial and whether the trial was fair. No state statute can deprive the defendant of that federal constitutional right and this question persists irrespective of any limitation placed upon the appellate jurisdiction of any state tribunal.

III

Relevant Evidence Was Suppressed

"In the fair administration of the criminal law", where evidence in the possession of the prosecution was not made known to the defense, a "conviction cannot stand" (Opinion of the Court of Criminal Appeal, per Lord Chief Justice Hewart, in the case of Edward Guerin, 23 Cohen's Criminal Appeal Cases 39, 43).*

For the prosecution to suppress and to deny a defendant access to evidence is undoubtedly a denial of due process. Mooney v. Holohan, 294 U. S. 103; Pyle v. Kansas, 317 U. S. 213. That issue is presented by the record in this case.

Tannenbaum testified that on September 11th he had visited petitioner Buchalter at an office in the building at 200 Fifth Avenue, New York City; that there he overheard the conversations between Buchalter and Rubin, to which Rubin had testified, i. e., Buchalter's expression of purpose to have Rosen silenced. Tannenbaum said he was also there when Weiss reported the murder to Buchalter.

---

* In this case the Court held also that a conviction must be reversed where the jury had been apprised of defendant's bad character, even though that disclosure had been made by the defendant's own counsel in consequence of certain newspaper publicity.

Berger said that in response to Buchalter's summons, communicated by Rubin, he went to that office; that he and Buchalter (undisguised) then left the building together, through the lobby and front entrance, and entered a taxicab en route to the meeting with Weiss (R. 1959-60).

During the period when these occurrences were supposed to have taken place, Buchalter was under constant surveillance by police officers of the New York Police Department. Petitioners, during the course of the trial, had served a subpoena on the Police Department to produce the official reports of this surveillance.

At the conclusion of the direct examination of Berger, defense counsel called for these official reports (R. 1880-1883). The prosecutor acknowledged that they had been turned over to him by the Police Department. The Court, however, refused to direct the prosecutor to produce them. Later, the request was renewed (R. 2140-2156), and, although the reports were in court, the Trial Judge, upon the prosecutor's objection, refused to permit defense counsel to examine them, refused to examine them himself or to have them counted, and refused to permit any disclosure whatsoever of their contents.

This point was raised on the original appeal to the Court of Appeals, but no mention of it appears in any of the opinions. It was urged again on the motion for reargument. The Per Curiam opinion denying the motion for reargument (R. 4120) stated that the Court had examined these police records, that the surveillance amounted to very little, since it was of the entrance and lobby of the office building, and that Buchalter could and did elude the police at will.

What these reports disclosed, petitioners have no way of knowing. Whether they were complete or not, petitioners cannot know. Berger's testimony, and perhaps that of Tannenbaum and Rubin, may well have been subject to complete destruction or at least impeachment by the results of even such limited surveillance.

The information contained in the police reports, even if it relates only to the lobby and entrance, might have had probative value from one of two aspects. If, for example, the reports disclose that at about five o'clock on September 11, 1936, Buchalter was at a place other than 200 Fifth Avenue, then clearly Berger's story would be false. This would amount to affirmative contradiction.

If, on the other hand, the reports reveal that police officers were actually stationed at the entrance to 200 Fifth Avenue, and did not see Buchalter emerge from that entrance, or that if he did he was not accompanied by another person, the evidence, while negative, might well have probative force in impeaching Berger's testimony.

Defendants should not have to demonstrate that the suppressed evidence would have changed the result; it should be enough that it might have. Surely no one can say with certainty that the jury might not have been influenced by the reports of the police officers who were shadowing Buchalter, thereby corroborating the testimony of the defense witness Shapiro.

It is one thing to say, as did the majority below, that certain errors did not have influence. It is a quite different matter to assume that the suppressed evidence would have had no effect.

This Court has said, Edwards v. United States, 312 U. S. 473, 482:

> "The refusal to permit the accused to prove his defense may prove trivial when the facts are developed. Procedural errors often are. But procedure is the skeleton which forms and supports the whole structure of a case. The lack of a bone mars the symmetry of the body."

And in Saunders v. Shaw, 244 U. S. 317, in answer to a contention that the excluded evidence was of no importance, this Court said at 319:

> "It may turn out so, but we do not see in the record an absolute warrant for the assumption and therefore cannot be sure that the defendant's rights are protected without giving him a chance to put his evidence in."

Lord Chief Justice Reading for the Court in The King v. Sagar (1914) 3 K. B. 1112, said (p. 1115) that excluding evidence admissible in law "prevented the prisoner from putting forward a substantial part of his defense * * *. It is impossible to say * * * that, if the evidence which was wrongly excluded had been admitted, the jury would have come to the same conclusion. Consequently, the conviction must be quashed."

Not only were petitioners deprived of the essential right of cross-examination of the prosecution witnesses, Rubin, Tannenbaum and Berger, in respect of any disparity between the testimony of these witnesses and the reports of the police officers, itself a deprivation of due process of law, but the petitioners were deprived of a fair opportunity to present their defense affirmatively.

It was important to that defense to demonstrate that the stories told by Rubin, Tannenbaum and Berger concerning the visits to Buchalter at 200 Fifth Avenue, New York, were false. For that purpose the defense called the witness Shapiro. In view of the scurrilous attack upon this witness by the cross-examination of the prosecutor, it was important to have the corroboration of his testimony which these police reports might have supplied.* If the reports themselves were inconclusive, they would at least have identified the police officers who conducted the surveillance of Buchalter. These officers might then have been called to testify.

The only corroboration of the accomplices' evidence against Weiss, and the only evidence at all against Buchalter, revolved wholly around the occurrences at 200 Fifth Avenue. With the most cogent proof available in these police records and by the police officers, petitioners were not permitted access to that proof.

In his brief in opposition to the applications for the writs of certiorari, the District Attorney argued that it was not error to suppress this evidence because counsel for the defense could not say that the reports were required for cross-examination, but could only say that they might be (Brief, p. 32). He also urged that the petitioners might have called the Police Commissioner as a witness to reveal the names of the officers who made the reports (Brief, p. 33).

* And to prevent just such an unwarranted assertion that the police surveillance was a fiction, as in fact was made by the prosecutor in his summation (R. 3828).

There is no merit to these contentions. Defense counsel, not knowing what the reports contained, could not represent to the Court that they would actually be used. The envelope which was delivered might not even have contained the reports on the surveillance during the critical period. Only the representatives of the State knew what was in those reports. The Trial Judge did not even take the trouble to look at them or let them be counted.

As for calling the Police Commissioner as a witness, the District Attorney should know that this would have been improper. To call a witness, not for the purpose of giving testimony about the facts of the case but merely to reveal the names of other possible witnesses, would have subjected defense counsel to criticism indeed. The reports themselves were in Court and there was no reason why they should not have been made available to the defense. The Trial Judge could have provided safeguards, if any were needed, to prevent information extraneous to the case from being disclosed.

The opportunity to present a defense is of the essence of due process of law. Whether a fair opportunity so to do is afforded the defendant when he is denied access to evidence in the possession of the prosecution, is not a novel question.

The applicable principle has been enunciated in State v. Wood, 127 Me. 197, 200; 142 A. 728, 730, where it was said:

> "A trial before a jury is an investigation of matters of fact, its sole purpose being to ascertain the truth. All competent evidence tending toward that result should be produced. It is the plain duty of prosecuting officers to make every effort to present all of the facts and to assist the respondent in his effort to do the same.

> The state is not endeavoring to prove the respondent guilty. It is endeavoring to ascertain whether or not he is guilty. It is not only within the power of the court to take such action as shall tend to bring before it all that may assist in the search for truth but it is its duty to do so. Any other theory of law, any different course of conduct on the part of the court, would cause judicial proceedings to receive and merit the contempt of all right-thinking citizens."

Cooley, C. J., for the Supreme Court of Michigan, in People v. Davis, 52 Mich. 569, 573-574; 18 N. W. 362, said:

> "• • • the state has no interest in interposing any obstacle to the disclosure of the facts, unless it is interested in convicting accused parties on the testimony of untrustworthy persons. But surely the State has no such interest; its interest is that accused parties shall be acquitted unless upon all the facts they are seen to be guilty; and if there shall be in the possession of any of its officers information that can legitimately tend to overthrow the case made for the prosecution, or to show that it is unworthy of credence, the defense should be given the benefit of it. There was, therefore, no privilege to preclude the giving of the testimony for which the defense called."

See also, Centeamore v. State, 105 Neb. 452, 455; Cf. People v. Walsh, 262 N. Y. 140, 150.

In Curtis v. State, 46 Tenn. 9, 11, the principle was thus enunciated:

> "The duty of the Attorney for the State, is to adduce all the legitimate proof of the prisoner's guilt; but it is not his duty to endeavor to secure a conviction to which he is not entitled under legitimate evidence and fair practice. And if a defendant can not be convicted under this rule, the State has no interest to have him convicted. The Supreme Court of Michigan reversed a criminal case, for the reason that the District Attorney, knowing of evidence which would make in favor of the defendant, did not place it before the jury. Prosecuting officers must discharge their duty to the State, but not resort to strategems to deprive the prisoner of his legal rights."

IV

The Trial Judge Assumed the Role of a Protagonist for the Prosecution; His Conduct and that of the Prosecutor Misled the Jury

(A) The Prosecutor's Actions

In addition to the other matters discussed elsewhere in this brief:

(1) In his summation to the jury, the prosecutor said (R. 3830):

> "Don't you worry as to what is going to happen to the witnesses in this case. Don't let anybody fool you with Christmas present nonsense. Gentlemen, the courts have confidence in the integrity and common sense of juries and jurors. Have a little faith in the integrity of the Court and the prosecutor as to what will happen to witnesses. Right now they are too valuable pieces of bric-a-brac to be dealt with as Lepke, Weiss and Capone would want. Let us use common sense here."

Is it within the power of the State so to impose upon and deceive the jury? In such assurance there was, as the Chief Judge said (R. 4076): "implicit a promise which the prosecuting attorney could not properly or truthfully make that in due time the witnesses would receive their just deserts." What purpose was there in this promise other than to induce the jury to accept testimony which otherwise it would have been loathe to credit?

Any individual on the jury might well have rejected the testimony of Bernstein, Rubin, Tannenbaum, Berger and Magoon, who were attempting to purchase absolution from their confessed crimes by implicating or accusing the petitioners. The testimony of these witnesses was particularly suspect because of their vicious records and an inherent lack of plausibility. Testimony obtained for a consideration offends any person's natural sense of justice.

When, therefore, the prosecutor pledged the State's integrity and the integrity of the Court (the Court sitting silently by), for the proposition that no such absolution had been or would be granted these witnesses, he was offering an inducement for credence and for a conviction.

"The aim of the requirement of due process is not to exclude presumptively false evidence, but to prevent fundamental unfairness in the use of evidence whether true or false." Lisenba v. California, 314 U. S. 219, 236. Whether true or false, this statement by the prosecutor was fundamentally unfair. The fact is it was false. Each of these witnesses has received his reward for the testimony given. None has paid penance for his admitted crimes.

This Court has held that a conviction obtained by imposition or fraud on the part of the prosecutor cannot stand. Mooney v. Holohan, 294 U. S. 103. It has been held that conviction on a plea of guilty induced by fraud on the part of the prosecutor constituted a deprivation of due process of law. Smith v. O'Grady, 312 U. S. 329; Lyons v. Goldstein, 290 N. Y. 19. The deceptive statement made by this prosecutor in his argument to the jury should not be condoned any more than the presentation of testimony known to be perjured.

(2) The overzealousness thus illustrated was characteristic of the prosecutor's entire address. It was an appeal to the prejudice and passions of the jury, but the Trial Court admonished defense counsel that "There must be no interruption at any time during the summation" (R. 3782). Further, the Trial Court would permit objections to the People's summation only after its conclusion, and then only in the absence of the jury (R. 3782, 3860-3861, 3864, 3868; cf. 3543). In contrast with the Court's instructions that there should be no interruption of the prosecutor (R. 3782), was the Court's previous statement at the beginning of the summations of the defense that there should be no interruption unless "anything of sufficient importance arises that really justifies an interruption of counsel" (R. 3543).

More than one-third of the summation was directed to the fact that a murder had been committed, of which there was no dispute. The real issue was whether petitioners were implicated in that crime. After assuring the jury, at the outset of his summation, that he would take them through his entire opening statement, sentence by sentence, to refresh their recollection and show that every fact had been conclusively proven, the prosecutor then described in gruesome detail the condition of the corpse, the identification of the automobile, one of the murder weapons, and numerous other items peculiarly within the knowledge of the admitted liar Bernstein, but in nowise connected with petitioners except through Bernstein's testimony. At the conclusion of the prosecutor's recital of each of these details, he would interject, "True? • • • Is there a single word in the representation of proof that has not been established beyond a shadow of a doubt?" or words to like effect (R. 3784-3806). Despite the rule in the State of New York that the failure of a defendant to testify may not be the subject of comment (People v. Watson, 216 N. Y. 565, 568-569), the prosecutor continued by asking (R. 3806):

> "To begin with, did anybody here tell you that Sholem Bernstein did not steal the murder car? Did anybody do that? Did anybody show you that he did not steal the plates? Did anybody say to you that he did not chauffeur the murder car when Rosen was killed?"

Whoever the murderers actually were, or whoever instigated the murder, this merely established Bernstein's complicity in the murder, but did not connect petitioners therewith. Yet the prosecutor, by his argument, created an impression that petitioners' failure to take the stand and deny Bernstein's complicity in the crime was an admission of guilt on their part.*

* The dissenting Judges agreed. "This was a direct violation of the defendants' constitutional rights against self-incrimination" (R. 4086).

Although there is much authority to the contrary, this Court has said that while it is not inherent in the concept of due process of law, immunity from compulsory self-incrimination "should, must, and will be rigidly observed where it is secured by specific constitutional safeguards." Twining v. New Jersey, 211 U. S. 78, 113. New York does secure that immunity by just such a safeguard. New York State Constitution, Art. I, Sec. 6 (Appendix p. 81, infra). This immunity, in New York, includes as an integral part, the right to protection from adverse comment on a defendant's failure to take the stand. People v. Watson, 216 N. Y. 565, 568-569.

Perhaps, standing alone, invasion of this right is not open to argument here because the decision of the Court of Appeals must be accepted as a final ruling that the law of the State of New York has not been violated. Patterson v. Colorado, 205 U. S. 454, 459; Rawlins v. Georgia, 201 U. S. 638, 639; Burt v. Smith, 203 U. S. 129, 135. But the violation of petitioners' right in this respect is nonetheless a part of the picture of the conduct in this case which, taken as a whole, shows a denial of due process of law.

(3) Without being sworn, and without subjecting himself to contradiction or cross-examination, the prosecutor during summation uttered statements as of fact when there was absolutely no evidence in the record to support them. An example was his attempt to justify the falsehood of Bernstein, who originally denied and subsequently admitted writing letters while confined in a hotel as a material witness (R. 975-976, 1247, 1256, 1259). In an attempt to justify the flagrant falsehood necessarily shown by this conflicting testimony, and although no such excuse was offered by the witness, the prosecutor said (R. 3869):

> "Well, he wrote letters. • • • What is wrong about that? Sholem, this misguided man, wanted to protect some employe in the hotel and he denied it until they brought here the photostatic copies of letters. Then he had to admit it."

It is inherent in our jurisprudence that it is fundamentally unfair to offer evidence against an accused without subjecting such evidence to the test of cross-examination as part of the opportunity to answer the accusation. The right to cross-examine adverse witnesses is what is meant by the constitutional right of an accused to "be confronted with the witnesses against him." Wigmore on Evidence (3rd Ed.), Vol. V, p. 128. New York, by its Constitution, Article I, Section 6 (Appendix, p. 81, infra), guarantees that right against statutory or judicial invasion. But this protection availed petitioners nothing; for the prosecutor, in his final word to the jury save for the equally prejudicial instructions of the Trial Judge, was allowed to inject into the case these elements which petitioners were given no opportunity to answer.

(4) The prosecutor put in issue his own integrity and that of the District Attorney; charged defense counsel with receipt of tainted money and with the knowledge that petitioners were guilty (R. 3803-3804); charged that there was not a lawyer in the court room who did not know of petitioners' guilt; and assured the jury that petitioners were the murderers (R. 3807, 3820-3821, 3856). Numerous other instances of the unrestrained excesses of the prosecutor in summation are indicated in the footnote on page 34, supra. Their effect was aggravated by a charge which (R. 4087) "took on the character of a summation for the People."

(B) The Trial Judge's Actions

(1) The Trial Judge recognized at the opening of the trial that "When the human mind registers, it is not likely to readily forget its impressions" (V. 49). During the selection of the jury, he sought to impress the talesmen with the feeling that he had some community of interest with them—this was done by questions about such irrelevant matters as their genealogy, acquaintances and business, church, fraternal and social affiliations, and the general character of and landmarks about the vicinity of their homes or business (e. g.,—out of at least 125 instances—V. 120, 369, 467, 507, 999, 1397). The bond thus created between the Court and the jury was turned against petitioners by the Court's comments throughout the trial. By these comments the jury was made to believe that the Court's efforts to administer justice fairly were being frustrated by the deliberate attempt of defense counsel to obstruct justice (e. g., R. 783, 884, 948, 993, 2170-2171, 2592). Two typical instances follow:

(R. 2170-2171)

> "You are distinctly rude and uncivil. The Court refuses to be goaded to the extent that you are obviously trying to goad the Court at this or any other time. The Court will be patient to the utmost and take it on both cheeks from counsel. Now please proceed."

(R. 2603)

> "Gentlemen of the jury, disregard that. These are just tactics trying to set the jury against the Court, thereby lessening the authority of the Court with the jury—giving the Court instructions."

(2) By methods sometimes direct, sometimes subtle, the Trial Judge virtually told the jury that admissions wrung from prosecution witnesses on cross-examination were of no consequence. Illustrative of this type of animadversion is the Court's comparison of Rubin's draft evasion in the First World War with the historic refusal of William Penn to enter military service (R. 1512). The Trial Court provided an explanation by which to reconcile inconsistent testimony which Bernstein had given as a prosecution witness in an earlier murder trial: in the so-called "Gangi Cohen" trial, Bernstein had denied being involved in any murders (R. 1111-1113). This was contrary to the testimony given in the present case. The Court said (R. 1113-1114):

> "The answer given to the question you have just read in the other trial could be viewed as being meant to be true by the witness if he considered it referred to taking part in the actual shooting. It would be untrue in relation to his being a principal under Section 2 of the Penal Law, in the other work than killing."

Damaging indeed was the Court's reference to a prior statement made by Rubin exonerating Buchalter of any complicity in the Rosen murder. He suggested to the jury (R. 2404-2406) that the prior statement was false and that its falsity was commendably akin to the white lie told by the priest's sister in Victor Hugo's "Les Miserables". This had a double vice: It not only excused the perjury itself, but it also assumed that Rubin's testimony in the present trial was unquestionably true, and that it was the prior statement which was false. The jury was not left to decide which one of the two inconsistent statements was true and which one was false. The Court decided that for the jury, against petitioners.

Other instances where the Court cancelled the effect of the cross-examination of prosecution witnesses, or neutralized it by interpreting answers, appear at R. 779, 782-783, 819-820, 846, 870, 872, 884, 903, 933, 991, 1021, 1035, 1060, 1164, 1172, 1177, 1205, 1216-1217, 1224, 1231, 1232, 1236, 1251-1253, 2498, 2512, 2538, 2580, 2589, 2591-2593, 2597-2598.

The Judge, moreover, arbitrarily refused to permit defense counsel to examine on matters elicited on direct examination, or brought out on co-defendants' cross-examination (e. g., R. 2405, 2065, 1653, 2064, 295, 300, 1055, 1082, 1136, 1510, 1513)*; made disparaging remarks about counsel's purposes in their inquiries and about the materiality of evidence sought to be adduced (e. g., R. 1974-1975, 3870, 3867, 3865, 3869, 3868, 2170-2171); and unduly restricted cross-examination on questions (a) tending to show the consideration being given to the witness for his testimony (R. 1138, 1144, 1146-1147), and (b) otherwise directly affecting witness' credibility (R. 1094-1095, 1136-1139, 1155, 1232-1233, 2530-2532, 2569-2571, 2577-2578, 2597-2598).

* See also, R. 1131-1134, 1139, 1159, 1175, 1176, 1177-1178, 1189, 1194, 1195, 1198-1200, 1201-1202, 1227-1228, 2532, 2569-2571, 2571-2572, 2577-2578, 2586-2589.

While the Trial Judge need not be an automaton, and may participate actively in the trial, he is not justified in being a protagonist for the prosecution. Enough has surely been shown to make it clear that by the trespasses upon its province, this jury was effectively prevented from according the petitioners the full and fair hearing "due process of law" requires.

(C) The Charge

(3) This course of conduct during the trial culminated in a charge which constituted the coup de grace. The Trial Judge revealed his state of mind and purpose in his charge when he boldly said, "* * * I think this * * * will hold and will not be error" (R. 3990). Does that not plainly suggest that the Court counted on the jury to convict, as otherwise, of course, there would not be an appeal?

The charge must be read as a whole to appreciate how gravely it invaded petitioners' rights and the concept of fundamental fairness. No excerpt can serve as more than a slight indication of how issues of fact were resolved against petitioners and how the Judge himself gave testimony of matters not otherwise proved.

The jury was invited by the Court to assume that the obvious discrepancy between the testimony of Rubin and Berger, on the one hand, and Bernstein on the other, concerning the "time table" (p. 8, supra) might be reconciled by a speculation that Buchalter had made full arrangements for the murder, even before he knew that Rubin's mission to Weinstein for the purpose of placating Rosen had failed. The Court said (R. 3906-3907):

> "In view of the fact that this was particularly discussed in reference to hour of the day, and it was argued by one of the counsel that inasmuch as the pointing out was at night, after dark, and the testimony by Bernstein as to the theft of the car and the hiring of the drop was during several hours of the day which preceded the pointing out, that that proved that the testimony did not hitch.

"Gentlemen, I refer you to the record because I don't want you to get twisted up on that. There is not a particle of evidence in the case as to when, if at all, Buchalter communicated in reference to the preparation work. The case is blank on that. There is no way of knowing. We do not know whether he did so, or, if he did, whether it was in the morning or the afternoon or the evening; but you have the testimony of Bernstein about when he received the alleged instructions to steal a car and hire a drop, which was earlier in the day.

"Taken in connection with the other facts, or alleged facts, concerning the alleged preparation work, and putting this and that together, you have a right to draw such inference as you see fit.

"Apparently, in the argument that was offered, counsel assumed that Buchalter waited until after the fingering before he gave the instruction; but, under the record, I charge you you are entitled to consider whether or not, at the time of the alleged excited statements by Buchalter during the day, that may be taken as evidence connecting him with either previous instructions or instructions immediately thereafter in connection with the hiring of the drop and the stealing of the car. I don't say you have a right to draw an inference that he sent such an instruction over the telephone, but I do say you have a right, if you see fit, to reconcile the testimony by Rubin and by Bernstein and by Paul Berger on the various points of evidence they have testified to in connection with Buchalter and the preparation work on that day, and that the definite hook-up, if true, is the fingering plus the declaration by Buchalter. I feel that for accuracy I should refer to the record on this, so that you won't be misled."

When the attention of the Judge was called to the fact that the testimony did not support any such assumption, he "corrected" the error with an even more damaging instruction, i. e., that the argument of defense counsel attacking the "time table" must be disregarded because there was lacking any basis for an assumption that Buchal-ter had not communicated his orders earlier in the day. The Court said (R. 3989-3990):

> "I charged, in reference to the time table on Friday before the Rosen alleged murder, that I did not recall any specific hour mentioned in the record unless it was in the cross-examination somewhere, as to Rubin testifying just when he called and found Buchalter in such a state in making these declarations that he alleges Buchalter made. My attention has been called to page 1483 of the cross-examination, in which the time is fixed as follows: 'Sometime about one o'clock, I imagine, in the afternoon.'
>
> "My attention has also been called to a possible confusion in my charge as to the possibility of a communication having been, even before that, given by Buchalter to somebody in Brooklyn to go ahead with the work of preparation. That would make it, of course, entirely consistent with the time table set up by Bernstein as to when he was given instructions to steal the car and get a drop. I want to correct any possible mischoice of language that might cause a misunderstanding. The case is blind as to whether or not Buchalter communicated. There is no way we know. You cannot presume that he did and you cannot presume that he did not, but I will say that the argument of one of the counsel for the defense in attacking the time tables as told by Bernstein as inconsistent with Rubin's testimony and Berger's testimony, is predicated upon an assumption on his part that there was no communication by Buchalter until after Rubin returned and gave word that Weinstein could not do anything. I charge you this * * * —that there is no such presumption, and you are not justified in so presuming. If there is no such presumption, of course, then the argument attacking the time table fails."

This was, in effect, directing the jury to disregard the conflict in the testimony because petitioners had not proven affirmatively the absence of communication between Buchalter and Weiss before 1 o'clock on September 11, 1936. He used the excuse of avoiding speculation to force the jury to take as a fact what was pure speculation.

Under the pretext of "segregating" evidence against the individual petitioners for the purpose of assisting the jury, the Judge restricted his review of the facts (R. 3903 et seq.) to a recitation of only the incriminating testimony given by the prosecution witnesses, Bernstein, Rubin, Berger, Tannenbaum and Magoon. He quoted questions and answers from the record, without referring to the cross-examination which destroyed the force of the testimony of these witnesses (e. g., R. 3903, 3909-3910, 3914, 3916).

In a word, the Court prepared a statement of the case particularizing the damning proof but omitting all countervailing material. A more one-sided charge can hardly be imagined.

The charge was particularly unfair because of its disparagement of cross-examination. The Court's excuse for this omission was that recollection of the cross-examination was "your [the jury's] job". Almost in the same breath he invited the jury to disregard cross-examination completely by saying (R. 3903) that "while direct examination goes right to the point, cross-examination, being for the purpose of breaking down the direct, is largely hit or miss: it is blank cartridge shooting."

Had the Court been entirely consistent in omitting all reference to cross-examination, the unfairness might not have been so prejudicial. However, it should be noted that the Court did refer to cross-examination for the purpose of excusing and explaining material which impeached the credibility of prosecution witnesses or contradicted their stories.

For example, regarding the conflict of Bernstein's testimony on the trial as against that before the Grand Jury (R. 1266-1267), the Trial Judge said (R. 3899-3900):

> "Something else was said in regard to an alleged failure of some witness to tell something to the Grand Jury that the witness testified to here, but, gentlemen, the Grand Jury is not a trial body. It may take only ten minutes to get enough evidence to get an indictment, but it may take ten weeks to get all the evidence before a trial jury and get a decision as to the guilt or innocence of the accused. The failure to state facts concerning which the witness is not asked before the Grand Jury means nothing whatever. You will just disregard it. The only reason you are permitted to hear a witness cross-examined in regard to Grand Jury minutes is where he testified before the Grand Jury in contradiction of something that he testified to here. Bear that in mind. Don't be misled by that argument." (Italics supplied.)

We have already noted (p. 35, supra) the Court's rescue of Magoon (R. 3998-3999) from his reference to "little white lies" by branding the summation of counsel in this respect as childishness which "should not affect intelligent men whose minds are mature."

Practically all the prosecution's criminal witnesses were cross-examined concerning statements made by them under oath within a few months prior to the trial inconsistent with their present testimony. As if rehearsed, a stock reply was always given, "If it is in the book [meaning the record being read from], it is so." The purpose of this examination was to establish prior inconsistent statements and thus attack the credibility of the witness. This proper purpose was frustrated when the Court charged (R. 3894):

"Well, of course, if a man is asked whether he made an admission a long time ago, he may remember that, but to put a burden upon him of remembering the exact text of question and answer is an unholy thing. We have a court reporter here to supply daily minutes in this case because counsel forget over night the questions and answers in text form of the day before; but, you see, when a witness is asked, 'Answer yes or no,' about something that he testified to a long time before, you get a normal response sometimes, 'If it is in the book, it is so.' There is a concession of the accuracy of the minutes the witness is not disputing." (Italics supplied.)

The apology for the prosecution was made complete when the Court in his main charge said (R. 3903):

> "There is nothing disreputable in a prosecuting attorney putting on the stand a witness who turns state's evidence. It is a proper method of prosecution and enforcement of the law. When rogues fall out, it is a wise man's delight; * * *" (Italics supplied.)

The unfairness of this statement was aggravated rather than corrected when the Court, after exception had been taken, said (R. 3989):

> "That was intended to have general application. It was not intended as calling the defendants names, but, lest it be misunderstood as having specific application to the defendants as rogues, the court withdraws and apologizes for it. It was not so meant. Just disregard it."

Whether the statement was error which was cured by the apology is not the question here. We urge that the comment demonstrates the innate prejudice which was in the Court's mind and which colored the entire trial.

It was the contention of the prosecution that the witnesses called by them had no opportunity to concoct their stories. In substantiation thereof, Bernstein testified that he had been under twenty-four-hour surveillance (R. 829-831), with a detective sitting at his bedside while he slept (R. 1026), and that he had had absolutely no opportunity to communicate with the outside world (R. 975-976). Subsequently, on cross-examination, Bernstein was forced to admit that he had written a number of letters of a scurrilous and threatening nature (R. 1247, 1256, 1259).* These letters (which were erroneously excluded) were definitely material and would have exploded the prosecution's contention. It should be noted that not a single police officer who guarded these witnesses was called to testify. Notwithstanding this proof, the Court charged as follows (R. 3955-3956):

* The contents of these letters are set forth in petitioner Capone's original petition, pp. 48-50; see also, this brief, footnote on pp. 4-5.

> "The Court: I will read that because I have a different ruling. It reads, 'I ask your Honor to charge the jury that they may take into consideration close association of the principal witnesses at various times after their arrest and while in custody, to determine what, if any, opportunity they had to converse with one another regarding the subject-matter of this indictment, and the jury is not bound by the denials unless they believe them.'
>
> "The only evidence I can recall is that they were under constant surveillance; that they were never at any time together without the police being there to see that they did not discuss the case. I decline to so charge.
>
> "Mr. Rosenthal: May I respectfully except?
>
> "The Court: I would so charge if there was any evidence that at any time they were left alone. There is no such evidence. I mean left alone in one another's company.
>
> "Mr. Rosenthal: May I except and, in view of the fact of your Honor's statement, ask that the request be modified to the extent that the jury has a right to draw such reasonable inference from their testimony as is warranted by the facts as they see them.
>
> "The Court: I find that it is not. I find it is all guesswork.
>
> "Mr. Rosenthal: Then I respectfully except.
>
> "The Court: The jury is not permitted to guess.
>
> "Mr. Rosenthal: May I respectfully except.
>
> "The Court: You go by evidence, not by guess work. I think the reason, possibly, Mr. Rosenthal, is clear enough. You cannot lock criminals together when they are waiting their turn to be called to testify, and let them put their heads together and maybe plot something behind the backs of the police.
>
> * * * * * *
>
> "The Court: That would be sloppy police work, to permit discussion."

The lack of judicial balance between the State and the petitioners is again shown by the Court's treatment of the defense of alibi tendered by Weiss.

The alibi was to the effect that on the night of September 12, a time when he was supposed to have been with Bernstein at the scene of the crime, he was actually attending a birthday party for his brother. Five witnesses testified to this and their testimony covers almost 400 pages of the record (R. 3070-3454). Yet, the Court's charge was entirely silent on this alibi. Counsel for petitioner requested the Court "to instruct the jury that the defendant Weiss does not have the burden of proof as to the defense of alibi." He urged that if the alibi raised a reasonable doubt, the defendant was entitled to acquittal. The Court refused to charge as requested, and the instructions given were prefaced by the casual remark (R. 3949):

> "The Court: Oh, gentlemen, I knew there was something I forgot, and, really, I must apologize. This is in perfectly good faith. I think we are all so tired that I sort of faltered towards the end of the charge. Supposing I charge you as to alibi:" *

No adequate opportunity for defense (cf. Twining v. New Jersey, 211 U. S. 78, 112) has been afforded where, as here, the last word of the Court, the final instructions to the supposed triers of the fact, removed from their consideration, and determined adversely to the defense, issues of fact vital to the decision of the case.

As was said in People v. Ohanian, 245 N. Y. 227, 230:

> "The judge's repeated comments and his charge assumed the falsity of the defense. The practical effect of them may be viewed as morally depriving the jury of its freedom of action and as coercing it into reaching such a verdict as perhaps it might not otherwise have rendered."

In the poisoned atmosphere at this trial, even the outward manifestations of fairness gradually disappeared as the trial proceeded. Particularly apposite to this case is the language of the Supreme Court of Pennsylvania, per Maxey, J., in Commonwealth v. Petrillo, 338 Penna. 65 (12 Atl. (2d) 317, 331):

---

* During the summation the Trial Judge said (R. 3773): "The charge has been prepared * * *."

> "• • • There is no other case which calls for such strict impartiality on the part of a trial judge and such fearless adherence by him to these 'fundamental principles of liberty and justice which lie at the base of all our civil and political institutions' (Hebert v. Louisiana, 272 U. S. 312, 316, 47 S. Ct. 103, 104, 71 L. Ed. 270, 48 A. L. R. 1102) as those cases which have been sensationalized in the public press. In all such cases there is much public prejudgment and this is always adverse to any of those at whom the finger of accusation points. Anyone mentioned as in any way connected with those accused is in the public mind already condemned. No trial judge should permit his judgment and sense of good taste to be warped because of his official participation in a 'front page' case." (The emphasis is the Court's.)

The Trial Judge here, however, did permit his judgment to be warped. He did unmistakably communicate to the jury his personal belief that these petitioners were guilty. Again quoting from Commonwealth v. Petrillo:

> "The law confers on no judge the power of pre-judgment. A defendant charged with crime is not likely to receive a fair and impartial trial, if the judge from the beginning exhibits an attitude which conveys to the jury the impression: 'Here is a man guilty of an atrocious murder but of course we have got to go through the form of a trial before we send him to the electric chair.'" (Emphasis is the Court's.)

This is no question of form; it is one of substance. The right to be heard is more than just the right to speak (often even that was barred in this case). It is an empty form if the speech is to deafened ears; and no less so if the mind of the hearers is closed to reception, or directed to reject perception.

As one of the dissenting Judges (Rippey, J.) said (R. 4090):

> "• • • the conduct of the trial throughout was so grossly unfair as to leave the defendants without even a remote outside chance of any free consideration by the jury of their defenses."

CONCLUSION

> "As applied to a criminal trial, denial of due process is the failure to observe that fundamental fairness essential to the very concept of justice. In order to declare a denial of it we must find that the absence of that fairness fatally infected the trial; the acts complained of must be of such quality as necessarily prevent a fair trial." Lisenba v. California, 314 U. S. 219, 236.

Four of the seven judges in the Court of Appeals remained unconvinced of petitioners' guilt (cf. People v. Crum, 272 N. Y. 348, 350). Three expressed firm belief that the judgment of death should be reversed because, "that fundamental fairness" being absent, these petitioners did not have a fair trial.

There can be no fundamental fairness where the scales of justice at the outset of a trial are weighted against the defendants, or where the evenness of balance is disturbed during the trial by factors apart from the quality of the evidence adduced.

The State of New York has deprived petitioners of their liberty, and, unless this Court intervenes, will deprive them of their lives, without due process of law. There was a complete disregard of those criteria which this Court has announced to be the minimal standards for the administration of justice in a civilized community. The verdict was predestined by the wave of hysteria which engulfed the jury, the Trial Judge and the prosecutor. In the face of this hysteria, the machinery of justice in the State of New York, usually amply adequate to safeguard the rights of persons accused of crime, broke down. Processes ordinarily sufficient for the administration of justice (see People v. Becker, 210 N. Y. 274) failed entirely in this case.

The Court of Appeals did not say that the jury was impartial; it held that, because of a local statute, the question of fairness in the selection of the jury could not be reviewed. It did not say that the contents of the police records were irrelevant to the issue; the holding was that they were inconclusive. These two elements, if nothing else were present, furnish justification for petitioners' contention that the State failed to provide corrective process for the violation of a right guaranteed by the Federal Constitution.

There was complete disregard of the concept that "whether a guilty man goes free or not is a small matter compared with the maintenance of principles which still safeguard a person accused of crime" (People v. Barbato, per Pound, J., 254 N. Y. 170, 178).

But there is far more in the record to support the contention of petitioners. They submit that the record demonstrates, as they undertook in their petitions for writs of certiorari to show:

A) That the trial was held in an atmosphere which precluded the selection of a fair jury;

B) That the essential witnesses for the prosecution were self-confessed gangsters, thugs and murderers who had the most compelling motive, that of saving their own lives, to perjure themselves in accusing petitioners;

C) That these criminals had every opportunity to correlate their stories;

D) That the Court explained, minimized and condoned their perjuries;

E) That the surroundings of the trial conditioned the jury toward conviction; there was a show of force in the court room; the defendants wore manacles which were removed only in the presence of the jury; the witnesses were surrounded by police officers;

F) That important evidence was suppressed and petitioners were denied access thereto;

G) That the Trial Judge disparaged cross-examination by which, in the words of Chief Judge Lehman, the testimony of prosecution witnesses was, "impeached, if not completely destroyed"; that the attorneys for petitioners were belittled by the Court, and arguments made by them were discredited;

H) That the prosecutor improperly and deceitfully assured the jury that the criminal witnesses for the prosecution would receive their just desserts; that, in summation, the prosecutor was permitted to interject the issue of his personal integrity and to charge defense counsel with being devil's advocates hired with tainted money. These "foul blows" could neither be stopped nor answered; the Judge forbade all interruptions.

I) That the Trial Judge usurped the functions of the jury.

The trial was one in form, not in substance. The prosecutor misused his power as an instrumentality of the State. Neither the jury nor the Judge was impartial.

A printed Record makes a case appear remote from the human factors involved. The concept of due process is not based on abstract theory; it is the foundation of our way of life. We all feel more secure in our daily lives in the knowledge that we in the United States are protected by the law from judgments based on hysteria and passion, even from the tyranny of men's emotions, and that our lives and property are safe against deprivation except after fair trial before a fair tribunal. As opposed to a society based on apprehension and fear, where no man can be sure where he stands or how he will fare, ours is a society of freedom and security where individuals, whatever their status—even "bad" men—are protected by constitutional guarantees against public clamor and official vindictiveness. The presumption of innocence prevails until judgment of guilt has been rendered after fair trial by an impartial Judge and jury. It is unthinkable that men may be deprived of their lives, not because of what they did, but because of the way they were tried.

"Not the least merit of our constitutional system is that its safeguards extend to all—the least deserving as well as the most virtuous." Hill v. Texas, 316 U. S. 400, 406.

Respectfully submitted,

I. Maurice Wormser,
J. Bertram Wegman,
Counsel for petitioner Buchalter.

Arthur Garfield Hays,
John Schulman,
Counsel for petitioner Weiss.

Gerald Weatherly,
with them on the brief.

Sydney Rosenthal,
Counsel for petitioner Capone.

Benj. J. Jacobson,
with him on the brief.

APPENDIX

The relevant portions of constitutional and statutory provisions to which reference is made in the foregoing brief:

Constitution of the United States

AMENDMENT XIV.

SECTION 1. All persons born or naturalized in the United States, and subject to the jurisdiction thereof, are citizens of the United States and of the State wherein they reside. No State shall make or enforce any law which shall abridge the privileges or immunities of citizens of the United States; nor shall any State deprive any person of life, liberty, or property, without due process of law; nor deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws.

New York State Constitution

ARTICLE I, SECTION 2.

Trial by jury in all cases in which it has heretofore been guaranteed by constitutional provision shall remain inviolate forever; but a jury trial may be waived by the parties in all civil cases in the manner to be prescribed by law. The legislature may provide, however, by law, that a verdict may be rendered by not less than five-sixths of the jury in any civil case. A jury trial may be waived by the defendant in all criminal cases, except those in which the crime charged may be punishable by death, by a written instrument signed by the defendant in person in open court before and with the approval of a judge or justice of a court having jurisdiction to try the offense.

New York State Constitution

ARTICLE I. SECTION 6.

No person shall be held to answer for a capital or otherwise infamous crime (except in cases of impeachment, and in cases of militia when in actual service, and the land, air and naval forces in time of war, or which this state may keep with the consent of Congress in time of peace, and in cases of petit larceny, under the regulation of the legislature), unless on indictment of a grand jury, and in any trial in any court whatever the party accused shall be allowed to appear and defend in person and with counsel as in civil actions and shall be informed of the nature and cause of the accusation and be confronted with the witnesses against him. No person shall be subject to be twice put in jeopardy for the same offense; nor shall he be compelled in any criminal case to be a witness against himself, providing, that any public officer who, upon being called before a grand jury to testify concerning the conduct of his office or the performance of his official duties, refuses to sign a waiver of immunity against subsequent criminal prosecution, or to answer any relevant question concerning such matters before such grand jury, shall be removed from office by the appropriate authority or shall forfeit his office at the suit of the attorney-general.

The power of grand juries to inquire into the wilful misconduct in office of public officers, and to find indictments or to direct the filing of informations in connection with such inquiries, shall never be suspended or impaired by law.

No person shall be deprived of life, liberty or property without due process of law.

Judicial Code of the United States

TITLE 28, U. S. C., SECTION 344 (SECTION 237 OF THE JUDICIAL CODE, AS AMENDED).

(b) It shall be competent for the Supreme Court, by certiorari, to require that there be certified to it for review and determination, with the same power and authority and with like effect as if brought up by writ of error, any cause wherein a final judgment or decree has been rendered or passed by the highest court of a State in which a decision could be had where is drawn in question the validity of a treaty or statute of the United States; or where is drawn in question the validity of a statute of any State on the ground of its being repugnant to the Constitution, treaties, or laws of the United States; or where any title, right, privilege, or immunity is specially set up or claimed by either party under the Constitution, or any treaty or statute of, or commission held or authority exercised under, the United States; and the power to review under this paragraph may be exercised as well where the Federal claim is sustained as where it is denied. Nothing in this paragraph shall be construed to limit or detract from the right to a review on a writ of error in a case where such a right is conferred by the preceding paragraph; nor shall the fact that a review on a writ of error might be obtained under the preceding paragraph be an obstacle to granting a review on certiorari under this paragraph.

New York Judiciary Law

SECTION 749aa. SPECIAL JURORS IN CERTAIN COUNTIES.

* * * * * *

2. Persons ineligible. No person shall be selected as such special juror who is by law disqualified or who claims and is allowed exemption from service as a trial juror, or who has been convicted of a criminal offense, or found guilty of fraud or other misconduct by the judgment of any civil court or who possesses such conscientious opinions with regard to the death penalty as would preclude his finding a defendant guilty if the crime charged be punishable with death, or who doubts his ability to lay aside an opinion or impression formed from newspaper reading or otherwise, or to render an impartial verdict upon the evidence, uninfluenced by any such opinion or impression, or whose opinion as to circumstantial evidence is such as would prevent his finding a verdict of guilty upon such evidence, or who avows such a prejudice against any law of the state as would preclude his finding a defendant guilty of a violation of such law, or who avows such a prejudice against any particular defense to a criminal charge as would prevent his giving a fair and impartial trial upon the merits of such defense, or who avows that he cannot in all cases give to a defendant who fails to testify as a witness in his own behalf the full benefit of the statutory provision that such defendant's neglect or refusal to testify as a witness in his own behalf shall not create any presumption against him.

• • • • • •

7. Challenges; trial. The parties to such an action shall have the same number of peremptory challenges and the same challenges for cause to be tried in the same manner as upon a trial with an ordinary jury. The rulings of the trial court, however, in admitting or excluding evidence upon the trial of any challenge for actual bias shall not be the subject of exception. Such rulings and the allowance or disallowance of the challenge shall be final. Upon the formation of a special jury as hereinbefore provided the issue must be tried by such jury as prescribed by the code of criminal procedure or the civil practice act with respect to a jury trial in a criminal or civil action with an ordinary jury.

• • • • • •

FILE COPY

IN THE

Supreme Court of the United States

OCTOBER TERM, 1942

No. 606

LOUIS BUCHALTER,

Petitioner,

against

THE PEOPLE OF THE STATE OF NEW YORK,

Respondents.

No. 610

EMANUEL WEISS,

Petitioner,

against

THE PEOPLE OF THE STATE OF NEW YORK,

Respondents.

No. 619

LOUIS CAPONE,

Petitioner,

against

THE PEOPLE OF THE STATE OF NEW YORK,

Respondents.

PETITIONERS' REPLY BRIEF

I. MAURICE WORMSER,
J. BERTRAM WEGMAN,
Counsel for Petitioner Buchalter.

ARTHUR GARFIELD HAYS,
JOHN SCHULMAN,
GERALD WEATHERLY,
Counsel for Petitioner Weiss.

SYDNEY ROSENTHAL,
BENJ. J. JACOBSON,
Counsel for Petitioner Capone.

INDEX

	Page
Replying to Respondents' Brief, page 6	1
Reply to page 7	2
Reply to pages 9 and 10	3
Reply to page 13	4
Reply to page 14	4
Reply to pages 15-17	5
The Jury Panel	5
Reply to pages 18 and 19	5
The Trial Jury	7
Reply to pages 19 and 20	7
Reply to pages 20-23	13
The Last Three Jurors	13
Reply to pages 23-26	13
The Court's Conduct in the Selection of the Jury	15
Reply to pages 26-27	15
Replying to page 28	16
Reply to pages 40 and 49	17
Suppression of Evidence	18
Reply to pages 29-33	18
Show of Force	22
Reply to pages 33-37	22
Prosecutor's Summation and the Court's Charge to the Jury	23
Reply to pages 37-38	23
The Defense	24
Reply to pages 38-39	24
Review by the Court of Appeals	24
Reply to pages 40-41	24
Argument	25
Reply to page 51	25
Denial of Separate Trial to Capone	26
Reply to pages 48-49	26
The Question Before this Court is not one of mere error but of denial of due process	27
Conclusion	35

CITATIONS

Cases:

Avery v. Alabama, 308 U. S. 444	32
Brown v. Mississippi, 297 U. S. 278	36
Cissna v. Tennessee, 246 U. S. 289, 293-294	26
Commonwealth v. Capalla (1936) 322 Pa. 200, 205-206	28
Commonwealth v. Ronello (1916), 251 Pa. 329, 339	28
Capital City Dairy Company v. Ohio, 183 U. S. 238, 244	26
Chambers v. Florida, 309 U. S. 227	31, 36
Chicago, Burlington &c Railroad v. Chicago, 166 U. S. 226	26
Dewey v. Des Moines, 173 U. S. 193, 199	26
Edward Guerin, case of 23 Cohen's Criminal Appeal Cases, 39	22
Green Bay &c Company v. Patten Paper Company, 172 U. S. 58, 67-68	25
Honeyman v. Hanan, 300 U. S. 14	26
Johnson v. Zerbst, 304 U. S. 458	33
Lisenba v. California, 314 U. S. 219	32
Mallinckrodt Chemical Works v. St. Louis, 238 U. S. 41, 49	26
Moore v. Dempsey, 261 U. S. 86	30, 36
Mooney v. Holohan, 294 U. S. 103	31, 36
Nardone v. U. S., 308 U. S. 338, 340	21
Palko v. Connecticut, 302 U. S. 319, 325	32
People v. Crum, 272 N. Y. 348, 349-50	25
People v. Gaffey, 182 N. Y. 257, 259	25
People v. Kohlmeyer, 284 N. Y. 366	21

Peo. ex rel. Lemon v. Supreme Court, 245 N. Y. 24 20
People v. McQuade, 110 N. Y. 284 14
People v. Black (1925), 317 Ill. 603, 619 28
People v. Rothe (1934), 358 Ill. 52, 56 28
People v. De Martine (1923), 205 App. Div. 80, 84 28
People v. Bigg (1941), 297 Mich. 56, 68 28
People v. O'Regan (1927), 221 App. Div. 311, 338 28
Powell v. Brunswick County, 150 U. S. 433, 440 26
Powell v. Alabama, 287 U. S. 45 ..... 32, 36
Rawlins v. George, 201 U. S. 638, 639 ..... 27, 35
Rex v. Hallam, 4 T. R. (Durnford & East) 691 20
Rector v. City Deposit Bank, 200 U. S. 405, 412 26
San Jose Land & Water Company v. San Jose Ranch Co., 189 U. S. 177, 179-180 26
Sayward v. Denny, 158 U. S. 180 26
Stilson v. United States, 250 U. S. 583 26
Stroud v. U. S. 251 U. S. 15, 20 17
Spies v. Illinois, 123 U. S. 131, 170 35
Whitney v. California, 274 U. S. 357, 360-362 26
Ward v. Texas, 316 U. S. 547, 550 32

Miscellaneous:

Sec. 374-a New York Civil Practice Act 21
Sec. 377, New York Code of Criminal Procedure 14
Sec. 392, Code of Criminal Procedure 21

IN THE

Supreme Court of the United States

OCTOBER TERM, 1942

Nos. 606, 610, 619

LOUIS BUCHALTER, EMANUEL WEISS, and LOUIS CAPONE,
Petitioners,

against

THE PEOPLE OF THE STATE OF NEW YORK,
Respondents.

PETITIONERS' REPLY BRIEF

The Court having granted permission for the submission of a reply brief, our effort will be to dissect and answer the statements in the respondent's brief, in the order there set forth, so that the Court may determine whether the picture portrayed therein is accurate.

There has been submitted to the Court a memorandum on behalf of the petitioners comparing some of the statements made on argument by the prosecutor, with excerpts from the record which establish their inaccuracy and misleading nature.

Except where required for clarity, repetition of anything set forth in the petitioners' briefs and memorandum will be carefully avoided.

REPLYING TO RESPONDENT'S BRIEF, PAGE 6:

In footnote 3 respondent disputes our statement that testimony of members of the Rosen family was stricken. There may be some confusion, but the last word of the Court was (R. 3913):

> "Berger's testimony is also applicable to Buchalter on the alleged events leading up to and causing the Rosen murder. Others who have testified for the People on this point are Rubin, Sylvia Greenspan, nee Rosen, and, very slightly, by Harold Rosen, and also by the decedent's widow. I shall not review this. It covers quite a ramified field, but I charge you as follows:

> "The testimony by members of the Rosen family as to the financial status of the business is too sketchy to have value as evidence. For that reason it has been stricken out." (Emphasis added.)

The testimony of Maguire, Aman and Bell did not relate at all to the murder of Rosen, but was merely offered in attempted proof of flight from which an inference of guilt might be drawn. But this testimony was not connected with the crime charged.

Unquestionably, not a single one of these witnesses' testimony was in any wise applicable to Capone.

REPLY TO PAGE 7:

Respondent says: "In connection with investigations that were being conducted by the authorities Mr. Maguire, in Buchalter's presence, advised Rubin not to become a fugitive from justice (R. 1761). Buchalter disagreed and told Mr. Maguire that, 'if witnesses are not available investigations collapse' (R. 1762; 289 N. Y. at p. 189)."

The record shows, however, that this alleged statement was made in the abstract and was totally disconnected from the Rosen case. Maguire's testimony on this point is fully quoted on pages 2 to 6 of petitioners' MEMORANDUM. Moreover, the record discloses that Buchalter did not disagree with Mr. Maguire's advice. Maguire testified (R. 1775):

> "Q. He never said to you, in your presence, or to Rubin, in your presence, 'Get out of the jurisdiction!' A. He did not."

REPLY TO PAGES 9 AND 10:

At the bottom of page 9, running over to page 10, and in footnote 5 on page 10, respondent says that the witness Rubin denied he knew anything about the Rosen case because of "overpowering fear". The Trial Court refused to permit petitioners' counsel to see the actual statement made by Rubin to McCarthy, and made available only clipped excerpts therefrom. But the Trial Judge gave his interpretation of what was contained in the rest of this statement which we have never seen. He said (R. 2378): "The witness also failed in any way to implicate Lepke. On the other hand he did go out of his way to give assurance that if he could he would. • • • The witness did name two men as probably active participants in the killing, whose names are included in this indictment as probable killers." The Judge did not disclose the names of these two men to counsel.

Thus Rubin was willing to charge two others named in this indictment with the crime, even though he testified (R. 2384):

> "Q. You don't know anything about the Rosen murder at all? A. No."
>
> • • • •
>
> "Q. I am giving you immunity. A. I don't need immunity. I was never taken into anybody's confidence on any murder cases. That was always one thing. Where I got that other stuff from was from general conversation."

If Rubin was really overpowered by fear at that time, as now claimed, why did he accuse as "probably active participants", two persons (unknown to us) who are named in this same indictment and who were allegedly criminal associates of petitioners?

REPLY TO PAGE 13:

In footnote 9 on this page, Respondent has distorted the fact. Petitioners had nothing to do with the printing of the Record, and certainly did not seek to omit the affidavits mentioned. But the Respondent has wilfully omitted from the quotation supplied in the footnote, the very next sentence in the same paragraph of the Buchalter petition and brief from which he has taken the excerpt. The purpose of the omission is obvious. Respondent's insinuation is destroyed by the sentence he omitted, which we quote (Buchalter Petition and supporting brief, for certiorari, p. 50):

> "All that petitioner's counsel said (Affidavit of Hyman Barshay, par. 6) was that he did not object to so much of the motion as asked that a special jury be summoned."

And that sentence was strictly accurate.

REPLY TO PAGE 14:

Respondent says, speaking of an affidavit by counsel for petitioner Buchalter: "After quoting many newspaper clippings his counsel admitted under oath that the district attorney was not responsible for the notoriety. * * *" But we quote the very next sentence of the affidavit, as follows (R. 108):

> "But the fact is that they were circulated to the public with the apparent approval of the officials quoted."

In another part of the affidavit, after quoting a newspaper statement that Buchalter was reported bargaining with the District Attorney for his life, counsel said (R. 86-87):

> "It is a fact, which the authorities should be very willing to acknowledge as such, that the defendant has not conferred with them, that there has been no discussion of a bargain between the defendant's attorneys or other representatives of the defendant with the District Attorney of Kings County or any of his associates or employees."

This acknowledgement was never made.

REPLY TO PAGES 15-17:

In respondent's reference to the statement by Buchalter's counsel that "We are as ready as we will ever be and if we can get permission to interview Jacob Shapiro, we will not delay the trial one minute," respondent omits the context preceding it, which is most material and is fully quoted on page 11 of petitioners' MEMORANDUM.

The suggestion in the footnote on page 17 (#12) that "it is significant that Shapiro was not called as a witness" is misleading. It was never said by Buchalter's counsel that Shapiro was wanted as a witness.

THE JURY PANEL

REPLY TO PAGES 18 and 19:

Respondent at the foot of page 18 quotes a statement of the Court, "Should a new panel be desired, counsel for all the defendants should agree on that" (V. 45), and continues on page 19 with a statement that petitioners did not accept the Court's offer to discharge the panel. The inference of his statement is that we are now, for the first time, complaining about the prejudice. Respondent fails, however, to state the preliminary discussion with respect to the Court's offer to draw a new panel, in which petitioners urged that any new panel would be infected with the same prejudice, and in which the Court admitted the newspaper articles would be remembered "a year from now." (See petitioners' MEMORANDUM, Item 4, pp. 7-10). The Court stated that he "would not entertain any application for the drawing of additional talesmen as long as these articles are published." The fact is, however, that the MIRROR articles continued until September 28th—two weeks after the commencement of the trial.

A complete answer to this contention of the District Attorney is found in the fact that in reality a new and additional panel of 100 talesmen was drawn in order to complete the jury. In this second panel were the jurymen Rorke, Links, Coleman, Butt (who was excused after having been drawn), and Andrews. This panel appeared before the court on October 13th (V. 1556), and the very first person examined—Harry M. Ryan (V. 1556 et seq.)—was challenged for cause for the reason that he had followed the case closely in the newspapers and could not give a fair and impartial verdict. The challenge was sustained (V. 1577-9). The next talesman to be examined—Alfred Elfendein—also had read the articles in the DAILY MIRROR, and expressed prejudice. He was challenged for cause, which was sustained (V. 1579; 1612-14).

Besides these two challenges for cause because of bias against petitioners there were ten additional challenges for cause—Wolff (V. 1682-94, 1698-1712), Aldrich (V. 1694-8), Marcus*, Hinze (V. 1790-4), Gierie (V. 1818-9, 1822-3), Dempsey (V. 1813, 1819-22), Long (V. 1824-27), Stites (V. 1862-4, 1876-9), Yakel (V. 1940-2) and Corning (V. 1945-58)—which were sustained against those talesmen who appeared, of the 100 summoned. As to another, Jacobus, the Court overruled the challenge and petitioners were compelled to exercise a peremptory challenge. Eight peremptory challenges were exercised: Koehler (V. 1573-7, 1596-1600, 1601, 1614-18), Pagnod (V. 1713-22, 1729-33),

---

* Not in index (V. 1769-71)

Jacobus (V. 1828-30, 1831, 1834-9, 1848-59), Dunphy (V. 1830-2, 1839-48), Fisher (V. 1891-99), Roberts*, Harris and Madigan.

In any event, how could counsel, on August 4th, forecast what the answers of these so-called special talesmen would be, and how much prejudice would be displayed by them?

THE TRIAL JURY

REPLY TO PAGES 19 AND 20:

Respondent states that the first nine jurors were pronounced "satisfactory to the defendants," and emphasizes that this was done "when their peremptory challenges had not yet been exhausted"; and that "it is inconceivable that if there were the slightest doubt about the fairness of any one of these jurors that counsel would have deliberately refrained from excusing him peremptorily." By reason of the refusal to change the venue, and the propaganda, petitioners were compelled, in proceeding to trial, either to accept the least undesirable of the men called, or, upon exhaustion of their 30 peremptory challenges, to accept the next twelve men against whom, despite apparent cause, their challenge would not be sustained. The choice was not of satisfactory jurors, but of those least prejudiced against petitioners. The argument advanced by the Respondent has no merit. If carried to its logical conclusion, petitioners would have exhausted the thirty peremptory challenges and might then have been compelled to accept 12 persons of the type of Rorke, Links and Coleman. Of course the result would have been the

---

* Not in index (V. 1758-61; 1766-69; 1771-76)

 Not in index (V. 1653-4; 1663-80).

 Not in index (V. 1630-40).

same; but counsel should not be criticized for their optimism.

Respondent implies that the word "satisfactory" as used by counsel means that the jurors were really satisfactory to the defense. This is a dissimulation. In reality, the word "satisfactory" as used in trial practice in New York means merely that counsel has no legal ground for challenge and does not desire to exhaust one of his few and valuable peremptory challenges.

An analysis of the difficulty in procuring the jury completely refutes Respondent's contention. The selection of the Jury commenced September 15th. The first juror was not accepted until September 24th.

(In the following analysis the numerals in parentheses refer to the order in which talesmen were called.)

(1st juror selected Sep. 24)

Up to the point of 1st juror, 18 talesmen had been examined:
12 were excused for cause (1, 2, 3, 5, 6, 7, 11, 12, 13, 14, 16, 17)
3 peremptorily by defendant (4, 8, 18)
1 excused by court (9)
2 peremptorily by People (10, 15)

Total peremptory challenges—Defendants 3
People 2

(2nd juror selected Oct. 2)

Between 1st and 2nd jurors, 22 talesmen had been examined:
11 were excused for cause (20, 21, 23, 25, 28, 29, 31, 32, 33, 36, 37)
3 peremptorily by defendant (30, 34, 38)
4 excused by court (22; 2 men following 36, 39)
4 peremptorily by People (24, 26, 27, 35)

Total peremptory challenges—Defendants 6
People 6

(3rd juror selected Oct. 6)	Between 2nd and 3rd jurors, 9 talesmen were examined:
	2 were excused for cause (46, 49)
	4 peremptorily by defendant (41, 44, 45, 47)
	1 excused by court (42)
	2 peremptorily by People (43, 48)
	Total peremptory challenges—Defendants 10
	People 8
(4th juror selected Oct. 7)	Between 3rd and 4th jurors, 9 talesmen were examined:
	4 were excused for cause (51, 57, 58, 59)
	3 peremptorily by defendant (53, 54, 56)
	2 excused by the Court (52, 55)
	Total peremptory challenges—Defendants 13
	People 8
(5th juror selected Oct. 7)	Between 4th and 5th jurors, 10 talesmen were examined:
	6 were excused for cause (62, 64, 65, 66, 67, 68)
	2 peremptorily by defendant (69, 70)
	2 peremptorily by People (61, 63)
	Total peremptory challenges—Defendants 15
	People 10
(6th juror selected Oct. 8)	Between 5th and 6th jurors, 2 talesmen were examined:
	2 were excused for cause (72, 73)
	Total peremptory challenges—Defendants 15
	People 10
(7th juror selected Oct. 8)	Between 6th and 7th jurors, 5 talesmen were examined:
	1 was excused for cause (78)
	4 peremptorily by defendant (75, 76, 77, 79)
	Total peremptory challenges—Defendants 19
	People 10

(8th juror selected Oct. 8)	Betwen 7th and 8th jurors (8th was Stoler who was subsequently excused on Oct. 16th) 3 talesmen were examined:
	1 was excused for cause (81)
	1 excused by the Court
	1 peremptorily by People (83)
	Total peremptory challenges—Defendants 19
	People 11
(9th juror —later 8th— Oct. 9)	Between 8th and 9th jurors (9th later became 8th) 7 talesmen were examined:
	3 excused for cause (87, 90, 91)
	2 peremptorily by defendant (86, 89)
	1 excused by the court (85)
	1 peremptorily by the People (88)
	Total peremptory challenges—Defendants 21
	People 12
(10th juror— later 9th— selected Oct. 14th)	Between 9th (later 8th) and 10th (Butt) (later 9th) jurors, 16 talesmen were examined:
	12 excused for cause (93, 94, 95, 96, 97, 98, 100, 101,* 1, 2, 4, 6, 7)
	2 peremptorily by defendant (3, 5)
	1 peremptorily by the People (99)
	Total peremptory challenges—Defendants 23
	People 13
(11th juror— later 9th— selected Oct. 16)	Between 10th (Butt—later excused) (later 9th) and 11th (later 9th) 19 talesmen called:
	8 were excused for cause (10, 11, 14, 17, 19, 21, 22, 24)
	5 peremptorily by defendant (9, 12, 16, 25, 26)
	2 excused by the court (woman following 11, 20)
	4 peremptorily by the People (13, 15, 18, 23)
	Total peremptory challenges—Defendants 28
	People 17

* This was the last talesman of the original panel; numerals following refer to the second panel

(11th juror—later 10th—selected Oct. 16)	Between 11th (later 9th) and 11th (Rorke, later 10th) 3 talesmen were called: 1 was excused for cause (28) 2 peremptorily by defendant (29, 30)
	Total peremptory challenges—Defendants 30 People 17
(12th juror—later 11th—selected Oct. 17)	Between 11th (Rorke, later 10th) and 12th (Links, later 11th) 5 talesmen were examined: 4 were excused for cause (32, 34, 35, 36) 1 peremptorily by the People (33)
	Total peremptory challenges—Defendants 30 People 18
(12th juror selected Oct. 17)	No talesmen examined between Links and Coleman the last two jurors.

Analysis of the use of the 30 peremptory challenges afforded to the petitioners:

10—Judge refused to excuse 10 talesmen on challenges for cause, compelling exercise of 10 peremptory challenges—Hamilton (V. 152-181); Strongin (V. 669-695); Nagle (V. 837-868); Groden (V. 868-904); Batterson (V. 926-954); Flanagan (V. 1403-21; 1435-7; 1448-50; 1454); Koehler(V. 1573-77); 1596-1600; 1601-2; 1614-18); Jacobus (V. 1828-30); 1831; 1832-9; 1848-59); Dunphy (1830-1; 1831-2; 1839-48; 1857-9);

11—against talesmen deemed by counsel prejudiced, but who said their impressions would not affect their deliberations—Camachi (V. 338-40); Jones (V. 568, 570, 571, 573); Finn (V. 748, 751); Ryder (V. 1065-6; 1075-6; 1077-8); Butler (V. 1438-9); Madigan (V. 1630, 1636); Harris (V. 1663-4, 1666); Pagnod

(V. 1730); Roberts (V. 1772, 1776); Pape (V. 99-100);

1—Gillespie—a friend of Head of Indictment Bureau and owner of building where body of wife of notorious gangster was found whose death he attributed to Murder, Inc. (See Main Brief, footnote on p. 26).

8—No reason noted.

30—Total.

Approximately 140 talesmen were examined over a period of five weeks. They were dealt with in the following manner:

Defendants' peremptories	30
People's peremptories	18
Jury (12 and 2 alternates)	14
Sustained for cause*	69
Alternates excused	9
	140

It will be noted that only eight of petitioners' peremptory challenges were exercised without a reason appearing. Of the jurymen who actually sat upon the case—Day (V. 1113) read about the case, but had not since he was called; Gill (V. 1208) read generally about O'Dwyer on crime, and discussed the case in a casual way with a superior; Edgehill (V. 1865) read, but not in detail. Links (V. 1966, 1971-2) had formed no "extraordinary impression"; and Coleman (V. 1987) had read extensively. So that, in addition to Rorke there were five men who sat upon the jury who admitted they had in some way become familiar with the instant case.

* Three names are not in the index to Vols. VI, VII and VIII.

As a last word, the Court in its charge stated to this jury that "the fundamental statutory purpose of the special jury is to get men who are above the average of both intelligence and character." Counsel excepted to this definition and requested that the court advise the jury that "once they have been called, irrespective of their intellect, that they then become the same as any ordinary juryman, so that they don't get a sense of exaggerated ego about their actions." The Court refused so to do.

REPLY TO PAGES 20-23:

The simple answer to Respondent's query, "why did not counsel use one of their twenty-seven peremptorily [sic] challenges" against the juror Stevens? has already been given. He was the nineteenth talesman called, and by comparison with those preceding him, seemed least unsatisfactory.

THE LAST THREE JURORS

REPLY TO PAGES 23-26:

Respondent contends that petitioners could have challenged Rorke peremptorily, instead of using the last peremptory challenge against Andrews. Respondent, ignoring the Record, asserts that Andrews' "fairness was at no time questioned." It is said to be evident "that petitioners with full and unrestricted power to challenge Rorke chose to have him as a juror."

This sophistry is illuminating. Andrews* had been summoned to the jury box before Rorke. Andrews had read about the defendants in the "Sun" and "Telegram" (V. 1908-9). When questioned by the prosecutor, Andrews had failed to disclose his close and intimate friendship with a number of police officers. He excused this failure by saying it had slipped his mind for the moment.

* His name does not appear in the index to the record of the voir dire.

He entertained these men at his home and went out with them socially. When asked, "has this case ever been mentioned during the course of your friendship and being with those gentlemen?" he answered, "No, I don't believe so" (V. 1914-15).

But since he asserted that he had formed no opinion, basis for a challenge for cause was lacking. Petitioners' trial counsel would have been guileless indeed had they voluntarily accepted Andrews as a juror. Moreover, none could have anticipated that the Court would overrule the challenge for cause against Rorke when no peremptory challenges were left to petitioners. In fact, this, in substance, was specifically called to the attention of the Court by one of petitioner's counsel, who cited People v. McQuade, 110 N. Y. 284, as the basis for the exception (V. 1929).

On pages 25-26 respondent says that the jurors Links and Coleman were fair. We answer this on page 25 of petitioners' main brief.

On page 24, Respondent states that the talesman Rorke was challenged by the defense for "'implied bias' (V. 1922). Mr. Rorke was not disqualified under any of the grounds specified by statute as constituting implied bias," referring to the N. Y. Code of Criminal Procedure, 377, which provides that "a juror can only be challenged for implied bias for eight specific reasons, 'and for no other'," set forth in the appendix. This assertion is reiterated on pages 39 and 40 of Respondent's brief. The Prosecutor would have this Court believe that the juror Rorke was challenged only for "implied bias," because of his relationship with the police inspector. The baseless inference is suggested, by the quotation on page 39 from the Per Curiam opinion of the Court of Appeals, that that Court actually passed on this challenge, since it was said to be for "implied bias." But of course the challenge was not made and could not have been made on that ground. The truth is that from the outset of this trial the Court, the Prosecutor and all counsel mislabelled challenges as for implied bias when actual bias was really meant. Actually, there was not a single challenge for implied bias (as defined by statute) throughout the voir dire. But on challenges for actual bias, frequently the word "implied" was inadvertently used instead of "actual."(See V. 554, 617, 725, 728, 862, 867, 908, 953, 1029, 1186, 1324, 1451, 1474, 1518, 1612, 1711, 1747, 1823, 1836, 1840, 1922, 1944). Finally, the Court, on this very challenge against Rorke, stated (V. 1930):

> "The Court viewed the challenge as being for all purposes of bias, and consequently considered the point of alleged bias that developed."

In so ruling, the Court said it "believes its decisions to be correct and that they will stand up on appeal." This statement by the Court was in line with similar statements assuming there would be a conviction and appeal (R. 3875; 3967; 3990).

THE COURT'S CONDUCT IN THE SELECTION OF THE JURY

REPLY TO PAGES 25-27:

In an effort to controvert our contention that the Judge bludgeoned the talesmen into abjuring prejudice, Respondent cites what the Trial Judge said about giving defense abundant latitude (at the beginning of the trial, V. 49), and then says that the Judge took precautions against prejudice after the jury had been selected (V. 1981-82). Respondent then makes the bald statement that "No greater latitude could have been given defense counsel than was allowed in this case." The prosecutor is entirely silent about the innumerable instances noted in petitioners' main brief, showing the contrary to be the fact. It is no answer to our contention to say merely that over four weeks were consumed in questioning jurors, and that "the transcript is over 2000 pages." That indicates, as is the fact, that prejudice was indeed rampant.

REPLYING TO PAGE 28:

Respondent argues that the Trial Court was fair because Mr. Butt, the juror who developed a prejudice after he had been seated in the box, was excused by the Court, who said: "This is in fairness to the defense."

However, the Court was ready to have the oath administered to the jury after he had asked each juror individually whether he had followed his instructions and had received from each the answer, "I have" (V. 1981-2). This answer was given by Mr. Butt, as by each other juror. Were it not for the fact that one of the counsel for petitioners then suggested that the Court ask whether anything had happened which in any way would change any of the answers the jurors had given when examined, the oath would have been administered. When that question was asked, Mr. Butt disclosed to the Court his prejudice, leaving the Court no choice but to excuse him as a juryman. Yet the Court seemed to think it was a favor to the defense.

It needed a forceful character to acknowledge this prejudice after he had sworn when he qualified as a special juror that he would not be influenced, and again when he was examined as a juror in this case. How many of the remaining jurors lacked the moral strength to express their true opinion in view of their previous oaths is the question that persists. True it is that had it not been for the question which petitioners' counsel asked the Court to propound, Butt would have remained on this jury.

REPLY TO PAGES 40 AND 49:

Respondent states that the holding of the Court of Appeals by virtue of the Judiciary Law that "the rulings of the Trial Court upon challenges for actual bias are final and not appealable" necessarily applies to challenges for actual bias made against jurors who did not participate in the verdict. Hence, Respondent says, a false issue is raised respecting whether the decision of the Court of Appeals deprived petitioners of "the right to question the fairness and impartiality of the jury empaneled." The true contention of the petitioners appears on pages 49-53 of the main brief and will not be reiterated.

At page 48, Respondent cites the case of Stroud v. U. S., 251 U. S. 15, 20. This case, however, supports the contention of petitioners that the overruling of a challenge for bias, even though the talesman did not sit upon the jury, is reviewable. In that case the defendant was entitled to 20 peremptory challenges and was overruled on one challenge for cause, necessitating the exercise of one of his peremptory challenges. The Court, however, granted him 22 peremptory challenges, which were two more than the number allowed by statute. This Court held at page 21:

> "Thus his right to exercise peremptory challenges was not abridged to his prejudice by an erroneous ruling as to the challenge for cause. In view of this fact, and since there is nothing in the record to show that any juror who sat upon the trial was in fact objectionable, we are unable to discover anything which requires a reversal upon this ground."

In addition, the Court there had excluded from the jury all persons residing within Leavenworth County, where appellant claimed prejudice existed on account of comments in the public press. In the instant case, the Court did not grant any additional challenges, but in fact overruled ten proper challenges for cause. Nor did the Court in the case at bar exclude the citizens of Kings County, where the propaganda was circulated. The jury was exclusively composed of residents of Kings County.

SUPPRESSION OF EVIDENCE

REPLY TO PAGES 29-33:

On page 30 respondent quotes the Trial Judge's statement, regarding these records, as follows (R. 1882):

> "If you wish you can have it marked for identification and then offer it in evidence, and if there is an objection, the Court will rule."

Not only was this not an expression of willingness to receive the reports in evidence, but this incident took place on November 10 when the records were not in Court and could not even be marked for identification (R. 2141, 1882-3. Further discussion ceased until November 12 when the records were in Court (R. 2141). Then the Court refused to allow petitioners' counsel to examine them and refused even to look at them himself (R. 2140-2153).

The record shows (R. 2147):

> "Mr. Wegman: We want to see these records for two reasons: First, because in order to lay a foundation we ought to be able to cross-examine these witnesses as to places and times indicated by these records and, secondly, to call the police officers who witnessed—"

(R. 2152-3):

> "The Court: The Court is not going to say any more because I do not propose to have any record that will cause an appellate court to think that that is what activates my ruling, but I am telling you it is just arrant hearsay. You are not going to be permitted to have the inspection and I am not going to hear anything more." (Italics supplied.)

• • • •

"Mr. Barshay: First, your Honor, I do not know of any law which makes these police records private records. My understanding is that they are public records and I cite to you as authority the case I tried, People against Behan, where he was indicted for stealing public records, and I contended under the law there that they were private records, being under the same impression then as your Honor is now. I was overruled by the Court and the indictment was sustained and we had to go to the jury on the question of fact. Now, second, I do not know which police officers, your Honor, to subpoena because unless I know which police officer said he followed him and reported to his chief that he did follow him and said in that report whom he saw the defendant Buchalter with, at what place, at what time, at what date, I am in no position to subpoena the entire Police Department of the City of New York. Third, under the law, the law presumes that an officer of the City of New York does his duty honestly and faithfully and not that he does it by hearsay and, if in Mr. Turkus' possession or in the Police Department's possession there is evidence which gives the lie to any witness offered in this court room, as a public duty he owes it not only to the defendants but to the community to produce it.

"Mr. Turkus: Nobody finds fault with that statement. There is another——

"The Court: The Court will permit no more post mortem.

"Mr. Barshay: I take exception.

"The Court: A long time back the Court made its ruling.

"Mr. Barshay: Exception."

All questions concerning the materiality of these reports would have been obviated had the Trial Judge examined them himself. Instead, he left it to the prosecutor alone to judge the import of the documents (R. 2146), accepting the District Attorney's statement of what they contained.* There is no merit in the suggestion that confidential information not relevant to the case would have been improperly revealed. The Court could have, as he did in relation to Rubin's statement to McCarthy (R. 2378-88), taken the precaution to prevent the revelation of confidential matter, and at the same time disclose to the defendants that portion of the reports which was material and relevant to the present case.

Replying to Mr. Turkus' contention on the trial, as quoted on page 31 of respondent's brief, that these were confidential reports, we point out that these reports were not private papers or notes of the District Attorney. They were subpoenaed from the Police Department. They were public records. Nor were they papers that were not admissible in evidence. These factors distinguish the case from People ex rel. Lemon v. Supreme Court, 245 N. Y. 24, which concerned what the Court called "merely mnemonic instruments whereby the prosecutor may be better able to elicit evidence hereafter."

In the Lemon case, supra, the Court referred to Rex v. Hallam, 4 T. R. (Durnford & East) 691, decided in 1792, which it called the "point of departure" in any discussion of the subject. There the question was whether the defendant should have access to a report of a Board of

---

*When the Judge examined pertinent documents, they were found to be material. For example, he made available to the defense, after demand and some dispute (R. 1218-1221), the Grand Jury testimony of the witness Bernstein. The Court found therein no contradictions of his testimony at the trial (R. 1222). But there were many which were of vital importance. It was found that before the Grand Jury, Bernstein had ascribed to one Strauss (who was executed between the time of the Grand Jury testimony and the time of this trial) many acts which at the trial he said were done by either petitioner Capone or petitioner Weiss. E.g., R. 721-2, cf. 1228-30; 729, cf. 1263-4; 1266-7; 715, cf. 1228. See also, Capone's Petition for Certiorari, p. 46.

Inquiry which had examined witnesses in India. The Court said: "The practice on common law indictments and on information on particular statutes shows it to be clear that this defendant is not entitled to inspect the evidence on which the prosecution is founded till the hour of the trial."

Why should not the defense, in the interests of justice, have access to police reports which might be beneficial to their case? Why the secrecy? What is the public policy involved? It was suggested that lawyers, officers of the Court, might make use of information in the reports to help other criminals. The supposition is abhorrent and revolting. A state should not be permitted to value the secrecy of police records more than human life and liberty.

These reports were admissible in evidence (although hearsay at common law) by virtue of § 374-a of the New York Civil Practice Act, made applicable by the Code of Criminal Procedure, § 392. They are in the same category as hospital records, the introduction in evidence of which was held proper in People v. Kohlmeyer, 284 N. Y. 366, Cf., Nardone v. U. S., 308 U. S. 338, 340, where the Court said: "Any claim for the exclusion of evidence logically relevant in criminal prosecutions is heavily handicapped. It must be justified by an over-riding public policy expressed in the Constitution or the law of the land."

We submit, however, that the question whether these reports were admissible under the New York statutes is not necessarily determinative of the question before this Court. The concept of due process would require that they be admitted anyhow, and that any State law that would prevent defendants from having access thereto would violate the Federal Constitution.

The Court of Appeals in ruling on the suppression of this evidence (Resp. Br. p. 32-33) did not say the reports were confidential, did not say they were irrelevant, did not say they were inadmissible as hearsay, or for any other reason, but held merely that they were inconclusive. That ruling was made without giving petitioners any opportunity to examine the reports so that the materiality might have been demonstrated.

SHOW OF FORCE

REPLY TO PAGES 33-37:

On pages 33 and 34, the respondent quotes from the summation of Buchalter's counsel (R. 3546-7; 3584-5; 3589) and says: "the stubborn fact remains that his disclosures far outweighed the conjectural prejudice which petitioners claim arose from the fact that they were brought to and from the courtroom in manacles." That same excuse was offered for the newspaper publicity. Respondent thus seeks to excuse the prejudicial effect of both the publicity and the manacling by pointing to the summation of counsel, which was a tactic of desperation made necessary by the exigencies of the situation created by that very publicity and manacling. Cf. case of Edward Guerin, 23 Cohen's Criminal Appeal Cases, 39.

On pages 36 and 37, respondent characterizes as "a figment of their imagination" petitioners' argument that the surrounding of prosecution witnesses by police and court officers was an "insidious suggestion to the jury" that these witnesses needed protection. The district attorney argues that this was no more than the usual procedure. He somehow overlooks the fact that when the defense objected to this show of force, the prosecutor asked (R. 687):

> "Is the objection to the protection of the witness?"

PROSECUTOR'S SUMMATION AND THE COURT'S CHARGE TO THE JURY

REPLY TO PAGES 37-38:

Petitioners join in respondent's request that this Court read the summations of all counsel, portions of which are contained in petitioners' MEMORANDUM at pages 12-16. We invite particular comparison between the prosecutor's summation and the summation of Capone's counsel which immediately preceded it. The intemperate excesses of the prosecutor's summation, which the respondent calls "overforceful expression," were in sharp contrast to the calm analysis of the summation which the prosecutor attempted to answer.

It is difficult to understand the result below since, as Judge Loughran said (R. 4086):

> "A majority of this court is gravely apprehensive that such diffuse departures by the trial prosecutor from legitimate argument may have unduly prejudiced the jury against the defendants." (Emphasis ours.)

On page 38 respondent quotes three brief excerpts out of a charge which covers over sixty pages of the record. These excerpts should be compared with those quoted on page 35 and pages 67-74 of petitioners' main brief. The objectionable and unfair material in the charge—e.g., "When rogues fall out" (R. 3903-4), "little white lies" (R.3898-9), the "time-table" episode (R. 3906-7; 3989-90), "segregating evidence" (R. 3903, 3909-10, 3914, 3916), cross-examination "hit or miss" (R. 3903), "disregard" Grand Jury testimony (R. 3899-3900), to expect recollection "is an unholy thing" (R. 3894), "sloppy police work" (R. 3955-6), and alibi charge (R. 3949),—did not merely indicate a lapse or mistake, for the charge had been carefully prepared, as the Judge himself stated (R. 3773).

Of course the Court paid lip service to the proprieties, but he made sure to vitiate all possible chance that the jury might decide the case fairly. It was no cure for the prejudicial conduct of the trial and the prejudice inherent in the charge that he told the jury not to be prejudiced—at the same time that he misled them.

The Court unconsciously exposed his state of mind while delivering the charge, when an exception was taken to that portion relating to a certain prosecution witness. He said (R. 3970):

> "The Court: Didn't I make a blanket charge covering all witnesses on that point? Yes, I did, distinctly.
>
> "Mr. Climenko: At some point your Honor did.
>
> "The Court: Yes, I did, and that covers a multitude of sins. * * *"

THE DEFENSE

REPLY TO PAGES 38-39:

Respondent's reference here to petitioners' failure to take the stand is a resort to the same tactics as were employed upon the trial. (See petitioners' main brief, pp. 62-63.)

On page 39 respondent says, "Capone offered no defense whatever." The view of Capone's counsel was and is that no defense was necessary. (See petitioner Capone's supplemental brief.)

REVIEW BY THE COURT OF APPEALS

REPLY TO PAGES 40-41:

Respondent quotes from Chief Judge Lehman's opinion, but does not quote (R. 4078): "Evidence coming from a polluted source has failed to remove reasonable doubt of the defendants' guilt from my mind."

Chief Judge Crane, for the New York Court of Appeals, said in People v. Crum, 272 N. Y. 348, 349-50:

> "The Constitution of this State in article VI, section 7, provides that the jurisdiction of the Court of Appeals, except where the judgment is of death, shall be limited to the review of questions of law. 'This,' said the court in People v. Gaffey (182 N. Y. 257, 259), 'enables us to review the facts in capital cases as we always did.' A review of the facts meaas that we shall examine the evidence to determine whether in our judgment it has been sufficient to make out a case of murder beyond a reasonable doubt. We are obliged to weigh the evidence and form a conclusion as to the facts. It is not sufficient, as in most of the cases with us, to find evidence which presents a question of fact; it is necessary to go further before we can affirm a conviction and find that the evidence is of such weight and credibility as to convince us that the jury was justified in finding the defendant guilty beyond a reasonable doubt.
>
> "A reading of this record causes me to hesitate. I am not convinced. I have a reasonable doubt which I shall attempt to explain and which, in my judgment, compels us to reverse this conviction and grant a new trial."

ARGUMENT

REPLY TO PAGE 51:

Respondent says that the charge fails to present any Federal question, and that the claim was not raised below. In Green Bay &c. Company v. Patten Paper Company, 172 U. S. 58, 67-68, this Court said:

> "But no particular form of words or phrases has ever been declared necessary in which the claim of Federal rights must be asserted. * * * 'If it appear from the record, by clear and nec> essary intendment, that the Federal question must have been directly involved, so that the state court could not have given judgment, without deciding it, that will be sufficient.' Powell v. Brunswick County, 150 U. S. 433, 440; Sayward v. Denny, 158 U. S. 180; Chicago, Burlington &c. Railroad v. Chicago, 166 U. S. 226."

See also: Honeyman v. Hanan, 300 U. S. 14; Whitney v. California, 274 U. S. 357, 360-362; Cissna v. Tennessee, 246 U. S. 289, 293-294; Mallinckrodt Chemical Works v. St. Louis, 238 U. S. 41, 49; San Jose Land & Water Company v. San Jose Ranch Co., 189 U. S. 177, 179-180; Capital City Dairy Company v. Ohio, 183 U. S. 238, 244; Rector v. City Deposit Bank, 200 U. S. 405, 412; Dewey v. Des Moines, 173 U. S. 193, 199.

The opinions of the Court of Appeals of New York, as well as the remittitur, show that the Federal question of a fair trial was directly involved. See also, petitioners' MEMORANDUM, pp. 1-2. In respect of the charge, in the Motion for Re-argument below, it was squarely claimed that there was a violation of "due process." The points were also made at the trial itself, although counsel did not specifically refer to the Fourteenth Amendment, because the Judge said he did not want the reasons for the exceptions assigned (R. 3969). See R. 3869-70, 3985-6, 3996-7. Similar objections and exceptions in respect of the conduct of the trial appear throughout the Record.

DENIAL OF SEPARATE TRIAL TO CAPONE

REPLY TO PAGES 48-49:

In support of the contention that the denial of this petitioner's motion for a separate trial does not raise a question of due process, Respondent cites the case of Stilson v. United States, 250 U. S. 583. That case, however, is not applicable to, or determinative of the question here presented. It involved the question of whether, where a severance had been denied, a ruling in a federal case that a peremptory challenge by one defendant should apply to all co-defendants was a violation of the Sixth Amendment of the Federal Constitution; and it was held that such a ruling as to a peremptory challenge was not a violation of any constitutional right. It was not held, however, that the denial of a severance in a State Court does not constitute a denial of due process.

Here our claim of deprivation of due process arising from denial of severance is not based on Capone's being forced to join others in peremptory challenges. It is claimed that this is one of the integral parts of the complete pattern woven through the trial—all of which taken together precluded a fair consideration of the evidence against him.

In addition, the District Attorney has it appear that this motion for a severance was denied before the trial by another Judge. This motion was not so denied; it was denied without prejudice to renewal before the Trial Court (R. 31-54). It was this Trial Judge who denied the numerous motions for a severance, enumerated on page 17 of this petitioner's supplemental brief.

THE QUESTION BEFORE THIS COURT IS NOT ONE OF MERE ERROR BUT OF DENIAL OF DUE PROCESS

The District Attorney would confine the doctrine of due process to the specific facts of those cases which have been considered in this Court.

We do not ask the Court to extend the doctrine of due process beyond the real meaning of the law which it has announced. We recognize the rule stated in the opinion of Mr. Justice Holmes in Rawlins v. Georgia, 201 U. S. 638, 639, that > "If the State Constitution and laws as construed by the State Court are consistent with the Fourteenth Amendment, we can go no further. The only question for us is, whether a state could authorize the course of proceedings adopted, if that course were prescribed by its constitution in express terms."

In this test lies the distinction between error and deprivation of due process. What we claim in this case is that New York State could not by its constitution or by its statutes enacted pursuant to the constitution, authorize what happened in this case.

No state constitutional provision or other law could, within the limits of the Fourteenth Amendment, authorize a departure from those elements of fundamental fairness essential to due process. No state enactment could authorize a prosecutor to say to a jury that he was sure the defendants were guilty and that in reaching its verdict the jury should rely upon his good faith and integrity. That would make the issue depend not upon the evidence, but on faith in the honesty of public officials. That sort of thing has often been condemned. Convictions have been reversed because the district attorney called the defendant a "cold-blooded killer" (Commonwealth v. Capalla (1936), 322 Pa. 200, 205-206), and where he declared in effect that he would not prosecute men concerning whose innocence he had the slightest doubt (People v. O'Regan (1927), 221 App. Div. 311, 338).

See also Commonwealth v. Ronello (1916), 251 Pa. 329, 339; People v. Black (1925), 317 Ill. 603, 619; People v. Rothe (1934), 358 Ill. 52, 56; People v. DeMartine (1923), 205 App. Div. 80, 84; People v. Bigg (1941), 297 Mich. 58, 68.

Any such hypothetical statute would violate the concept of due process. Yet this is exactly what the District Attorney did in this case. Said Prosecutor Turkus (these excerpts are from different parts of his summation):

> "A hopeless case—if they did not know it when they got their retainer, there is no lawyer in the court room that does not know it, when all of the evidence was in, that there are three guilty men at this Bar of justice" (R. 3804).
>
> "Do you think that when the investigation went on Judge O'Dwyer sat down, and out of seven million people in New York City, or out of twelve million people in New York State, he selected Lepke, Capone and Weiss for a witch hunt?" (R. 3807).
>
> "Don't let anybody insidiously try to get you thinking about punishment. That is not your responsibility. It is their responsibility, for if they had not been three of the killers of Rosen, you would not have them sitting here" (R. 3819-3820).
>
> "Whatever my lot in life may be, whether I go out of public office after this case or stay in, whatever the future holds for me, I say to you with all due solemnity, that nothing I have ever learned as a public prosecutor, no talent that I now enjoy, would ever be used in any way with any of you to make you feel that I had discredited you or myself, or any member of the public. And that is just for me alone. And one more thought—if I could spend the rest of my life fighting this type of a situation, I would like it" (R. 3821).
>
> "Is the pay I get from the County of Kings tainted, in comparison to what pay they have gotten from Lepke, Capone and Weiss?" (R. 3803).

The defense had taken the position that Bernstein and the other criminals had concocted their stories. The District Attorney assumed that this charged his Office with a "frame-up" and then presented the issue of his own integrity, saying (R. 3803-3804):

> "Is there a million dollars that would make me, a young man with the blood of life going through my veins, understanding all that it means to live and breathe—is there a million dollars that would make me frame the three of them? * * * these lawyers * * * Think of it, accusing Judge O'Dwyer and Burt Turkus and Sol Klein and Lewis Joseph and every law enforcement agent that had something to do with this case, of murder, of an attempt to kill them. That is what it is, if one-fiftieth of their insinuations are true as to the manufacturing of this case, sticking witnesses together to compare notes, and framing them. If one-fiftieth is true, take O'Dwyer, Turkus and the rest of us, tar and feather us, and run us out of town on a rail, and put us in jail. That is where we belong—not here representing the People of the State of New York." (R. 3803-3804).

Criticism was made by the District Attorney that petitioners rely upon decisions such as Moore v. Dempsey, 261 U. S. 86. He claims that such cases are not apposite because no physical violence was directed toward the defendants or toward the jury. But "* * * violence is not the only form of force; it comes in subtle disguises." Petitioners did not coin the phrase that the Mirror articles were "raising havoc with the jurors." That is the language of the Trial Judge after twenty-four prospective jurors had been examined (V. 460). Havoc raised with the jury panel is destructive of due process irrespective of the source of the contamination; it is the fact of the havoc that matters, not the means by which it was brought about.

The District Attorney argues that formalisms were uttered by the Judge which properly stated the law; that the jury were told that they must consider the facts in reaching their decision. Unfortunately, however, the passion and prejudice instilled during the course of a long trial and by the major portions of the charge cannot be exercised by general, placid passages in the charge. The mischief remains.

The argument of the District Attorney that the acts of the prosecutor may be ignored is no different from the contention of the State in Mooney v. Holohan, 294 U. S. 103, that acts of the prosecutor cannot in themselves constitute a denial of due process. This Court, however, has held that the prosecutor is part of the machinery of justice of the State. The prosecutor in this case permitted his name to be used without objection or action on his part, without disclaimer or public denial, in articles which raised havoc with the jury, and in others upon which reliance was placed in the court room by the Court. It was therefore in part his action, and hence the State's action, which prevented an impartial jury from being selected. It was the State, acting through the prosecutor and the Court, which failed to provide the corrective process required by the Fourteenth Amendment. The Court threw up its hands, declared itself to be wholly impotent in the circumstances; and, without any rebuke to the newspapers or to the District Attorney, permitted the trial to proceed. Cf. V. 542, 837.

There was a newspaper story on May 16, 1941, the day Buchalter was arraigned (pages 11-12, petitioners' Main Brief) to the effect that Buchalter was trying to buy his life by making confessions. Denials by Buchalter (R. 86-87) were of no avail, but a public disclaimer by the District Attorney might have stifled any such publicity. Despite request therefor, there was no disavowal (R. 91, 86-87).

When denial of due process has been the issue, this Court has examined and made its own determination of the facts, even though they were disputed, and even though those facts had been found against the petitioners. In Chambers v. Florida, 309 U. S. 227, the Court found a confession had been extorted even though the jury had found against the petitioners on that issue and the courts of the State had sustained the findings; so also in Ward v. Texas, 316 U. S. 547, 550. In Powell v. Alabama, 287 U. S. 45, this Court held there was no adequate representation by counsel, despite the contrary finding of the State Court. In Lisenba v. California, 314 U. S. 219, the Court examined the facts, and it did likewise in Avery v. Alabama, 308 U. S. 444.

In these cases as well as others, this Court weighed the facts, not concerning the guilt or innocence of the petitioners, but of the denial of due process. In some it held that due process had been denied. In others the holding was that the defendants' constitutional rights had not been infringed. In all instances, this Court appraised the actualities—the substance and not the form of what took place at the trial.

Just what is the substance of the right guaranteed under the Fourteenth Amendment? As this Court said through Mr. Justice Cardozo in Palko v. Connecticut, 302 U. S. 319, 325:

> "The line of division may seem to be wavering and broken if there is a hasty catalogue of the cases on the one side and the other. Reflection and analysis will induce a different view. There emerges the perception of a rationalizing principle which gives to discrete instances a proper order and coherence."

The substance of due process is a philosophy of justice and a conception of a way of life. It is "of the very essence of a scheme of ordered liberty." (Palko v. Connecticut, supra.)

Surely it is a part of such a scheme that a criminal trial is not for the purpose of finding that the defendant is guilty, but of finding whether he is guilty. Where, as in this case, the jury panel was obviously subjected to and influenced by propaganda which the Court and the prosecutor made, no attempt to stop, where the selection of the jury was obviously prejudicial to the petitioners, where acts of the Judge and acts of the prosecutor were directed to obtaining a conviction irrespective of the means which might be employed, one cannot say that there was an investigation of the guilt or innocence of these petitioners and therefore a trial by reason.

What is the State's obligation under the Fourteenth Amendment? The State is charged with the duty of providing a fair and impartial tribunal, prepared calmly and dispassionately to appraise the facts and only the facts bearing upon the guilt or innocence of the persons charged with crime. That tribual does not consist of the Judge alone or of the jury alone. Judge, jury, prosecutor and defense counsel are all part of that tribunal. See Johnson v. Zerbst, 304 U. S. 458. The Judge must rule impartially and fairly. The jury must be unprejudiced. The prosecutor may not use his position as part of the tribunal and as the representative of the State in a manner so as improperly to influence or to impose upon the jury. By the same token, the defendants are entitled to present their defense by counsel. The mere fact that they are represented by counsel is not enough. Counsel should be entitled to cross-examine witnesses fully and to reveal the truth by showing that witnesses are testifying falsely. Destruction of the prosecution's case is as much a defense as the production of affirmative evidence to combat the accusation. The persistent, continuous and uniform efforts on the part of the Court in this case to destroy the function of defense counsel by bolstering witnesses whose perjury was revealed by cross-examination, by repression of counsel, and disparagement of their argument to the jury upon the facts, was in effect a deprivation of the right of counsel. What purpose is there in providing a defendant with the right to counsel if a court is permitted to tell the jury that they are not to be "misled" by counsel's proper argument?

We do not urge that casual comment by a court, or occasional expression of opinion on some fact constitutes bias or partiality. A different view should be taken when there is a uniform, persistent course of conduct by which every factor favorable to the prosecution is emphasized and stressed by the Court, where every factor damaging to the prosecution is minimized, excused and condoned. In such a case it would be ignoring actualities to say that there has been a fair and impartial tribunal.

The District Attorney's admission that the trial was not "faultless" is a masterpiece of understatement. He argues that the matters complained of were mere irregularities and errors solely within the purview of the State courts and not cognizable in this Court. The difference between mere error and denial of due process, we submit, lies in the measuring rod and the subject matter which is being measured. Error is measured by the application of State law. A State may provide the kind of tribunal before which the defendant is to be tried. It may be a Judge sitting alone or it may consist of a Judge and a jury. The State may prescribe the rules of substantive law by which conduct is to be judged. A State may also prescribe the rules of evidence which govern the trial. The question whether the rules have been adhered to is one for the State Court to determine. A departure from these rules, whether it be a statute of the Legislature or law as announced by the courts, is error with which this Court is not concerned.

However, if a State law is obnoxious to the Fourteenth Amendment, it cannot stand. This Court has recognized that it is not only the law as written by the Legislature which must be measured by that Amendment, but the law in action. The law which is measured in any specific case by the yardstick of the Constitution is not the statute enacted by the Legislature alone. It is the statute as it is construed by the Court, and as it is administered in the trial by the Court, by the District Attorney, by the jury Commissioners or by the other agencies of the State. As this Court said in Spies v. Illinois, 123 U. S. 131, 170, it will consider the processes by which a person is convicted of crime

> "to see if in the actual administration of the rule of the statute by the Court, the rights of the defendants under the Constitution of the United States were in any way impaired or violated."

The events which improperly influenced the jury, the actions of a biased judge, and the efforts of an overzealous prosecutor are therefore not mere errors. The Court of Appeals of the State of New York (despite vigorous dissenting opinions) has held that there is no prejudicial error in the record. Therefore, according to the laws of the State of New York, what happened at this trial is proper. This Court is now asked whether the law in the State of New York which permitted these things to happen is consonant with the Constitution. To revert to the statement in Rawlins v. Georgia, 201 U. S. 638, 639, the question is "whether a State could authorize the course of proceedings adopted, if that course were prescribed by its Constitution in express terms."

We urge that the Constitution forbids a State to sanction a trial such as the one which resulted in the present judgment.

CONCLUSION

Decisions of this Court, particularly in recent years, have set a standard for the conduct of criminal trials in the United States. It is not difficult to observe a pattern which would bring our procedure in line with the traditions observed in England. In many of our courts we find the same fairness and decorum that characterize English practice. The warnings issued by the Supreme Court in recent decisions apply to trials of other kinds. The practices that have heretofore been condemned, such as mob domination of a trial (Moore v. Dempsey, 261 U. S. 86), the manufacture or suppression of evidence (Mooney v. Holohan, 294 U. S. 103), the wringing of confessions by third degree methods (Chambers v. Florida, 309 U. S. 227; Brown v. Mississippi, 297 U. S. 278), the denial of full benefit of independent counsel to a defendant (Powell v. Alabama, 287 U. S. 45)—such things would be unthinkable in a criminal court in England. The condemnation of such practices by our Supreme Court have raised the standards of our State courts nearer to those of British Courts.

Can one conceive of a British Court permitting newspaper publicity which would poison prospective jurors against defendants? If that were done, would any judge say that he could do nothing about it? Would a prosecutor to whom are attributed in the press statements condemnatory of the defendants, fail to disavow any such statements?

Certainly, an English prosecutor would never inject the question of his own integrity into a case; would never use that as a basis for convicting men; would never suggest, in effect, that if the defendants were not guilty, he and his associates should be tarred and feathered and run out of town on a rail for trying to frame innocent men. A British barrister would never suggest, untruthfully, that criminal witnesses had not received immunity, and would later receive their just desserts. Certainly such a suggestion would not be followed by the release of the criminal witnesses.

This Court must either approve this trial as having met the standards of fairness implicit in due process of law, and thus permit trials of this kind to continue, or, by stamping this as an unfair trial, set standards for future State trials which will more nearly approximate Anglo-Saxon traditions. If this Court fail to reverse this judgment, the result will be treated by over-zealous judges and by over-ambitious prosecutors all over the land as an approval of methods displayed in this record. Already, among lawyers in New York, this case is discounted as representing "Buchalter law," as opposed to the noble conception cut in stone on the facade of this building, "Equal Justice Under Law."

In a civilized country, even men reputed to have led evil lives are entitled to fair trials; and on fair trials—and scrupulously fair trials—rests the protection of the innocent. What happens to these individuals, whether they live a little longer or not, is not the important question from the point of view of public policy. After all, life at most is short. The individual is mortal. But the law is eternal, and what the Court does here will influence public policy in these United States as long as our Government endures.

Respectfully submitted,

I. Maurice Wormser,
J. Bertram Wegman,
Counsel for Petitioner Buchalter.

Arthur Garfield Hays,
John Schulman,
Gerald Weatherly,
Counsel for Petitioner Weiss.

Sydney Rosenthal,
Benj. J. Jacobson,
Counsel for Petitioner Capone.

FILE COPY

CHARLES ELMORE CROPLEY
CLERK

Supreme Court of the United States

OCTOBER TERM—1942

No. 610

EMANUEL WEISS,

Petitioner,

against

PEOPLE OF THE STATE OF NEW YORK,

Respondent.

REPLY BRIEF ON BEHALF OF PETITIONER WEISS

ARTHUR GARFIELD HAYS,
Counsel for Petitioner.

ALFRED J. TALLEY,
JOHN SCHULMAN,
M. M. KREINDLER,
HARRY G. ANDERSON,
SAMUEL BADER,
GERALD WEATHERLY,
of Counsel.

INDEX

PAGE

Caption 1

Opinions below 2-3

Authorities 4-5

Conclusion 5

Counsel's signature 5

CASES CITED.

Capital City Dairy Company v. Ohio, 183 U. S. 238 .. 5

Cissna v. Tennessee, 246 U. S. 289 5

Dewey v. Des Moines, 173 U. S. 193 5

Green Bay &c. Company v. Patten Paper Company, 172 U. S. 58 4

Honeyman v. Hanan, 300 U. S. 14 4

Mallinckrodt Works v. St. Louis, 238 U. S. 41 5

Rector v. City Deposit Bank, 200 U. S. 405 5

San Jose Land & Water Company v. San Jose Ranch Company, 189 U. S. 177 5

Whitney v. California, 274 U. S. 357 5

Supreme Court of the United States

OCTOBER TERM—1942

No. 610

EMANUEL WEISS,

Petitioner,

against

PEOPLE OF THE STATE OF NEW YORK,

Respondent.

REPLY BRIEF ON BEHALF OF PETITIONER WEISS

The weight of respondent's attack upon the petition is directed to the sufficiency of the record to support this Court's jurisdiction (see Respondent's Brief, pp. 38-39, 46-47), and this reply shall be confined to that contention.

Inherent in respondent's argument is the outmoded—indeed, never accepted—conception that constitutional privileges are preserved only by magic incantation couched in technical terms.

For that reason, the District Attorney would limit the terms of the remittitur to specific points argued in petitioner's brief presented to the New York Court of Appeals. No regard is thus given to the cumulative force of the points which were raised and which culminated in counsel's argument that > "A fair trial according to law is a substantial right. Such a trial is more than an adherence to prescribed forms. Implied in that right is that the trial tribunal > will respect the constitutional rights of the accused; that the fundamental rules of evidence shall not be departed from; that the prosecuting officer shall discharge his duties fairly and not seek a conviction by unfair means. Finally, it implies that the trial court's charge to the jury should be the safeguard of fairness and impartiality and the guarantee of judicial indifference between the contending parties. The trial here falls far short of these standards." *

On this theory, respondent also disregards the issue upon which the divergence arose in the Court of Appeals. For example, Lehman, Ch. J., said (Record 4073, 289 N. Y. 225):

> "The errors and defects in this case are, it seems clear to me, many. Judge Loughran has set forth some which in his opinion cannot be disregarded. I agree with him that these errors and defects are present and these errors and defects and others shown by the record cannot be disregarded without hesitation lest in our anxiety that the guilty should not escape punishment we affirm a judgment tainted with errors obtained through violation of fundamental rights."

The learned Chief Justice reluctantly reached the conclusion that despite the errors and defects in the trial, the total result did not violate the fundamental right of due process. The dissenting Judges, however, stressed the element that the trial as a whole was not a fair one and thus brought within the orbit of consideration the question of due process.

At page 4090 of the Record (289 N. Y. 242), there is the statement of Judges Loughran and Desmond:

> "We believe the judgments of conviction should be reversed so that the defendants may have a fair chance to defend their lives before another jury."

---

* Weiss brief in the Court of Appeals, page 77, under heading "Conclusion."

And, finally, at pages 4090-4091 of the Record (289 N. Y. 243), the language of Judge Rippey is:

> "In my opinion, the conduct of the trial throughout was so grossly unfair as to leave the defendants without even a remote outside chance of any free consideration by the jury of their defenses, so unfair in fact as to render utterly without force the presumption of innocence to which every person charged with a criminal offense is entitled until his guilt is established by legal evidence beyond a reasonable doubt. * * * In spite of the summary of the contentions of the People contained in one of the opinions for affirmance, an analysis of the whole record persuades me that the evidence was insufficient as matter of law to sustain the conviction of any of the defendants of murder in the first degree beyond a reasonable doubt."

Can it therefore be gainsaid that, even if the explicit statement in the remittitur be disregarded, the question of fundamental fairness—due process under the Fourteenth Amendment as construed by this Court—was necessarily involved, considered and decided in this case by the Court of Appeals?*

We respectfully submit that the conclusion urged in petitioner's brief in the Court of Appeals presented an issue of due process not only in its specific reference to the "constitutional rights of the accused," but also in its

---

* Moreover, in the brief presented by counsel for Buchalter, upon the motion for re-argument in the Court of Appeals, and which was adopted by counsel for Weiss (see R. 4120), the point that due process of law was denied to the defendants in contravention of the 14th Amendment of the Federal Constitution, was squarely raised. That brief is part of the record before this Court (R. 4113-4114; 4105).

The point was necessarily passed on because the Court of Appeals wrote an opinion Per Curiam on the motion for re-argument (289 N. Y. 244), which is likewise printed in the record (R. 4120-4121). Even under the authority of the cases cited in respondents' brief (page 47 bottom), it suffices if the Federal question is raised on the motion for re-argument and passed on.

description of the attributes of fair trial, and in its claim that "the trial here falls far short of these standards." This issue is not made less a part of the record, as the District Attorney seems to argue, because counsel failed to state in haec verba that the constitutional rights referred to were those under the due process clause of the Fourteenth Amendment of the Constitution of the United States.

This Court, in Green Bay &c. Company v. Patten Paper Company, 172 U. S. 58, 67-68, said:

> "But no particular form of words or phrases has ever been declared necessary in which the claim of Federal rights must be asserted. * * * 'If it appear from the record, by clear and necessary intendment, that the Federal question must have been directly involved, so that the state court could not have given judgment without deciding it, that will be sufficient.' Powell v. Brunswick County, 150 U. S. 433, 440; Saycard v. Denny, 158 U. S. 180; Chicago, Burlington &c. Railroad v. Chicago, 166 U. S. 226."

Even in Honeyman v. Hanan, 300 U. S. 14, the very case mainly relied on by respondent, this Court, in distinguishing from that case the case of Whitney v. California, 274 U. S. 357, said (300 U. S. 23):

> "* * * The Court of Appeal of the State, as an addition to the record, entered an order stating that the question whether the California Criminal Syndicalism Act and its application were repugnant to the Fourteenth Amendment to the Federal Constitution was considered and passed upon by the court. While this court said that the record did not show that the defendant had raised or the state court had decided a federal question except as it appeared from that order, the record did disclose facts indicating the presence of the federal question which the order of the state court said was actually presented and decided, and accordingly jurisdiction was entertained * * *."

See also:

Whitney v. California, 274 U. S. 357, 360-362;
Cissna v. Tennessee, 246 U. S. 289, 293-294;
Mallinckrodt Works v. St. Louis, 238 U. S. 41, 49;
San Jose Land & Water Company v. San Jose Ranch Co., 189 U. S. 177, 179-180.

And see the other cases cited by respondent (Brief, pp. 46-47), namely:

Capital City Dairy Company v. Ohio, 183 U. S. 238, 244;
Rector v. City Deposit Bank, 200 U. S. 405, 412;
Dewey v. Des Moines, 173 U. S. 193, 199.

We urge, therefore, that not only from the remittitur, but also from the brief submitted by petitioner Weiss to the Court of Appeals, and from the opinions written in that Court, it is manifest that the question of due process appears by "clear and necessary intendment" and that "the State Court could not have given judgment without deciding it."

Respectfully submitted,

ARTHUR GARFIELD HAYS,
Counsel for Petitioner.

ALFRED J. TALLEY,
JOHN SCHULMAN,
M. M. KREINDLER,
HARRY G. ANDERSON,
SAMUEL BADER,
GERALD WEATHERLY,
of Counsel.

FILED
Office - Supreme Court, U. S.
FILED
MAY 1 1943
CHARLES ELMORE CROPLEY
CLERK

No. 619

In the Supreme Court of the United States

OCTOBER TERM, 1942

LOUIS CAPONE,

Petitioner,

v.

THE PEOPLE OF THE STATE OF NEW YORK,

Respondent.

PETITIONER'S SUPPLEMENTAL BRIEF

INDEX

	Page
Opinions Below	1
Jurisdiction	1
Statement	2
People's Theory of the Alleged Motive	3
Bernstein's Implication of Petitioner	4
Magoon's Alleged Corroboration	6
Allie Tannenbaum	9
Specification of Errors to be Urged	11
Argument	12
The Prosecutor's Summation	14
The Judge's Charge	15
Specification of Error V	17
Conclusion	21
Appendix:
Statutes	23

CITATIONS

Cases:

Hill v. Texas, 316 U. S. 400, 406	22
Law v. Merrills, 6 Wend 268, 277	6
Lisenba v. California, 314 U. S. 219, 236	21
Moore v. Dempsey, 261 U. S. 86	21
Norris v. Alabama, 294 U. S. 587	21
People v. Crum, 272 N. Y. 348	6
People v. Goldstein, 285 N. Y. 376	14
People v. Barbato, 254 N. Y. 170, 178	22

Miscellaneous:

Section 344 (b) Title 28 U.S.C.	1
Fourteenth Amendment of the Constitution of the U. S.	2
7 Wigmore on Evidence Sec. 2094	6

No. 619

In the Supreme Court of the United States

OCTOBER TERM, 1942

LOUIS CAPONE,

Petitioner,

v.

THE PEOPLE OF THE STATE OF NEW YORK,

Respondent.

PETITIONER'S SUPPLEMENTAL BRIEF

OPINIONS BELOW

The trial court's charge to the jury appears at R. 3871-3931. Otherwise, the County Court of Kings County of the State of New York wrote no opinion.

The opinions of the Court of Appeals of the State of New York (the State court of last resort) appear at R. 4030-4091 and are officially reported in 289 N. Y. 181. The Per Curiam Opinion of that court denying the motion for reargument is reported officially, 289 N. Y. 244.

JURISDICTION

The jurisdiction of this court is invoked under Section 344 (b), Title 28, U.S.C. (§237 of the Judicial Code, as amended).*

The judgment of the County Court of Kings County of the State of New York, entered on December 2, 1941, as affirmed by the Court of Appeals, by order dated October 30, 1942, is a final judgment not further appealable in any court of the State of New York. The federal question herein presented and urged is based on the denial to petitioner of his rights to due process of law as guaranteed by the Fourteenth Amendment of the Constitution of the United States.* This question was raised and passed upon in the courts below (R. 36-7; 42-3; 4098).

---

*Appendix, infra, pp. 23, 24.

The petition for a writ of certiorari was filed in this court on January 4, 1943, and was denied by order filed on February 15, 1943. A petition for a rehearing was filed on March 10, 1943. On March 15, 1943, by order filed, the petition for a rehearing was granted, the order denying certiorari was vacated and the petition for a writ of certiorari to the County Court of Kings County, State of New York was granted.

STATEMENT

Petitioner was indicted in May, 1940, by the Kings County Grand Jury, New York State. Soon thereafter petitioner was in custody, as were all of the prosecution witnesses who testified to matters allegedly concerning him. There was no apparent valid reason for any delay of his trial and, at that time, the State of New York could have accorded him a fair one. Instead, petitioner was held in custody for a period of sixteen months before the case was actually moved for trial. In the interim, and immediately following the finding of the indictment, numerous newspaper articles appeared, most of them condemning petitioner's co-defendant Buchalter as a czar of crime and alleging him guilty of the murder in the instant matter as well as many others, and at the same time idolizing the District Attorney of Kings County who was being groomed as the Democratic candidate for Mayor of the City of New York.

A statement of the entire case (pp. 2-35, main brief), including the adverse newspaper propaganda; the voir dire examination of the talesmen; the physical trappings of the trial; the conduct of the trial judge; the conduct of the prosecutor, and the court's charge, is contained in the main brief of all petitioners.

*Appendix, infra, p. 23.

The record of the testimony is voluminous. Comparatively little of it sought to involve this petitioner. The mass of it so colored the trial and so constantly prejudiced the rights of this petitioner as to prevent a fair and impartial consideration by the jury of the evidence, and deny to him the due process guaranteed by the Constitution.

PEOPLE'S THEORY OF THE ALLEGED MOTIVE

The contentions of the prosecution were that through the manipulations of defendant Buchalter, Rosen had been forced out of a partnership in a clothing trucking business; Rosen bruited it about in the clothing market that Buchalter had forced him out of business; because of Rosen's complaints in the industry Buchalter obtained a job for him with a trucking concern, which lasted a short time; efforts by Rosen to obtain another position failed; Rosen then opened a candy store at 725 Sutter Avenue, but still vociferously complained about what Buchalter had allegedly done to him and threatened to go to Thomas E. Dewey, Special Prosecutor appointed by the Governor to investigate racketeering, and inform; Buchalter, through an intermediary, attempted to silence Rosen by giving him money to leave town; Rosen left town, but returned in a few days and again threatened to appear as a witness before Dewey; and that Buchalter, exasperated at Rosen's continued threats, ordered his execution to silence him forever (R. 234-9). This petitioner was not connected or involved in any of the foregoing. However, all such evidence as to alleged motive, even though concededly not applicable to petitioner, was of such prejudicial character that it indubitably affected the jury's consideration as to him.

Proof in attempted substantiation of the motive, the events leading up to the commission of the crime and its eventual execution was presented through the witnesses Max Rubin, Paul Berger and Sol Bernstein; Tannenbaum and Magoon supplied alleged corroboratory admissions. Of these five persons only Bernstein and Magoon sought to implicate this petitioner.

BERNSTEIN'S IMPLICATION OF PETITIONER

Bernstein's* direct testimony, succinctly digested, follows: Two days before the murder, in the presence of this petitioner, one Strauss instructed him to steal an automobile (R. 702-3), and to return on the following day (R. 703); he returned at the appointed time and he and petitioner then drove this automobile over a certain route pointed out by petitioner, and which he instructed Bernstein to follow to make the "get-away" after a murder had been committed in a designated candy store (R. 715-6); on the following day he met co-petitioner Weiss and others (but not petitioner) and the murder was committed; Bernstein then drove the stolen automobile over the "get-away" route, at the termination of which he abandoned the stolen automobile and was met by the petitioner and co-defendant Cohen, who were awaiting their arrival with automobiles (R. 732-751).

On cross examination, innumerable falsehoods, admitted perjuries, inconsistencies and discrepancies of vital importance were developed and coolly and unconcernedly admitted by Bernstein, to such an extent that it would be an outrageous miscarriage of justice to execute a man on such testimony, for in the final analysis petitioner's guilt or innocence depends on Bernstein's word. In fact, though Bernstein stoutly maintained that since he surrendered to District Attorney O'Dwyer in April of 1940 he had told the truth, he admitted that since that time he testified falsely in a prior first degree murder trial, knowing he "was doing wrong" (R. 797-8).*

* His vicious background is set forth in the petition for certiorari (p. 25-27).

Summarizing in the words of Judge Loughran (R. 4079):

> "The testimony of Bernstein is all-important. He was the chief of the prosecution witnesses.
>
> • • • •
>
> • • • At his own word, Bernstein is a long-time professional criminal. As we shall see in a moment, he is a former perjurer who perversely and flagrantly lied (fol. 4068) again to the jury on this present trial. By the doubtful testimony of a witness of such low moral fibre, uncertainty concerning the guilt of the defendants is produced • • •."

---

* The full extent of these perjuries were fully set forth in the petition and brief submitted on the application for a writ of certiorari (pp. 43-54).

MAGOON'S ALLEGED CORROBORATION*

His direct testimony follows: In April, 1939, (two and a half years after the murder) he spoke to petitioner with reference to a man named Friedman (R. 2466-7). Petitioner was asked by him whether he thought it advisable that he (Magoon) work on the Friedman thing, as Magoon had hung out about a block away and thought he might be recognized (R. 2460-1). At this point Magoon stated that this was all of the question he asked of petitioner (R. 2461) and was immediately excused from the court room while a lengthy discussion ensued between counsel and the court, in the absence of the jury (R. 2461-9). After an appreciable length of time, Magoon returned to the stand. He was thereupon asked the following question (R. 2469):

---

* As Judge Loughran said (R. 4082-3):

"(6) The sole support for Bernstein's accomplice-story against Capone was the People's witness Magoon. It was said by Magoon that Capone had made to him an oral utterance in these words: 'I worked on the Rosen thing and it was right on Sutter Avenue and I was not made.' In the declared opinion of the trial judge, the statement so reported by Magoon was 'too indefinite' to be used as a confession of guilt on the part of Capone. At the same time, however, the judge directed the jury that Magoon's testimony (if credited) could be taken as corroborative evidence tending to connect Capone with the murder of Rosen. This was a controlling ruling. Belief in the actuality of Capone's oral admission as reported by Magoon was an indispensable condition of the finding of Capone's guilt. Hence the affirmance of these judgments of conviction must bespeak the conclusion of the court that the testimony of Magoon is not an altogether insufficient ground for the signing of the death warrant of Capone. See PEOPLE v. CRUM, 272 N. Y. 348.) On this angle of the case we have felt—and still feel—no little concern.

A testimonial report of an oral admission of a party-litigant is generally the most dangerous evidence that can be received in a court of justice, and the most liable to abuse. LAW v. MERRILLS, 6 Wend. 268, 277.) Even when the admission is reported by a reputable witness, the testimony is often the weakest and most unsatisfactory of all the kinds of evidence. (See the authorities set forth in 7 Wigmore on Evidence, (3rd ed.) § 2094, p. 468.)"

> "After you asked him that question, did he say anything to you? Did he, Capone, say anything to you"?

Despite his complete answer given before recess, he now irresponsively interpolated as follows (R. 2469):

> "I have not finished my answer on that."

and thereupon added (R. 2469):

> "I says, 'I hung out about a block away and it is sort of off Sutter Avenue.'" (Italics ours.)

To this petitioner replied, "What are you worried about? I worked on the Rosen thing and it was right on Sutter Avenue and I was not made." Magoon then replied that he was not worried; he was just asking advice (R. 2469).

In the fall of 1938, two years after the murder, in the presence of petitioner, he had been instructed to follow Rubin, ostensibly to assassinate him (R. 2434-53). At a later date there was a conversation with reference to Rubin at which petitioner and others were present and at which petitioner merely stated "that Rubin is hurting Lep, and we got to hit him in the head and get rid of him" (R. 2453-4). Magoon subsequently reported that Rubin had a police bodyguard, and his task immediately terminated (R. 2456-8). Parenthetically, it should be noted that the motivating reason for what the trial court called "the attempted assasination of Rubin" was in no manner connected with the Rosen murder.

That, in brief, constitutes all of Magoon's testimony concerning petitioner, except the development on cross examination of the circumstances under which he allegedly disclosed the above information to the District Attorney.

In May, 1940, just as he completed a term for vagrancy, he was lodged in a hotel in the Bronx (R. 2532-4), where he spoke with District Attorney Foley of that County (R. 2536), but did not mention anything about the Rosen case (R. 2539-40), nor was he asked, nor did he volunteer anything to the Bronx officials about Rosen at any time thereafter (R. 2546).

Approximately two days after his first conversation with Mr. Foley, he spoke with Mr. O'Dwyer, but did not mention anything about the Rosen case (R. 2542-3). A couple of months later (in July) he was taken to the Brooklyn District Attorneys' office and again questioned but was not asked about the Rosen case nor did he volunteer anything about it (R. 2544, 2546-7, 2550). While being questioned somebody was writing—he does not know whether it was a stenographer (R. 2547-8). He signed many papers which contained the substance of his questioning by District Attorney O'Dwyer (R. 2550-1). The defense called upon the district attorney to produce these statements, but the prosecutor, after equivocating on two occasions, that he was "quite certain" that none existed, finally stated there was no such statement (R. 2549, 2559).*

It is significant to note that the first time he ever mentioned anything about the Rosen case (R. 2554) was some time between January and June, 1941 (about seven months to a year after being taken into custody), although previously questioned by the Brooklyn District Attorney's office more than twelve times (R. 2552-3).

Little credence, if any, can be given to this self-con-

---

* Magoon either deliberately falsified about signing statements, or the failure of the District Attorney to produce them is a strong indication that they would have been beneficial to the defense; and would constitute a suppression of evidence. For other instance of suppression see main brief (pp. 54-59).

 This testimony should be compared with that of Bernstein and Lamenbaum, both of whom testified they were questioned about the Rosen case early in 1940 (R. 1185, 2335-7).

fessed murderer who successfully evaded the law since a boy attending public school but protested that he never told anything but "little white lies." and maintained strict silence as to his alleged knowledge of Rosen's murder for more than seven months after his arrest. As Judge Loughran said (R. 4083):

> "Magoon was not a reputable witness. He is a self-confessed murderer. His appearance on the witness stand had no object but the saving of his own skin. There is thus grave question whether the above word of Magoon standing alone can in good conscience be accepted as a sufficient prop for what (as we are about to see) was a revision by Bernstein of his original evidence against Capone."

ALLIE TANNENBAUM

He was the only other witness to mention petitioner's name. According to Magoon, who knew him since 1933 or 1934, Tannenbaum was a member of the so-called "Combination," and was seen by him frequently during the years 1933, 1934 and 1935, at the "corner" of Saratoga and Livonia Avenues, Brooklyn (R. 2525-6). Tannenbaum and principal witness Bernstein, in 1937 or 1938, together, transported Yuran's dead body in a truck in the mountains (R. 1087, 2228). Tannenbaum and witness Magoon were together in the Friedman murder (R. 2229, 2414-5).

The sole reason for mentioning Tannenbaum is his admission, when questioned by the prosecutor, that although present at a number of conversations with reference to the Rosen murder, he at no time heard petitioner's name in connection therewith. In fact, he had never seen or heard of this petitioner "until the year 1938"—over two years subsequent to the Rosen murder (R. 2254).*

Despite the voluminous record—the testimony of thirty-six witnesses and the introduction of fifty-seven exhibits (none of which exhibits directly affected petitioner)—tersely summarized, the People's proof against petitioner consisted solely of the testimony of the self-confessed liar accomplice Bernstein and the criminal Magoon, who furnished the alleged corroboration consisting of a supposed conversation had more than two and a half years after the occurrence.

As to the complete proof presented against petitioner, the trial court admitted (R. 3918): "In mentioning the points of evidence applicable to this defendant, Capone, I particularly wish to impress upon the comparative paucity of the corroboration from non-accomplice witnesses." Judge Rippey of the New York Court of Appeals was of the opinion that (R. 4091): "There was insufficient legal evidence at the close of the People's case upon which to base a conviction of Capone and the indictment against him should have been dismissed." Judge Loughran, one of the dissenting judges, stated (R. 4085): "There is thus grave question whether the above word of Magoon standing alone can in good conscience be accepted as a sufficient prop for what (as we are about to see) was a revision by Bernstein of his original evidence against Capone"; and further, (referring to Bernstein) (R. 4085), "No one can be sure the verdict against Capone was not the result of an undue restriction of his essential right so to test the credibility of that testimony." His opinion was concurred in by Judge Desmond. Chief Judge Lehman, one of the affirming judges, stated (R. 4078): "Evidence coming from a polluted source has failed to remove reasonable doubt of the defendants' guilt from my mind." Even in the prevailing opinion of Judge Conway, concurred in by Judges Finch and Lewis, it was stated (R. 4069): "The guilt of the defendants Buchalter and Weiss was clearly established. The guilt of the defendant Capone depended upon whether the jurors believes the testimony of a witness who corroborated the accomplices. That witness was a criminal."

---

* Bernstein and Magoon alleged that petitioner was a leading member of the so-called "Combination." If so, Tannenbaum would certainly have known him. His testimony completely destroyed whatever doubt may be left as to the falsity of Bernstein's and Magoon's testimony regarding petitioner's alleged participation in the crime.

SPECIFICATION OF ERRORS TO BE URGED

Petitioner urges that error was committed to his manifest prejudice in the proceedings below whereby he was deprived of due process of law in that:

I. The trial was held in a poisoned atmosphere and a fair and impartial jury could not be and was not obtained, and a fair trial could not be and was not had. The jury was improperly impanelled. In a situation where the prejudice against petitioner was bound to affect the jurors, the physical trappings of the trial were such as to amplify and vitalize that prejudice.

II. The Court of Appeals should have reviewed the action of the Trial Court which prevented the impanelling of an impartial jury by its rulings upon challenges for actual bias. The right to such review was not waived by petitioner's consent to be tried before a "special jury." The rulings of the Trial Court prevented the impanelling of a fair and impartial jury; and an impartial jury is essential to due process of law. In this case the State of New York failed to supply a corrective process for this denial of due process.

III. Evidence material and relevant to the defense, in the possession of the prosecution, was suppressed by the State. Petitioner was thus deprived of a fair opportunity to present his defense. He was likewise deprived of an opportunity of adducing proof that evidence offered by the prosecution was in fact perjurious.

IV. The Trial Court's usurpation of the province of the jury by the resolution of issues of fact against petitioner in its charge to the jury as well as by comments during the course of the trial, and the summation of the prosecutor wherein, among other unprofessional things, he made improper promises to the jury concerning the future treatment of confessed criminals who had testified for the prosecution, and wherein he purported to give testimony, all combined to deprive petitioner of the right to fundamental fairness in the trial.

V. The denial of petitioner's numerous motions for a severance of his trial amounted to a forfeiture of his rights to a fair and impartial consideration of the evidence against him.

ARGUMENT

The minimal requirements of the constitutional guarantee of due process of law are fully discussed in the main brief (pp. 37-41).

The first four specifications of error, as applied to all petitioners, are likewise discussed therein (pp. 39-75). Additional factors affected this petitioner's rights, utterly depriving him of a semblance of due process, viz:

THE JURY

Two of the jurymen, Rorke and Links (See main brief, pp. 24-26), had been examined as talesmen in a prior murder trial (People v. Maione and Abbandondo) in which counsel for this petitioner had appeared as counsel for Maione and the People were there represented by the same prosecutor as herein. Both jurors had then heard petitioner's name mentioned, as well as that of many others, and had followed the verdict in the previous case. Rorke had been peremptorily challenged by the defense, and Links by the prosecutor, who had then felt that Links could not be a fair juror by reason of his connection with a radio program known as "Mr. District Attorney." All defense peremptory challenges had been exhausted at the time these two persons were permitted to remain on this jury.

Having succeeded in seating these two men on the jury, the prosecutor, with the consent of the court, was permitted to adduce testimony, wholly unconnected with the issue, to the effect that this petitioner had been associated with Maione and Abbandando and numerous other persons (R. 698-699; Magoon, R-2423-5; Tannenbaum, R. 2234-6).

Whether the court and prosecutor purposely permitted this irrelevant prejudicial testimony to be introduced, or not, is immaterial. The fact remains that Rorke and Links had prior knowledge of the persons so named, and of their execution for crime.

Coupled with the argument advanced in the main brief, there remains little question that Rorke and Links were in no position (consciously or unconsciously) to accord to petitioner the fair and impartial consideration of the evidence as guaranteed by the Constitution.

THE PROSECUTOR'S SUMMATION

Serious as were the prosecutor's derelictions against all petitioners throughout the trial,* his summation reached the zenith of impropriety against this petitioner particularly when, among other things, he unjustly characterized petitioner's counsel as "the canniest, the wiliest of lawyers" (R. 3810, 3855), "a great detective" (R. 3830) and a "mental juggler" (R. 3836), and further charged that the summation of petitioner's counsel was a "pay off" to co-petitioners (R. 3839-40):

> "Because one counsel sits at one table and the other at another table, is that a separation of these three? Let me show you how each one of the defenses were put in, and then you can consider the summation of Mr. Rosenthal and see if he did not pay back for what Lepke and Mendy did for Capone in the defense."

Condemning petitioner's counsel on the one hand, he wrongfully sought to influence the jury by self-praise (R. 3821):

---

* Discussed in main brief. A glaring example (not therein discussed) occurred during Rubin's testimony. He was asked whether he had ever seen petitioner before and replied that he had in the year 1932 or 1933. He was not introduced to him nor does he know where he saw him, but remembers he was in the company of Buchalter (R. 1461-2). [Admittedly, this occasion had no connection with this case (R. 1752).] The prosecutor was not satisfied with this reply and asked who else was present and thereupon received the reply that one "Buggsy" Goldstein was there at the time (R. 1462). He also had a fleeting glance of the petitioner in 1935 (R. 1463), but not in connection with this case (R. 1752). These were the only mentions of petitioner's name by Rubin throughout his testimony. As the incidents recited and the presence of Buggsy Goldstein had no relevancy to this case, the prosecutor could have had no reason to introduced this testimony except to prejudice the jurors' minds by recalling to them a notorious case which they must have read about resulting in the execution of said Goldstein (PEOPLE v. GOLDSTEIN, 285 N. Y. 376), thus further carrying out his persistent efforts to have the case tried on newspaper gang stories rather than the indictment.

> "I say to you with all due solemnity, that nothing I have ever learned as a public prosecutor, no talent that I now enjoy, would ever be used in any way with any of you to make you feel that I had discredited you or myself or any member of the public." (Italics supplied.)

THE JUDGE'S CHARGE

Whatever semblance of a trial remained after the prosecutor completed his inflammatory summation characterizing this petitioner and his counsel, was completely destroyed by the court's unfair charge, a substantial portion of which was devoted to neutralizing the effect upon the jury of counsel's cross examination and summation dealing with Bernstein and Magoon (on whom rested the entire case against this petitioner).

Having first charged that "direct examination goes right to the point, and cross examination * * * is largely hit or miss" (R. 3903), the Court proceeded to destroy the argument regarding the letters (offered as evidence of opportunity to concoct a story) which Bernstein was forced to admit he sent while in custody. In that respect the Court charged, in substance, that the jury must accept as a fact that police surveillance prevented concoction, for its lack, even though no proof had been offered to substantiate Bernstein, would be "sloppy police work" (R. 3956).

In the portion of the charge referring to Magoon, the court emphasized his (Magoon's) testimony because of the "great importance of this feature of the case" by reading all the direct testimony on the particular subject (R. 3921-2). The court said (R. 3926):

> "Gentlemen, I think that is the text applicable thereto, unless there was something on cross examination applying to it."

No mention was subsequently made of any part of the cross examination, except to disparage its worth and discount counsel's analysis in summation.

The court's attack on the summation of petitioner's counsel as to the legitimate inferences which could be drawn from Magoon's claim that he only told "little white lies" was to the effect that the judge did not want the jury to be misled by counsel's summation, as the reasoning was "childish," and "should not affect intelligent men whose minds are mature" (R. 3898-9).*

Throughout summation petitioner's counsel referred to and drew legitimate inferences from the stock answer of prosecution witnesses when confronted with previous contradictory testimony: "if it is in the book, it is so." The court nullified the effect of this cross examination and summation by charging that it would be an "unholy thing" to expect a witness to remember his previous testimony, and that it was a normal response for a witness to reply: "If it is in the book, it is so" (R. 3894).

Petitioner never stood one iota of a chance to have his fate properly determined despite "the paucity of the evidence" when we analyze the court's charge and note the deft manner in which the effect of cross examination and summation was destroyed. The jury was prevented from exercising its free will in judging the contradictions in the testimony of Bernstein and Magoon. Unquestionably, the court must have concluded that the cross examination of these witnesses, and the summation with respect to them, had a telling effect upon the jury, which the prosecutor's summation had failed to dispel. To rectify this omission, "the charge took on the character of a summation for the People" (R. 4087) and was tantamount to a direction of a verdict of guilty against this petitioner.

---

* See main brief for court's entire statement (p. 35)

SPECIFICATION OF ERROR V

Research fails to disclose a situation similar to the instant case. If the failure to grant the severance did not amount to a forfeiture of petitioner's rights to a fair and impartial trial, we doubt whether a deprivation of due process for that reason can arise within the annals of criminal law.

Prior to the trial (June 5, 1941), a motion for a severance was made (R. 31-54),* and denied without prejudice to renewal before the trial court (R. 29-30). This motion was orally renewed on additional papers before the trial court on August 4, 1941 (V. 21; R. 55-64) and denied (V. 29). On September 15, 1941, on the consent of the prosecutor, a severance was granted against defendant Farvel Cohen (V. 47), but denied as to petitioner (V. 47). At intervals throughout the trial similar motions were repeated.*

Prior to the commencement of the trial it became obvious that regardless of the lack of evidence against petitioner, his conviction was a foregone conclusion if he were compelled to stand trial with the co-petitioners, because of the intense prejudice which was rampant against them. The petitioners were all deprived of a fair and impartial trial by reason of the inordinate amount of lurid inflammatory newspaper publicity which preconditioned the community to think of them as guilty men. The greater

*It was urged in that motion that the failure to grant a severance would be a violation of petitioner's constitutional rights (R. 39-7); and the prosecutor admitted in his brief in opposition to the petition for a writ of certiorari that the constitutional question was thus raised (See prosecutor's brief, p. 37).

V. refers to printed record of voir dire examination.

Previously denied by trial court on August 4, 1941 (V. 29).

*S. testimony of Berger (R. 2191), Tannenbaum (R. 2240), Rubin (R. 2577), Aman (R. 2685), Pell (R. 2698), Ryan (R. 2703), Winne (R. 2706), end of people's case (R. 2715), end of entire case (R. 3541), and of sentence (R. 3896).

part of this publicity was directed against petitioner Buchalter. That it, nevertheless, prejudiced petitioner cannot be gainsaid. Thus was petitioner saddled with a burdensome handicap which prevented a fair consideration of the evidence presented, uncolored by whatever prejudice existed against co-petitioners.

A casual examination of the voir dire discloses that the thirty peremptory challenges accorded defense collectively were exhausted because a majority of the talesmen had read about one or the other of the co-petitioners.

Under §360 of the Code of Criminal Procedure of the State of New York* this petitioner was unable to exercise his free choice but was compelled to join therein. Thus were all thirty peremptory challenges exhausted. The injustice to petitioner thereupon became apparent. The jurors Rorke and Links were then seated in the box. Petitioner's hands were tied. The court refused to excuse these men. For the first time the necessity for petitioner to exercise a peremptory challenge arose, to no avail. The denial of the severance was the direct cause of this condition and unquestionably prevented a fair consideration of the evidence. Thus the trial began.

For weeks a parade of witnesses testified about prejudicial matters which must necessarily have been excluded had petitioner been granted a severance.

Rubin was permitted to trace the leadership and internal affairs of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers Union since 1923 and to name certain individuals who had either disappeared or were dead and, without official connection, were on the union's "payroll" (R. 1293-1320). These persons and events were not even remotely connected with the case, nor was it claimed that petitioner had any connection with the activities disclosed, or had any knowledge of or connection with the persons named.* He further recounted his peregrinations in order to avoid the investigation of Special District Attorney Thomas E. Dewey, but in nowise implicated this petitioner.

* See appendix, p. 24

 For discussion see p. 13 supra

 See discussion p. 17 supra

Rubin testified he had been shot in the head by an unknown person (R. 2373). This inflammatory testimony, although admittedly inapplicable to petitioner (R. 3917), and inadmissible in a separate trial, nevertheless, must have prejudiced his rights. Summarizing, Rubin could not have properly testified as a witness had a severance been granted.

Berger similarly traced the affairs of the Clothing Union since 1929 and named men unconnected with this case who were obviously gangsters. He, likewise, would not have been a competent witness against petitioner.

A portion of the testimony of Magoon regarding his "tailing" of Rubin could not have been properly elicited had petitioner been granted a severance.

Mrs. Rosen (R. 246-256), Harold Rosen (R. 466-483), and Sylvia Greenspan (R. 567-584), were in nowise connected with the petitioner. The flight of Rubin and the alleged flights of Buchalter (charged as not connected with this case) and Weiss were extremely prejudicial to petitioner, although not admissible if he were on trial alone.*

* It is obvious that it was the prosecutor's purpose to cover the entire trial with an aura of union gangsterism and thereby subtly affect the jurors' deliberations by recalling to their minds all the lurid newspaper accounts of past years relative to gang killings and depredations.

* See testimony of Rubin (R. 1381-1420, 1685-1700 et seq.), Maguire (R. 1761), Berger (R. 1814-25 et seq.) Aman (R. 2607-86), Pell (R. 2687-), Ryan (R. 2699-2703), Winne (R. 2704-06), Malone (R. 3493-3508), Whelan (R. 3509-17), and Newman (R. 3518-25), also People's exhibits [illegible] 33 to 37 inclusive.

Thus as the evidence unfolded, the People's proof, if believed, tended to show that the persons allegedly involved in this crime had some connection with union activities, but not petitioner; that Rubin, Bernstein, Strauss, Reles, Goldstein, Magoon, Tannenbaum, Cohen and others had left town, but not petitioner; nor was there any proof that petitioner's name had been mentioned by anyone to either Rubin, Berger or Tannenbaum. Moreover, although the prosecutor cross-examined practically all of co-petitioner's witnesses as to whether they were acquainted with various named persons, including the other petitioner, no inquiry was made as to this petitioner.

Further serious prejudice resulted during the summation. Counsel for co-petitioner Buchalter admitted he was serving a long prison sentence* and condemned Buchalter's past activities and the vicious circle domineering the unions (R. 3546-7). These facts could not have been disclosed in a separate trial, but after the conclusion of petitioner's counsel's summation, the prosecutor dwelt upon the statement of Buchalter's counsel and designated Buchalter as "the czar of the industrial rackets with a half a million dollar take" (R. 3783, 3801).

The recitation above constitutes some of the major happenings which could not have permeated the atmosphere were petitioner on trial alone. The legal evidence against petitioner was insufficient (R. 4090-1). Thus, the numerous errors committed, plus the inapplicable prejudicial evidence admitted because of a joint trial were of such a nature that the jury must have been unduly influenced to such a degree that it could not enter upon a free and open deliberation of the evidence presented against this petitioner.

---

* The jury's attention was also called to this fact at the commencement of the trial (V 282).

CONCLUSION

The jurisdiction of this court is invoked by reason of the denial to petitioner of his constitutional rights to a fair trial as guaranteed to him by the Fourteenth Amendment of the Constitution of the United States.

> "As applied to a criminal trial, denial of due process is the failure to observe that fundamental fairness essential to the very concept of justice. In order to declare a denial of it we must find that the absence of that fairness fatally infected the trial; the acts complained of must be of such quality as necessarily prevent a fair trial." Lisenba v. California, 314 U. S. 219, 236.

It is respectfully submitted that the judgment of conviction herein was not obtained by due process of law, that it resulted from the mere pretense or semblance of a trial by reason of the prejudicial and inflammatory newspaper publicity directed against the petitioners prior to the trial; the failure to grant this petitioner a separate trial; the atmosphere in the courtroom and the conduct of the trial; the seating of a prejudiced and biased jury; the conduct of the trial judge; and the misconduct of the prosecutor, condoned and permitted by the trial court. This was as much a denial of due process of law as the domination of a court by mob violence, since in such case, while there is the form of a hearing, a hearing in substance, is denied.

> Moore v. Dempsey, 261 U. S. 86;
> Norris v. Alabama, 294 U. S. 587.

Four of the seven judges in the Court of Appeals remained unconvinced of petitioners' guilt. Three expressed firm belief that the judgment of death should be reversed because these petitioners did not have a fair chance to defend their lives.

> "Whether a guilty man goes free or not is a small matter compared with the maintenance of principles which still safeguard a person accused of crime" (People v. Barbato, 254 N. Y. 170, 178). (italics supplied.)
>
> "Not the least merit of our constitutional system is that its safeguards extend to all—the least deserving as well as the most virtuous." Hill v. Texas, 316 U. S. 400, 406.

Here fundamental fairness was sacrificed; form alone was preserved. This judgment cannot stand unless the concept of due process be aborted.

Respectfully submitted,

SYDNEY ROSENTHAL,
Counsel for Petitioner Capone

BENJ. J. JACOBSON,
Of Counsel.

APPENDIX

The relevant portions of constitutional and statutory provisions to which reference is made in the foregoing brief:

Constitution of the United States

AMENDMENT XIV.

SECTION 1. All persons born or naturalized in the United States, and subject to the jurisdiction thereof, are citizens of the United States and of the State wherein they reside. No State shall make or enforce any law which shall abridge the privileges or immunities of citizens of the United States; nor shall any State deprive any person of life, liberty, or property, without due process of law; nor deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws.

Judicial Code of the United States

TITLE 28, U. S. C., SECTION 344 (SECTION 237 OF THE JUDICIAL CODE, AS AMENDED).

(b) It shall be competent for the Supreme Court, by certiorari, to require that there be certified to it for review and determination, with the same power and authority and with like effect as if brought up by writ of error, any cause wherein a final judgment or decree has been rendered or passed by the highest court of a State in which a decision could be had where is drawn in question the validity of a treaty or statute of the United States; or where is drawn in question the validity of a statute of any State on the ground of its being repugnant to the Constitution, treaties, or laws of the United States; or where any title, right, privilege, or immunity is specially set up or claimed by either party under the Constitution, or any treaty or statute of, or commission held or authority exercised under, the United States; and the power to review under this paragraph may be exercised as well where the Federal claim is sustained as where it is denied. Nothing in this paragraph shall be construed to limit or detract from the right to a review on a writ of error in a case where such a right is conferred by the preceding paragraph; nor shall the fact that a review on a writ of error might be obtained under the preceding paragraph be an obstacle to granting a review on certiorari under this paragraph.

New York State Code of Criminal Procedure, § 360

When several defendants are tried together they cannot sever their challenges, but must join therein.

INDEX

PAGE

STATEMENT 1
QUESTIONS PRESENTED 2
RECORD FACTS MATERIAL TO QUESTIONS PRESENTED. . . . 4

General Outline of the Case 4
The Time of Trial 8
The Place of Trial 14
The Trial Jury 23
Conduct of the Trial 28

1. As to Alleged Supression of Evidence. . . . 28
2. As to Alleged Deprivation of an Opportunity to Offer Evidence in Defense. 30
3. As to Alleged Restriction of Cross-Examination 33
4. As to "Armed Guards", Manacles, and "Cordons of Police" 34
5. As to the Charge to the Jury. 35

Jurisdiction To Review 36

SUMMARY OF ARGUMENT 40
ARGUMENT 40
THE PETITIONS FOR WRITS OF CERTIORARI SHOULD BE DENIED 48
APPENDIX 49

Affidavit for Special Jury and Trial Date. 49
Buchalter's Answering Affidavit 52
Weiss' Answering Affidavit 57
Order Granting Motion for Special Jury 60
N. Y. Code of Crim. Procedure, sec. 377. 63

CASES CITED

Avery v. Alabama, 308 U. S. 444. . . . . 40, 45
Barrington v. Missouri, 205 U. S. 483. 44
Brown v. Mississippi, 297 U. S. 278. 41

PAGE

Brown v. New Jersey, 175 U. S. 172 45
Capital City Dairy Co. v. Ohio, 183 U. S. 238 46
Chambers v. Florida, 309 U. S. 227 41
Davis v. Texas, 139 U. S. 651 45
Dewey v. Des Moines, 173 U. S. 193 46
Forbes v. State Council of Virginia, 216 U. S. 396 47
Franklin v. South Carolina, 218 U. S. 161 45
Gorman v. Washington Univ., 316 U. S. 98 37
Herron v. Southern Pacific R. Co., 283 U. S. 91 42
Honeyman v. Hanan, 300 U. S. 14 ..... 46, 47
Kelly v. Oregon, 273 U. S. 589 ..... 34, 42, 43
Lisenba v. California, 314 U. S. 219 40
McCorquodale v. Texas, 211 U. S. 432 47
Mooney v. Holohan, 294 U. S. 103 41
Moore v. Dempsey, 261 U. S. 86 41
People v. Kimball, 5 Cal. Rep. [2d] 608 ..... 34, 42
People v. Murray, 52 Mich. 291 43
People v. Ohanian, 245 N. Y. 227 41
Ponzi v. Fessenden, 258 U. S. 254 9
Powell v. Alabama, 287 U. S. 45 41
Rector v. City Deposit Bank Co., 200 U. S. 105 47
Sauer v. New York, 206 U. S. 536 40
Spies v. Illinois, 123 U. S. 131 45
Stroud v. United States, 215 U. S. 15 44
State v. Temple, 194 Mo. 237 ..... 34, 42
Thomas v. Texas, 212 U. S. 278 44

STATUTES CITED

N. Y. Code of Crim. Procedure, sec. 373 13
N. Y. Code of Crim. Procedure, sec. 377 24
N. Y. Judiciary Law, sec 749-aa 11

TEXT

American Bar Association Reports of the Section of Judicial Administration, at Annual Meeting for July 25-27, 1938 44
Wigmore on Evidence [3d ed.] sec. 2551-a, p. 510 42

IN THE

Supreme Court of the United States

OCTOBER TERM, 1942

Nos. 606, 610, 619

LOUIS BUCHALTER, EMANUEL WEISS, and LOUIS CAPONE,

Petitioners,

—against—

THE PEOPLE OF THE STATE OF NEW YORK,

Respondents.

BRIEF IN OPPOSITION TO PETITION FOR WRIT OF CERTIORARI.

Statement.

The petitioners seek a review of the judgments of the County Court of Kings County, State of New York, dated December 2, 1941, convicting them of the crime of Murder in the First Degree. Upon appeal to the Court of Appeals, the highest court of the state, the cause was heard and, after due deliberation, the judgments of conviction were affirmed, the remittitur being filed on October 30, 1942 (R.

4091-4099). Thereafter, petitioners made a motion for reargument of the appeal (R. 4099-4100) and for a stay of execution of the sentence (R. 4120). The motion was denied on November 25, 1942 (R. 4120-4121).

On December 3, 1942, a hearing was had before the Honorable Charles Poletti, then Governor of the State of New York, to determine whether there was any reason for extending clemency. Before decision thereon could be made, petitioners applied to Mr. Justice Roberts of this Court for a stay of execution pending their applications for writs of certiorari. The stay was granted on December 5, 1942. No decision has therefore been made on the application for clemency.

Questions Presented.

Buchalter contends that he was denied due process of law guaranteed by the Fourteenth Amendment of the Federal Constitution, because of (Buchalter's Pet., pp. 39-40, 47, 56):

1. the denial of his motions for a change of venue to a place "outside the City of New York" (R. 76-77, 155, 165, 175) where, as he alleges, "public opinion had been irrevocably prejudiced against him by a lengthy series of newspaper articles and interviews, and where local passions were inflamed and prospective jurors had been conditioned to assume his guilt";

2. the denial by the trial court "to postpone the time of trial";

3. "the refusal of the Court of Appeals of New York to review the rulings of the trial judge upon the challenges to prospective jurors and to jurors impaneled;"

4. "the refusal to make available to him certain official records of the Police Department of the City of New York so as to permit him to call as witnesses police officers of the City of New York, to the end that such officers might be examined concerning their observations at a time and place vitally material to the charges against petitioner;"

5. "the repeated unfair rulings and comments of the trial court during the cross-examination of witnesses for the prosecution, and by the rulings, comments, charge and conduct of the trial court, belittling the defense and improperly construing for the jury the probative force of evidence adduced, so that the jury was misled;"

6. "the refusal of the trial court to rebuke and repress improper, prejudicial and untrue statements by the prosecuting attorney in his summation to the jury;" and

7. "the decision of the New York State Court of Appeals" in which "requirements of due process of law were ignored".

Weiss (Petition, pp. 5-6) and Capone (Petition, pp. 36-38) urge substantially the same contentions, except that Capone also adds that he was deprived of his constitutional rights by:

8. the denial of his motion for a trial separate from Buchalter, who, as Capone's counsel alleged in the application for a severance, "is a person of national prominence * * *, whose career has been painted from coast to coast as the ruler of a criminal empire" (R. 36, 42); and

9. the affirmance by the Court of Appeals of "a judgment based upon evidence admittedly 'not strong', without proper corroboration of the discredited and unreliable co-conspirator".

Record Facts Material to the Questions Presented.

General Outline of the Case.

Petitioners "were represented by able counsel during a trial which lasted about eleven weeks. The record of the trial consists of more than four thousand pages in addition to the twenty-seven hundred pages containing the examination of talesmen" (R. 4030; 289 N. Y. 181, 182). In these lengthy proceedings petitioners were "zealously—even hotly—defended by experienced counsel" (R. 4072; 289 N. Y. at p. 224, per Lehman, Ch. J.).

Buchalter tells us that the trial was "a mere sham" (Petition, p. 27). The record, however, shows that at every stage of the proceedings the requirement of due process of law was fully observed. Indeed, with the single exception of Capone's obviously flimsy assertion that under "the Constitution of the United States" he was entitled to a separate trial (R. 36-37), the able counsel for petitioners never complained, either prior to or during the trial, of any deprivation of a right, title, privilege, or immunity under the Federal Constitution. The record facts in this respect will be treated more fully hereafter in support of our contention that there is no jurisdiction to review the questions presented. For present purposes, we confine ourselves to a general outline of the case, which we believe will help to reveal the lack of merit to the claims now made.

The facts—not newspaper gossip or distorted paraphrasing of the record—are set forth with reasonable fullness in the majority opinion of Judge Conway (R. 4030-4069; 289 N. Y. 181-221) and need not here be repeated in detail.

Briefly stated, the evidence established that in July, 1935 the Governor of the State of New York appointed an Extraordinary Special and Trial Term of the Supreme Court for the purpose of inquiring into "all acts of racketeering" and "all organized crime". Mr. Thomas E. Dewey was designated to conduct the investigation as special prosecutor (R. 1370-1375, Peo's. Exh's. 33 and 34).

At that time Buchalter, referred to by the witnesses throughout the trial as Lepke, was a leader of organized crime, who for years had thwarted apprehension and punishment. It is unnecessary to discuss the evidence showing his defiant criminality. It will suffice to quote the admissions of his own counsel in summation to the jury. "Lepke", he said, "was not just an ordinary racketeer" (R. 3589). At the time of the Dewey investigation he was being looked for "as king of the flour racket and king of the crime racket" against whom there were "thousands of complaints in extortion totaling a half a million dollars" (R. 4032; 289 N. Y. at pp. 184-185).[1]

Far more significant than counsel's admissions, however, was Buchalter's technique of circumventing the law as revealed by him to the people's witness Edward C. Maguire, a member of the Bar. It was:

> "If witnesses are not available, investigations collapse" (R. 4037, 4038; 289 N. Y. at pp. 189, 191).

In line with this method of preserving his criminal organization Buchalter ordered his henchmen to kill Rosen, because Rosen refused to stay away from the State of New York while the Dewey investigation was on and threatened to disclose how Buchalter with the aid of corrupt labor union officials had deprived him of his clothing-trucking business (See facts discussed in Judge Conway's opinion, R. 4033-4045; 289 N. Y. at pp. 185-198). Buchalter's order was carried out by Weiss, Capone and others; Weiss fired the shots, Capone planned the escape (Id.).

---

1. The jury was apprised of these facts by Buchalter's counsel, not the district attorney, in an attempt to induce the jury to believe that Buchalter, having committed only "a possible misdemeanor" against Joseph Rosen and having many more serious charges to worry about, would have no motive to order Rosen's death (R. 4031-4032). The fact, however, remains that any impression a juror might have received about Buchalter from casual reading of newspaper stories faded into insignificance when faced with such disclosures by one who represented Buchalter's interests.

Nor was this all. After successfully thwarting the investigation for about one year, Buchalter was faced with the refusal of Max Rubin, "a key witness in the trial of the instant case" (R. 4064), to continue to remain in hiding outside of the City of New York. As a warning, Buchalter asked Rubin how old he was, and, on being told, said, "It was a ripe age" (R. 4037-4038). Thereafter Weiss was informed that Rubin was "squealing" (R. 4039). In the words of the majority opinion of Judge Conway,

> "Lepke (Buchalter) as well as Weiss and Capone realized the key position and importance of Rubin in case of the trial of any charge growing out of the Rosen murder, * * *. From their standpoint it was necessary to remove Rubin and so prevent him from testifying against them. This was in line with Lepke's statement to Mr. Maguire that, 'If witnesses are not available, investigations collapse'" (R. 4064; 289 N. Y. at pp. 216-217).

Accordingly, a few days after Rubin testified before the grand jury he was shot through the head as he was walking to his home (R. 4049, 4050). The shooting was planned and directed by Weiss (R. 4039-4040).

Fortunately, however, Rubin survived. Thereupon, Weiss enlisted the aid of Capone and a new plan was evolved "to get rid of him". But Rubin was then under police protection, and so their plan was abandoned (R. 4040, 4041-4042).

In so far as the defense is concerned, none of the petitioners took the witness stand. Capone offered no defense whatever. As to Buchalter, Judge Conway said (R. 4058; 289 N. Y. at pp. 210-211):

> "* * * so weak was his defense that great harm might have been occasioned to Lepke if the court had attempted to analyze the testimony of the witnesses called by him."

And Chief Judge Lehman in his concurring opinion added (R. 4075; 289 N. Y. at p. 227):

> "Argument not without weight might, indeed, be made that any attempt to present in the charge a statement or summary of the testimony of the witnesses produced by the defendants would inevitably disclose the lack of substance of such testimony."

Finally, before the judgments of conviction were affirmed the Court of Appeals permitted six hours of oral argument, accepted voluminous briefs filed by petitioners (R. 4115), deliberated on the case from June to the end of October (R. 4091-4092) and wrote exhaustive majority and dissenting opinions which show a most careful and conscientious consideration of the points then raised.[2]

Judge Conway held that reversible error was not committed, that the guilt of Buchalter and Weiss "was clearly established", and that Capone's guilt "was peculiarly a jury question" which was "properly left to the jury" (R. 4069; 289 N. Y. at p. 221). The ultimate findings of Chief Judge Lehman should also be noted. He said:

> "Joseph Rosen was killed on September 13, 1936, in circumstances which leave little room for doubt that he was shot by a gang of criminals to promote the nefarious purposes of the gang. * * * The accusing witnesses and the defendants were, as I have said, members of a gang or, at least, had close relations with leaders of a gang engaged in criminal practices nefarious even beyond the imagination of any fiction writer unless he had the genius of a Balzac.[3] * * * The verdict of the jury rests, it is plain, on the conclusion that the story of the People's witnesses is credible and furnishes proof of the defendants' guilt beyond a reasonable doubt, in spite of the pollution of the source of the proof. * * * The jury has appraised the evidence and in my opinion it cannot reasonably be said that any ruling of the trial judge which is challenged on this appeal may have affected that appraisal. * * * I recognize that no intrusion by the trial judge upon the field reserved for the jury may be lightly disregarded. Even so, I conclude that in this case the errors viewed as a part of a long trial could not have affected the verdict. It is difficult, perhaps impossible to avoid all error upon such a trial, but the vital question involved was so plain and the meaning of the challenged parts of the charge so obscure that I cannot believe that the jury was misled. * * * Because I have no doubt that the errors did not affect the verdict I am constrained to vote to affirm" (R. 4069, 4076, 4077, 4078; 289 N. Y. at pp. 222, 228, 229, 230).

2. We are told by Buchalter that, "although petitioner's appeal resulted in the publication of extensive opinions by the court and he was accorded all the outward indicia of a review, he was in fact given only a semblance of it" (Petition, p. 34).

3. For example: one of Buchalter's regular employees admitted participation in six murders and crimes such as slugging, strikebreaking, throwing "stink bombs" and robbery (R. 4040, 4041); one of Capone's employees participated in two murders, shot several persons, committed several assaults, and stole fifty or more automobiles (R. 4041).

The Time of Trial.

Buchalter asserts that "Time and place were manipulated by the prosecution to prevent a fair trial" and that he was tried "at a carefully selected time when the trial itself could be exploited in the interests of a local political campaign" (Petition, pp. 24, 41).

Let us see.

The indictment was filed on May 28, 1940 (R. 25). At that time Weiss was a fugitive from justice (R. 4040; 289 N. Y. at p. 192). Buchalter was serving a term of imprisonment in the Federal Penitentiary at Leavenworth, Kansas, under a sentence of the United States District Court for the Southern District of New York (R. 126). It was not until April 6, 1941, that Weiss was apprehended by agents of the United States Bureau of Narcotics in Kansas City, Missouri, where he was hiding out under an assumed name (R. 4040; 289 N. Y. at pp. 192-193).

Immediately upon Weiss' apprehension the district attorney requested the Attorney General of the United States for his consent to the production of Buchalter for trial in Kings County. The Attorney General gave his consent on April 25, 1941. Thereupon, habeas corpus proceedings were promptly instituted, and Buchalter was transferred to New York City (R. 127).[4]

On May 9, 1941, he was brought to the County Court of Kings County to be arraigned on the indictment. He requested that he first be permitted to confer with members of his family, who were in the courtroom, "about getting counsel" (S.M., May 9, 1941, pp. 1-2).[5] The prosecuting attorney said, "I take the position that he is entitled to have counsel at all stages of the proceedings" (S.M., id. p. 1). The request was granted, and then the court was informed that Buchalter desired an adjournment so that he could "get counsel to appear for him on the arraignment". This was consented to, and the matter was adjourned (S.M., id. pp. 5-6).

Twenty days later he appeared by counsel of his choice, who refused to submit to the jurisdiction of the court, stating, "defendant stands mute" (S.M., May 29, 1941, p. 2). The prosecuting attorney objected to any further delay. He said:

> "The arraignment has been adjourned now three weeks. It is about time that issue was joined to the end that a trial date may be fixed" (S.M., id. p. 7).

Thereupon, a plea of not guilty was entered by the court and, over the objection of Buchalter's counsel, the trial of

---

4. This was in accord with the decision of Ponzi v. Fessenden, 258 U. S. 254.

5. The transcript of the proceedings of May 9, 1941, and of other proceedings hereafter referred to, particularly the examination of talesmen, are not in the printed record, but are in typewritten form on file with this Court. The letters "S.M." refer to those transcripts.

the case was set down for July 14th (S.M., id. pp. 10-12). In noting his objection counsel urged that,

> "the case ought to go over until September" (S.M., id. p. 11).[6]

Buchalter's next move was to sue out a writ of habeas corpus in the United States District Court for the Southern District of New York, seeking to be transferred back to Leavenworth. He contended, among other things, that the Attorney General had no right to order his removal to New York City for the purpose of standing trial in Kings County. The writ was dismissed on June 19th, an opinion being written by District Judge Conger (R. 127). Thereupon, counsel applied to the Circuit Court for leave to appeal from the dismissal of the writ and for a stay of the trial pending the determination of the appeal. The application was heard by Judge Learned Hand, who denied the request, stating that the arguments made in support thereof were "absurd" (S.M., August 4, 1941, pp. 20-21).

Soon thereafter (June 23, 1941) the district attorney made a motion for an order directing the drawing of a panel of special jurors to attend at the trial on July 14th, the date originally fixed by the court (R. 127). The affidavit in support of this motion stated that the district attorney intended to proceed with the trial "not later than July 14, 1941" (See certified copy printed in Appendix hereto).[7] Counsel for petitioners consented to be tried by a special jury (R. 4068; 289 N. Y. at pp. 220-221), but objected to the date of trial upon the ground that it would

---

6. Ultimately, the trial did not commence until September 15th (R. 177).

7. The affidavit submitted in support of the motion for a special jury, the answering affidavits and the order of the court were not printed in the record. Because of their importance we obtained permission from the Clerk of this Court by letter dated Dec. 24, 1942, to file certified copies and to print them in the Appendix to our brief.

not afford them sufficient time to prepare their defense (R. 128). On behalf of Buchalter and Weiss affidavits were filed requesting, for the second time, that the trial be set for September. We quote from the affidavit of Buchalter's counsel, sworn to June 25th (see Appendix):

> "13. I respectfully request that the trial of this case be set for a day not earlier than the first week of September. All of the intervening interval between that date and today is needed for the preparation of the defense."

Similarly, counsel for Weiss in the last paragraph of his affidavit said (see Appendix):

> "and deponent respectfully asks that the case be set down for trial for some time in the month of September, at which time deponent will be properly prepared for trial."

As a result of these requests the court, in granting the motion for a special jury—to which counsel had consented—directed that a panel of two hundred and fifty talesmen be drawn, and adjourned the trial date to August 4th (R. 128, certified copy of order printed in Appendix). The provisions of said order were, after timely notice to petitioners, complied with on July 8th, a Justice of the Supreme Court presiding at the selection of the panel (R. 128).

Eight days later, however, the people were faced with a new dilatory move, which was designed to delay the trial for several months. For despite their previous consent to proceed to trial before a special jury drawn from the citizens of Kings County, pursuant to which two hundred and fifty talesmen were already drawn and notified to appear in court (R. 128, 165), petitioners decided to apply for a change of venue to a place "outside the City of New York" (R. 76-77). The controlling facts concerning their application will be discussed hereafter. At this point, it suffices to note that after a full hearing in the Supreme Court their motions were denied (R. 167-168), the opinion of the court holding that there was "no merit" to their contentions (R. 165-166).

This brings us to a series of obstructionist tactics the likes of which are rarely encountered. We shall try to state the facts as briefly as possible.

When the case was called for trial on August 4th, the district attorney stated he was "ready" (S.M., p. 2). Counsel for Weiss said, "defendant Weiss is ready" (Id.). Counsel for Buchalter, however, said,

> "This defendant refuses to answer ready, because he has not been afforded a reasonable opportunity to properly prepare his defense. He, by virtue of that, maintains that he cannot receive a fair trial" (S.M., p. 3).

In support of this position counsel asserted that they "deemed it necessary" to interview Buchalter's former associate, Jacob Shapiro, who was then a Federal prisoner and who "could and would give information vital and essential to the defendant's defense"; that to enable them to use Shapiro as a witness they sued out a writ of habeas corpus in Atlanta, Georgia, but that the Federal Director of Prisons caused Shapiro's transfer to Springfield, Missouri, "as a device to avoid an order on the writ" (S.M., pp. 3-6). It was further contended that an application was made to the Federal Director of Prisons for permission to interview Shapiro but that such permission was "bluntly" refused (S.M., pp. 6-7); and that although the Attorney General of the United States turned Buchalter over to the state authorities for trial, "he has deprived him of the opportunity to prepare and present his defense" (S.M., p. 17).[8]

8. The trial court and the district attorney agreed to arrange with the Attorney General of the United States to have Shapiro transferred to a Federal prison in New York City where he could be interviewed (S.M., pp. 36-38). The record does not disclose the result of whatever steps were taken. But it is significant that Shapiro was not called as a witness and that no claim has ever been made, not even in the present petitions, that the defense was deprived by either the Federal or State authorities of an opportunity to interview or call Shapiro as a witness.

In the course of this argument counsel for Weiss changed his mind and said, "I answered ready on Weiss, but I join in the application that has just been made" upon the ground that "Buchalter has not been permitted to confer with Weiss and vice versa, in the detention pen in which they have been confined since their arrest" (S.M., p. 11).

The court denied the motions and marked the case ready for trial (S.M., p. 28).

Thereafter an unprecedented situation developed. Out of a jury panel of 250, all but 95 either failed to appear or presented excuses to be relieved from service (S.M., p. 31). In evaluating this condition the trial court said:

> "This jury situation is unprecedented. It is practically a run-out. The reason for it may be reluctance to give protracted service during the hottest month of the year. There is merit to that position. To arbitrarily combat it would smack of coercion and would tend to undermine that quality of jury service which is essential for a fair trial of this case" (S.M., pp. 53-54).

Moreover, it was apparent that with thirty peremptory challenges and an unlimited number of challenges for cause available to each side (N. Y. Code Crim. Proc. § 373), a jury could not be obtained out of the limited number of talesmen willing to serve. That this was so is evident from the fact that when the trial did begin a panel of 250 was exhausted and a new panel of 100 was required before the selection of a jury was finally completed (S.M., pp. 2019-2024). Under these circumstances the prosecuting attorney suggested that the case be adjourned until September (S.M., p. 35).

When the court indicated that it would grant the request, counsel for Buchalter, who, as we have noted, had previously urged that the case be set down for September and who, only a few hours before, had refused to answer ready upon the ground that the defendant had "not been afforded a reasonable opportunity to properly prepare his defense" (S.M., p. 3), suddenly announced that he was fully prepared and opposed the adjournment in these words:

> "We are as ready as we will ever be and if we can get permission to interview Jacob Shapiro, we will not delay the trial one minute" (S.M., p. 39).[9]

Thereafter, counsel for Weiss thought of the idea of using the fact that the trial judge was a candidate for re-election and the district attorney a candidate for mayor as a reason for requesting that the trial either proceed immediately or else be adjourned for three months until after election (S.M., pp. 39-43). This appealed to Buchalter's counsel who joined in the request, stating, "The counsel for defendant Buchalter join in the comments of Judge Talley and adopt his reason for requesting an adjournment as our own" (S.M., p. 43).

The trial court in adjourning the case until September 15th said:

> "Any delay of trial in any case involves hazards in relation to witnesses, in relation to evidence. Therefore any delay of any trial must be weighed against those hazards. No prejudice can come from trying the case before election because, sensibly, no juror will be influenced by his political views in deciding the question of guilt or innocence in a capital case" (S.M., p. 54).

The Place of Trial.

We have seen that on June 23, 1941, the district attorney made a motion for an order directing that the case be tried by a special jury in the County Court of Kings County. This motion was made pursuant to the provisions of Section 749-aa of the New York Judiciary Law (R. 127), which permits the defendant or the district attorney to apply for such a jury where the subject matter of the indictment "has been widely commented upon" (Id. subd. 4; R. 173). To qualify as a special juror the statute (subd. 2) provides (R. 4068; 289 N. Y. 181, 221),

9. In view of the foregoing facts, Buchalter's statement at page 17 of his petition that, "The sincerity of counsel was matched by the dissimulation of the presiding Judge", is indeed ironical.

> "No person shall be selected as such special juror * * * who doubts his ability to lay aside an opinion or impression formed from newspaper reading or otherwise, or to render an impartial verdict upon the evidence, uninfluenced by any such opinion or impression * * * or who avows that he cannot in all cases give to a defendant who fails to testify as a witness in his own behalf the full benefit of the statutory provision that such defendant's neglect or refusal to testify as a witness in his behalf shall not create any presumption against him."

We have said that petitioners consented to be tried by such a jury drawn from the citizens of Kings County, but objected only to the date of trial. The order granting the motion recites (certified copy printed in Appendix):

> "* * * and Hyman Barshay, Esq., attorney for the defendant, Louis Buchalter, alias 'Lepke'; James I. Cuff, Esq., attorney for the defendant Emanuel Weiss, alias 'Mendy Weiss'; Saul Price, Esq., attorney for the defendant, Philip Cohen, alias 'Little Farvel'; and Leon Fischbein, Esq., attorney for the defendant, Louis Capone, appearing and consenting to the granting of the motion for a special jury * * *."

The opinion of the court denying petitioners' subsequent motions for a change of venue stated, among other things, the following (R. 165):

> "Upon a motion by the District Attorney for an order directing the trial before a special jury on July 14th, 1941, the moving defendant, as well as the defendants, Weiss and Capone (who seek similar relief in separate motions), consented to a special jury and objected solely to the trial date inasmuch as it would not permit sufficient time to prepare."

And the Court of Appeals, in reviewing the decision of the Supreme Court, found that,

> "Each of the defendants consented to be tried before such special jury" (R. 4068; 289 N. Y. at pp. 220-221).

Now comes Buchalter's petition wherein, at page 50, he tells us that,

> "Petitioner's counsel had not consented. The papers on that motion are a part of the record; from them it clearly appears that the court at nisi prius in granting the motion for a special jury misstated the fact in recording that there was consent."

The final answer to this reckless assertion is to quote from the affidavit filed with the court below by Buchalter's counsel (certified copy printed in Appendix). He there said:

> "6. No objection is made on behalf of my client to that aspect of the motion which seeks an order for the trial of this case before a special jury."

Counsel for Weiss likewise consented. In his affidavit he said (printed in Appendix):

> "That deponent does not oppose the application for the trial of the indictment before a special jury, but deponent does oppose that part of the application which seeks to have the trial set for July 14, 1941. * * *."

Pursuant to these consents, the order directing the impanelling of a special jury of 250 talesmen was, after due notice to petitioners, duly complied with (R. 128, 165).

Eight days later Buchalter made a motion in the Supreme Court to transfer the trial to a county "outside the City of New York" (R. 76-77, 165). He urged that he could not receive a fair trial in the City of New York because of the fact that for "the past two years" he received widespread notoriety by newspaper, radio and magazine" (R. 77, 121) "as societies most dangerous enemy", as the "master mind" of all criminals, and as "a vicious racketeer" who not only directed the murder of Rosen but of many others (R. 76-109).

Weiss and Capone joined in the motion, their argument being that because of the unfavorable newspaper and radio notoriety received by Buchalter, they, as co-defendants, would be indirectly affected by the alleged prejudice against Buchalter if they were to be tried together in any county of the City of New York (R. 129, 4123-4126).

Significantly, not a single affidavit of a resident of the community was submitted to show that there existed any prejudice which would prevent a fair and impartial trial. The record shows that the applications were based solely upon the speculation and surmise of counsel and the report of a hired investigator whose affidavit was patently worthless (see Justice Daly's opinion, R. 166). The affidavit of Buchalter's brother, discussed at page 27 of Buchalter's petition, was even worse than the one submitted by the hired investigator. In that affidavit the brother asserted that an assistant district attorney who was assigned to try the case, but whose name he did not disclose, told him that "current prejudice existing in this locality against the defendant, Louis Buchalter, is so strong that the mere making of any charge against him would result in his conviction" (R. 111). It was evident from the very wording of the alleged statement that it was concocted to meet the occasion. The two assistant district attorneys who were assigned to try this case denied under oath that they ever uttered, in words or substance, any such statement (R. 123-124, 131).

At all events, after a full hearing was had in the Supreme Court the motions were denied with an opinion holding that they were devoid of merit (R. 165-168).

Later, a second application, based solely upon additional newspaper clippings, was made by Buchalter before a different Justice of the Supreme Court, who likewise denied the motion (R. 155-163, 175-176).

Consonant with other reckless accusations throughout his petition Buchalter asserts, at page 24, that his second application for a change of venue "received only the pretense of consideration".[10] The order of the court, however, recites,

> "* * *, and after hearing Jesse Climenko, Esq., attorney for the defendant in support of said application, and Burton B. Turkus, assistant district attorney, in opposition thereto, and due deliberation having been had, and upon filing the opinion of the court, it is * * * ordered etc." (R. 176).

It would be unnecessary to discuss other facts relating to the motions for a change of venue, were it not for the omissions and inaccuracies in the petitions filed in this Court. In view of the extreme length of the record, we think it will be of help to call attention to some of them.

1. Each petitioner, in slightly different language, conveys the impression that the notoriety received by Buchalter through the newspapers "commenced" with the finding of the indictment and was particularly evident in Kings County (Buchalter's Pet., pp. 2-3; Weiss' Pet., p. 7; Capone's Pet., p. 4).

The fact is that because of his criminal activities for many years Buchalter received widespread publicity as a gangster-chieftain throughout the country (R. 129-130). It did not commence in 1940, but long antedated the present indictment. The New York Times Index reveals that the notoriety given to Buchalter's record in crime dates back to at least the year 1935 (R. 45-54, 129-130). Every time, and it was often, that he or his associates came into conflict with the law, an alert press naturally commented upon it.

10. We have already noted that at page 34 of his petition Buchalter makes a similar accusation against the Court of Appeals where, he says, he was given "only a semblance" of a review. It seems that the courts of the State of New York have formed an unholy alliance against Buchalter.

We select but a few examples from reports in the New York Times.

In 1935 and 1936 Buchalter was under investigation by District Attorney Dewey as the controller "of all major rackets" (R. 45-46). In October, 1936, the United States Circuit Court of Appeals affirmed the conviction of Jacob Shapiro but reversed that of Buchalter (R. 46). In September, 1937, Buchalter and Shapiro were named in an extortion indictment (R. 46). In November, 1937, Buchalter and Shapiro were sought in connection with an anti-trust prosecution involving the fur industry, resulting in the Government posting a reward for information leading to their arrest (R. 46). In June, 1938, testimony given in a court proceeding revealed the use of "threats and pressure" against dealers in the fur industry and that "payments were made to Buchalter and Shapiro" (R. 47). In July, 1939, District Attorney Dewey requested an increase in the amount of the reward offered for the apprehension of Buchalter, who was then wanted in connection with the "Garment and Bakery Racket Cases" (R. 47). In August, 1939, Buchalter surrendered to the Federal Bureau of Investigation (R. 48). In the same month he was arraigned on a Federal indictment charging him with "narcotics smuggling" (R. 48). In December, 1939, during Buchalter's trial in the Federal court a witness sought by the Government was found "slain" (R. 50). That month Buchalter was convicted (R. 51). In January, 1940, he was transferred to New York County to be tried on the charges pending against him; he refused to plead to the indictment until the Federal courts denied his application to prevent the state prosecution (R. 53). And in March, 1940, he was again convicted (R. 52).

It is thus apparent that the notoriety given to Buchalter's criminal activities did not commence in May, 1940, when the present indictment was found. Nor can it be said that the newspaper comments were limited to any particular locality. As was said by Mr. Justice Daly in denying the motions for change of venue (R. 165-166),

> "It is evident, however, that such notoriety was not confined to the metropolitan press, which circulates throughout the country, and certainly was not limited to radio listeners in the city and state of New York."

In short, to quote from the affidavit of counsel for Capone filed June 5, 1941, on his application for a separate trial,

> "The defendant Louis Buchalter, alias Lepke, is a person of national prominence * * * whose career has been painted from coast to coast as the ruler of a criminal empire" (R. 36, 42).

So too, counsel for Weiss in a similar application on August 4, 1941, stated (S.M., p. 25):

> "Louis Buchalter, generally known as Lepke, is hailed throughout the press of not only this county but of the city and I dare say the country at large, as the leader of a band, etc."

In the final analysis, therefore, the sole question on the motions for change of venue was whether because of newspaper comments there existed in the County of Kings such prejudice and passion as to prevent a fair trial. Upon that question Mr. Justice Daly said (R. 165-166):

> "After a careful consideration of the application herein, the court is of the opinion that there is no merit thereto. The papers do not establish by convincing proof that the defendant, by reason of prejudice or passion, cannot obtain a fair trial in this county. * * * 'If newspaper articles furnished ground for removal, no defendant could ever be tried for a spectacular crime' in the county of indictment. (People v. Brindell, 194 App. Div. 776.) * * * It is inconceivable that in a cosmopolitan community such as Kings County, with a population of over two million people, a jury cannot be found, qualified to fairly and impartially try the defendant on the evidence."

Such a jury, we shall soon prove, was in fact obtained.

2. In discussing the newspaper notoriety Buchalter charges that "it is beyond cavil" that the prosecuting attorney "was responsible for this propaganda" (Pet., p. 48) and that,

> "Petitioner contends here, as he contended below in the Courts of New York, that the prosecutor succeeded in creating assurance of his guilt in the minds of the community in which he was to be tried * * *" (Pet., p. 3).

A sufficient answer to this accusation is to be found in the affidavit of Buchalter's counsel on his application for a change of venue. He there said:

> "Thus the question of whether reporters whose statements appear under their signature and who purported to quote the District Attorney of Kings County or his associates were unauthorized so to do, is not a problem presented on this application.
>
> * * * * *
>
> No doubt many of the quotations attributed to the District Attorney of Kings County and his various aides as set forth in the exhibits annexed to this affidavit, were improper in the sense that they were made without authorization" (R. 87, 108). (Italics ours.)

3. Finally, Buchalter also charges at page 37 of his petition that,

> "the Court of Appeals refused to review the question of whether * * * a change of venue should have been granted."

This accusation is amazing. We quote from the opinion of Judge Conway (R. 4068-4069; 289 N. Y. at pp. 220-221):

> "Defendants urge that they are entitled to a reversal of the judgment of conviction as matter of law because of the denial of their motion for change of venue to another county of the State, made pursuant to subdivision 2 of section 344 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. In our judgment there is no merit in defendants' claim for a number of reasons.
>
> In the first place, the defendants were tried before a special jury drawn pursuant to article 18-B of the Judiciary Law (Cons. Laws, ch. 30). Each of the defendants consented to be tried before such special jury. The statute (Judiciary Law, § 749-aa, subd. 2) provides, 'No person shall be selected as such special juror * * * who doubts his ability to lay aside an opinion or impression formed from newspaper reading or otherwise, or to render an impartial verdict upon the evidence, uninfluenced by any such opinion or impression * * *.'
>
> The motion was addressed to the sound discretion of the court. We are not prepared to say on this record that its denial was an abuse of discretion (People v. Hyde, 75 Misc. 407 [opinion by Mr. Justice Lehman, now Chief Judge of this Court]; aff'd., 149 App. Div. 131; People v. Brindell, 194 App. Div. 776, 781; People v. Hines, 168 Misc. 453, 470; People v. Savvis, 69 App. Div. 604). This may also be said with reference to the motions of the defendants Weiss and Capone for a change of venue and for a severance."

And in denying the motion for reargument the court said (R. 4120-4121):

> "This court did not restrict its review to a mere determination that there was no abuse of discretion as a matter of law by the County Judge in denying the motion for a change of venue. The majority of the court is of the opinion that the discretion was properly exercised."

We need make no further comment.

The Trial Jury.

1. Buchalter insists that "every talesman called was obsessed by a prejudice" and repeatedly asserts that "a fair jury was not impaneled" (Pet., pp. 27, 41, 49). Capone takes the same position (Pet., pp. 37, 63). Weiss limits his argument to "the fitness of the last two" jurors, stating that their fitness "was doubtful" (Pet., p. 11).

The record shows that the first nine jurors who participated in the verdict were pronounced "satisfactory to the defendants":

1.	Charles E. Stevens,	S.M. p.	522
2.	Chester T. Prentiss,	" "	1038
3.	Charles A. Murphy,	" "	1352
4.	David N. Day,	" "	1530
5.	Henry T. Gill,	" "	1647–1648
6.	James B. Cummings,	" "	1738
7.	George B. Hall,	" "	1861
8.	Harold S. Cross,	" "	2014–2015
9.	James R. Edghill,	" "	2566

These jurors, it is to be noted, were pronounced acceptable by the able defense counsel when their peremptory challenges had not yet been exhausted. Indeed before the next prospective talesman was question the defense still had one more peremptory challenge (S.M., pp. 2618, 2619, 2620). The statement in Buchalter's petition at pages 25 to 26 that their peremptory challenges "were exhausted before the tenth juror was selected" and the statement in Capone's petition at page 118 that the last three jurors "were all questioned subsequent to the exhaustion of the thirty peremptory challenges accorded to the defendants" are not correct.

We proceed to prove it. After the ninth juror was accepted two prospective jurors (Mr. Andrews and Mr. Rorke) were called for questioning. The examination of Mr. Andrews failed to disclose the slightest basis for interposing a challenge for cause (S.M., pp. 2579-2585, 2589-2603). He stated that he had formed no impression about the case or about the defendants (S.M., pp. 2591-2592) and that he knew of no reason which would prevent him from presiding as a fair and impartial juror (S.M., p. 2603). Under these circumstances the defense counsel did not interpose any challenge for cause but merely stated that they had no further questions to ask (S.M., p. 2621).

But before Mr. Andrews was challenged peremptorily, the questioning to determine the fitness of Mr. Rurke was commenced. It developed during his examination that he was the nephew of a police inspector "in charge of traffic" (S.M., p. 2603).[11] He stated that he had no impression adverse to any defendant (S.M., p. 2609), that if accepted as a juror he would "do justice" by his verdict (S.M., p. 2586) and that there was nothing to prevent him from rendering "a just verdict" under his oath (S.M., p. 2589).

As to this juror both Buchalter and Capone now state that he was "obviously prejudiced" (Buchalter's Pet., p. 26; Capone's Pet., p. 8). That they did not want him we have no doubt for they challenged him on the ground of alleged "implied bias" (S.M., p. 2609). Under the New York Code of Criminal Procedure, section 377, however (see Appendix), a juror can be challenged for implied bias for eight specific reasons, "and for no other". Mr. Rorke was not disqualified under any one of these statutory grounds. Counsel for the defense therefore appealed "to the discretion of the court" (S.M., p. 2612). The court, however, properly overruled the challenge (S.M., p. 2617).

Counsel thereupon had a discussion with the court, but not within the hearing of the jurors, which is recorded at 11. Buchalter prefers to describe him as the nephew "of a prominent" and "high police official" (Pet., p. 26).

---

S.M., pages 2618-2620. In this discussion counsel urged that if their challenge for implied bias was not sustained they would be compelled to use their last peremptory challenge, which would leave them without the power of peremptorily challenging the other juror (S.M., pp. 2618-2619). The court, however, adhered to its original decision. Whereupon Mr. Rorke was again questioned. In this second examination Mr. Rorke stated that he would accord the defendants the presumption of innocence (S.M., p. 2624), that if chosen as a juror the defendants could rely upon him "for the preservation of every right that the law gives" them (S.M., p. 2627) and that if there should be a reasonable doubt of guilt in his mind he would give the defendants the benefit of such doubt (S.M., p. 2627).

If, as is now claimed, Mr. Rorke was "obviously prejudiced", why did not counsel use their peremptory challenge against him! Instead, for no reason whatever, they peremptorily challenged Mr. Andrews (S.M., pp. 2627-2628) whose fairness they at no time impugned.

We now come to Mr. Link who was the eleventh juror. He too, say Buchalter and Capone, was "obviously prejudiced" (Buchalter's Pet., p. 26; Capone's Pet., p. 8). His examination appears at S. M., pages 2660-2689. A reading thereof shows that there is not a single word to suggest any bias or prejudice. The statement of Buchalter in his petition at page 26 that "Link had been on the 'Mr. District Attorney' radio series" is misleading. The fact is that he was a radio announcer who had been consulted in connection with a fiction program called "Mr. District Attorney" (S.M., p. 2660). Typical of this man's qualifications to serve as a juror are his answers to the concluding questions put to him by counsel for Buchalter. We quote from the record (S.M., p. 2675):

> "Q. Can Mr. Buchalter as an individual depend on you and entrust to you his keeping and preservation?
> A. Yes, sir.

Q. Without any sympathy or bias or prejudice? A. Yes, sir.

Q. I take it you will consider your oath on that? A. Yes, sir."

And on questioning by counsel for Weiss he said (S.M., p. 2677):

"Q. Do you realize that if you are selected as a juror, under your oath you must determine and find according to the way you regard the facts? A. That is right.

Q. Without fear or favor or prejudice or bias? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And can you do that? A. Yes, sir."

None of the counsel challenged him for bias, actual or implied. Having used up their peremptory challenges, they merely said, "We rest on the record" (S.M., p. 2689).

As to the twelfth juror, John E. Coleman, the record shows that he was eminently qualified to serve. Two illustrations will suffice. Upon being questioned by counsel for Buchalter the juror said (S.M., pp. 2700-2701, 2704):

"Q. While you were sitting here did anything occur in the courtroom to cause favor or prejudice to either side? A. No, sir.

Q. Nothing at all? A. No, sir.

Q. I take it you realize as well as anyone else the extreme importance of getting an impartial jury? A. Yes, sir.

Q. So that now there is no prejudice in your mind, or anything at all which would preclude you from giving Mr. Buchalter a fair trial? A. Nothing.

* * * * *

Q. The law says that every defendant is entitled to a fair trial at your hands. Will you give it to Mr Buchalter? A. Yes, sir."

And under questioning by counsel for Capone (S.M., p. 2705):

"Q. Have you had any discussion at all about this case? A. No, sir.

Q. Have you formed any impression of any character in the courtroom? A. No, sir.

Q. Your mind is clear now as to the fact that you can sit here as a fair and impartial juryman and take the evidence from the witnesses? A. Yes, sir."

It is thus evident that there is no basis whatever for the assertion that petitioners were not tried by a fair and impartial jury.

2. But "the Court of Appeals", says Buchalter at page 37 of his petition, "refused to review the question of whether petitioner had been tried before a fair and impartial jury".

This is not correct. The opinion of the Court of Appeals denying his motion for reargument said (R. 4121):

> "This court examined and found no error in the rulings of the trial court upon the challenges for implied bias. On the motion for a special jury under the statute (Judiciary Law, Cons. Laws, ch. 30, art. 18-B;) the defendant appeared by attorney and consented to be tried before such special jury, a majority of this court is of the opinion that he thereby consented also to the statutory provision that rulings of the trial court upon challenges for actual bias are final and not appealable."

We have noted that only Mr. Rorke was challenged for implied bias and that as to Mr. Link and Mr. Coleman the petitioners, having exhausted their peremptory challenges, merely "rested on the record" and made no challenge for bias, actual or implied. Consequently, the holding of the Court of Appeals that by virtue of the Judiciary Law the "rulings of the trial court upon challenges for actual bias are final and not appealable" necessarily applies to challenges for actual bias made against jurors who did not participate in the verdict.

Conduct of the Trial.

1. As to alleged supression of evidence.

At page 30 of his petition Buchalter says:

> "Throughout a long cross-examination of that witness (Rubin), the prosecution suppressed a prior contradictory statement of the witness."

Let us look at the record. It shows that on direct examination of the witness Rubin, the prosecuting attorney, of his own volition, produced Rubin's prior inconsistent statement, questioned the witness concerning it, and then offered it for identification only because counsel for the defense objected to any examination as to its contents. We quote from the record (R. 1485-1486).

> "Q. Did Mr. McCarthy, the former Assistant District Attorney of Brooklyn, ask you questions about the Rosen case?
>
> Mr. Barshay: I object to it as not binding on this defendant.
>
> The Court: Overruled.
>
> Mr. Barshay: Exception.
>
> The Court: Just yes or no.
>
> The Witness: Yes.
>
> Mr. Turkus: I ask that this be marked for identification.
>
> (Papers marked People's Exhibit Z-16 for identification.)

Q. Do you know whether or not the questions and answers that were made at that time were reduced to writing? A. They were.

> Mr. Barshay: Same objection.
>
> The Court: Overruled.

Q. Is People's Exhibit Z-16 for identification a transcript—

Mr. Talley: I object to that, if your Honor please, as not proper examination under any circumstances.

The Court: Sustained.

Q. Does the date December 16, 1937, refresh your recollection as to the specific time when you were questioned? A. Only that you told me that was the date. I had forgotten it. It was in December.

Q. Did you in December of 1937, tell former Assistant District Attorney McCarthy the truth in that statement that you gave him?

Mr. Barshay: I object to it, your Honor, and I object to the form of the question. It is a self-serving declaration.

The Court: Sustained. The paper itself is not competent. Under the law it may be used only for examination to establish a possible impeachment—."

After thus repeatedly blocking the efforts of the prosecuting attorney to establish that his witness had made a prior contradictory statement, which was helpful to the defense, it is indeed brazen audacity to accuse him of suppressing the statement and, in addition, to charge that,

"No further effort was made by the prosecution to reveal the existence of such a prior contradictory statement" (Buchalter's Pet., p. 30).

We have not failed to note that the prosecuting attorney is charged with suppressing the statement during "cross-examination of the witness". But, here again, the record is barren of even a suggestion of any attempt to withhold from the defense the statement already marked for identification. In fact, after a lengthy cross-examination (R. 1492-1748), counsel for Buchalter concluded the interrogation as follows (R. 1748):

"Q. I forgot one question: Other than the statement you made to McCarthy, referring to one of the exhibits for identification by Mr. Turkus, in 1937, did you at any time make a statement to Mr. McCarthy—yes or no? A. No, sir.

Q. You mean that at no time did you talk to McCarthy when a stenographer was present? A. Only that one time.

Q. That is the only time? A. Yes, sir."

But at no time during this examination, for reasons known only to defense counsel, was any request made to be permitted to examine the statement.

Later, the prosecuting attorney recalled the witness, and at the conclusion of direct examination Buchalter's able and experienced counsel asked the court whether they "had a right to see the statement" (R. 2377), the existence of which they now claim had been suppressed. The court then examined the statement, revealed the material and relevant contradictions by dictating them to the stenographer (R. 2381-2386), and said (R. 2391):

"The Court: This refers to the deposition taken by Assistant District Attorney McCarthy, who was one of the Assistants under Mr. Geoghan in an investigation that was made before Judge O'Dwyer came into office as District Attorney of this County. You, Mr. Turkus, offered it in evidence, and it was objected to and excluded, but was marked for identification. The Court has read parts of it to determine what is fair to allow counsel for the defense to see, for the purpose of further cross-examining this witness. Those parts have been revealed to counsel, and counsel have the right now, to cross-examine on those points."

2. As to alleged deprivation of an opportunity to offer evidence in defense.

At page 32 of his petition Buchalter says:

"Petitioner should have been afforded at least an opportunity to offer a defense. He, however, was denied even the pretense of such an opportunity."

In an attempt to support this complaint he relies upon the trial court's refusal "to make available to him certain official records of the Police Department of the City of New York" (Pet., p. 46; see also Weiss' Pet., pp. 28-30) which are known as "D.D. 4's". He states at page 33:

> "Petitioner contended, upon the trial, * * * that reference to the contents of those reports (if unexpurgated) would demonstrate that, as police officers of the City of New York knew and recorded at that time, petitioner did not see or talk with the witnesses thus produced against him upon the trial."

The lack of substance to the foregoing is demonstrated by the record facts. They are as follows:

Immediately before the cross-examination of the people's witness Berger, a request was made for the police reports. When the court ruled that the defense was not entitled to them, counsel for Buchalter said:

> "Mr. Barshay: * * * Whether or not the D.D. 4's had anything to do with this case, they are only concerning the movements of the defendant Buchalter in the years 1935, 1936 and 1937 in Manhattan and have absolutely no bearing upon this case" (R. 1881).

Later, in the absence of the jury, and while the witness Berger was still under cross-examination, the request for the police reports was repeated. At that time counsel for Buchalter said:

> "* * * If your Honor pleases, those are not records having to do with this case as a case but rather are they records having to do, as I understand the situation, with the work of the Police Department of the City of New York during the period from about September of 1935 to the end of 1936 in respect to the surveillance by agents of that department of one of the persons on trial" (R. 2141-2142).

The court then made the following inquiry:

> "The Court: Are they required in connection with the examination of this witness?
> Mr. Climenko: They may be, your Honor, * * *" (R. 2142).

Thereafter, the court asked the prosecuting attorney the following questions:

> "The Court: I am asking you this: Do they contain any Q's and A's by witnesses in this case?
> Mr. Turkus: They do not.
> The Court: Do they contain any depositions by witnesses in this case?
> Mr. Turkus: They do not.
> The Court: Are they purely police reports?
> Mr. Turkus: They are police confidential reports of activities of the Police Department.
> The Court: No depositions?
> Mr. Turkus: No depositions.
> The Court: No admissions?
> Mr. Turkus: No conversations, no admissions that I could find. They are about three inches thick" (R. 2146).

It is also to be noted that these reports were of investigations, made by police officers, of the movements of various underworld characters (R. 2142-2143).

Finally, the trial court, in denying the request, said:

> "The Court: If a policeman took the stand and testified otherwise, then the question as to whether or not these records could be used to contradict the policeman, provided they were made by him, would come up and call for a ruling, but that is not present at this moment. Now as it stands, in addition to the fact that these are privileged and confidential under the law, they are hearsay" (R. 2151).

At no time did the trial court preclude petitioners from offering any defense they pleased. At the end of the people's case petitioners were free to call the Police Commissioner, or anyone else in authority, to reveal the names of the officers who made the reports and then to call such officers to testify on any competent matter. As we have noted the court specifically informed defense counsel that "if a policeman took the stand * * *, then the question as to whether or not these records could be used to contradict the policeman, provided they were made by him, would come up and call for a ruling" (R. 2151). But counsel failed to do so, and the reason for it is revealed by the finding of the Court of Appeals which examined the police reports. The court said (R. 4120):

> "This court considered the refusal of the trial court to accord the defendant access to the records of the Police Department of the City of New York. The records in question were deposited with this court at the time of the argument of the appeal and were examined. The so-called surveillance amounted to very little. It was of the entrance and lobby of the office building and not of the floor upon which defendant Buchalter had his office. The reports established that the defendant could and did elude the police at will. The ruling of the trial court was correct." (Italics ours.)

3. As to alleged restriction of cross-examination.

Capone tells us that there was "unwarranted restriction of cross-examination by defense counsel" (Pet., p. 125; see also Weiss' Pet., pp. 5-6, 44). The fact is, as stated by Chief Judge Lehman, the "cross-examination of the important witnesses continued for days and no summary could be entirely satisfactory" (R. 4075; 289 N. Y. at p. 227). And the record shows that Bernstein's cross-examination occupies 504 pages (R. 768-1272); Berger's 288 pages (R. 1883-2134, 2156-2191, 2201-2203); Rubin's 273 pages (R. 1492-1754, 2391-2402); Magoon's 131 pages (R. 2472-2603); Tannenbaum's 110 pages (R. 2245-2353, 2368-2370).

4. As to "armed guards", manacles, and "cordons of police".

Petitioners make extravagant statements concerning the "atmosphere" in the courtroom. They complain that in being brought into the courtroom they were "manacled to police officers" and were "unmanacled only after the jury were in their seats and the defendants had been seated" (Weiss' Pet., p. 12). They also complain that the people's witnesses—such as Buchalter's employee Tannenbaum, a six-time murderer (R. 4040, 4041), Capone's employee Magoon, a two-time murderer (R. 4041), his employee Bernstein, an accomplice to the murder of Rosen (R. 4042), and Rubin, who was promptly shot through the head when he testified before the grand jury (R. 4049, 4050)—were brought into the courtroom by men "known to be detectives", who "had their badges on" and who were permitted to remain during the trial (Weiss' Pet., pp. 11-12; Capone's Pet., pp. 9-16).

A full description of the so-called "atmosphere" appears in the record at pages 686-690, 764-768, 1755-1756, and need not here be repeated. It is enough to say, concerning petitioners being manacled to police officers when brought to and from the courtroom, that Buchalter and Weiss were formerly fugitives from justice and at the trial were Federal prisoners in the custody of a United States marshal. They and Capone, as the record shows, were desperate criminals. [12]

In so far as the protection afforded to witnesses is concerned we add the information imparted by the trial court to defense counsel, in the absence of the jury (R. 2138):

> "At one time the situation was so desperate here that in trying a case it was deemed necessary to get an armored bank car with armed police outriders in order to escort one witness here because it was indirectly reported that there was a scheme on to block traffic and to assassinate that witness on his way to the jail. That witness is reported to have committed suicide this morning by jumping out of the eighth story window of a hotel."

12. For similar situations where such precautions were held to be proper see Kelly v. Oregon, 273 U. S. 589, 591; State v. Temple, 194 Mo. 237, 248; People v. Kimball, 5 Cal. Rep. [2] 608.

5. As to the charge to the jury.

Petitioners place great stress upon alleged errors in the charge to the jury, which they claim were tantamount to a "direction to convict". Their argument is, in the main, based upon isolated excerpts, paraphrase and inference. The charge, as given, appears at pages 3871-3991 of the record. The parts criticized are discussed in the majority and dissenting opinions of the Court of Appeals (R. 4030-4091; 289 N. Y. 181-243). We need only add that the trial court repeatedly instructed the jury, with great emphasis, that they were the sole judges of the facts, that the credibility of witnesses was for them to determine (R. 3871, 3880, 3890, 3902, 3903), and that,

"The important thing is to get a mature decision, based upon the evidence and the evidence alone, a decision which will be fair and impartial, which will be without passion, without prejudice, and without sympathy (R. 3871).

* * * * *

The case must be decided fairly, without prejudice and without sympathy. That means not only to one side, but to both— fairly, without prejudice or sympathy to either the defendants or to the people of the State of New York—because this requirement is a rule that works both ways. The scales of justice must be kept evenly balanced to see that the rights of both sides are respected. That is what the trial of a case in court, according to the accepted standards, means (R. 3872).

* * * * *

As you sift through the mass of testimony that has gone into the case, in a record approximating a million words, you will seek to bring forth the germs of truth. Decide without fear and favor; see that the rights of both sides are preserved throughout, and to the full extent permissible, without prejudice" (R. 3873).

Jurisdiction to Review.

The jurisdiction of this Court is invoked under Section 237 (b) of the Judicial Code as amended; 28 U. S. C. A. Section 344 (b).

In an attempt to bring themselves within the requirements of the statute, petitioners Buchalter and Weiss resort to very adroitly worded statements which we shall prove to be without foundation. Let us first quote what they say.

Buchalter asserts, at page 39, the following:

"The Federal questions herein presented and urged were raised in the State courts, as is evidenced by the statement in the remittitur of the Court of Appeals of the State of New York, as follows:

'Appellant, in his brief and argument, raised the point that he had been denied his constitutional rights under the Fourteenth Amendment to the Constitution of the United States, and this point was considered and necessarily decided by this Court.'

These Federal questions are succinctly set forth in petitioner's brief in support of his motion for a reargument in the Court of Appeals, which is a part of the record before this Court, and which shows that these points were all urged below in the first instance and at first opportunity."

In a similar statement Weiss says, at page 35, that,

"in said Court of Appeals petitioner especially set up and claimed, under the Fourteenth Amendment of the > Constitution of the United States, the right, privilege and immunity against being deprived by the State of New York of his life and liberty without due process of law 'and', as certified by the Court of Appeals, 'this point was considered and necessarily decided by this Court' (R. 4095), this point having been specifically presented in Buchalter's brief in support of his motion for reargument (R. 4103-4114), which was joined in by petitioner Weiss (R. 4120)."

Capone makes the bald assertion that "the constitutional questions were raised and passed upon in the court below", and, as proof, also cites the remittitur of the Court of Appeals (p. 41).

Now, as to the facts. None of the petitioners, upon whom rests the "burden to show affirmatively" that this Court has jurisdiction (Gorman v. Washington Univ., 316 U. S. 98, 101), supports his statement by pointing to any part of the record other than the recital in the remittitur and their brief on the motion for reargument. (See requirements of Rule 12, subd. 1, par. 3 of this Court, Revised Rules adopted Feb. 13, 1939.) The reason for this is that in the courts of first instance, with the sole exception of Capone's claim that under "the Constitution of the United States" he was entitled to a separate trial (R. 36-37), the petitioners never asserted any Federal right. The record of the trial will be searched in vain for a single instance "where any title, right, privilege, or immunity is specially set up or claimed under the Constitution of the United States" (Judicial Code, sec. 237 (b) as amended). Nor is there any indication that the courts of first instance ever decided a Federal question.

Thus, the first fact is that Buchalter's statement that "the Federal questions herein presented and urged were raised in the State courts" and "were all urged below in the first instance" is untrue.

We now turn to the proceedings in the Court of Appeals. In that court, petitioners presented every conceivable point that could be made in their behalf. Buchalter's brief was 166 pages in length (R. 4115). He raised ten points.[13] Of those, he selected only two as involving an alleged Federal question. Those two points dealt with the denial of the motions for a change of venue and the granting of the motion for trial by special jury (Buchalter's Court of Appeals Brief, Points II and III). As to all other points, he made no claim that they presented a denial of a right under the Federal Constitution.

Weiss' brief to the Court of Appeals was 78 pages in length (R. 4115). He raised ten points. In none of them did he assert any Federal right, except that as to the motions for change of venue he adopted and incorporated by reference the argument made in Buchalter's brief (Weiss' Court of Appeals Brief, Point Eighth).

Capone's main and supplemental briefs covered 284 pages (R. 4115). He raised ten points. Of those, the one dealing with rulings on challenges to jurors was presented as involving a denial of a Federal right, and another incorporated by reference Buchalter's argument as to the refusal to change the venue (Capone's Court of Appeals Brief, Points Five and Nine). The remaining points made no reference whatever to the Federal Constitution.

It is also to be noted that the exhaustive majority and dissenting opinions of the Court of Appeals make no mention of any Federal question (R. 4030-4091; 289 N. Y. 181-243).

Consequently, the recital in the remittitur, that "the point" was raised that there was a denial of constitutional rights under the Fourteenth Amendment and that "this point was considered and necessarily decided", must be construed as referring only to the three points where a Federal

13. The briefs on the appeal to the Court of Appeals have not been made part of the record before this Court. In view of petitioners' reliance upon the ambiguous recital in the remittitur, which was filed before the motion for reargument was denied, as supplying the basis for this Court's jurisdiction, it is essential to refer to those briefs to make clear the meaning of the remittitur.

question was raised, namely, denial of motions for change of venue, trial by special jury, and rulings on challenges to jurors.

Buchalter's contention, therefore, that "the Federal questions herein presented and urged were raised in the State courts, as is evidenced by the statement in the remittitur", is not in accord with the facts.

Turning to the motion for reargument, it will be recalled that Weiss, after quoting the recital in the remittitur that "this point was considered and necessarily decided", says:

> "This point having been specifically presented in Buchalter's brief in support of his motion for reargument (R. 4103-4114), which was joined in by petitioner Weiss."

The quoted statement is misleading, because the remittitur was filed long before the motion for reargument was made and decided. The remittitur is dated October 30, 1942 (R. 4091-4098). The motion for reargument was made on November 12, 1942 (R. 4099), and was denied on November 25, 1942 (R. 4120). The remittitur, therefore, cannot possibly be deemed to refer to the alleged Federal questions sought to be raised for the first time in the motion for reargument.

Finally, the motion was not entertained, and the memorandum opinion denying it made no reference to any Federal question. Buchalter's contention that the brief in support of his motion for reargument shows that the questions presented "were all urged below in the first instance and at first opportunity" does not square with the facts. The motion for reargument was a reiteration of the points originally urged, except that where claim of having been deprived of a Federal right was not made before, it was now supplied as an afterthought. This was undoubtedly done for the purpose of attempting to create a jurisdictional basis for review by this Court.

SUMMARY OF ARGUMENT.

The errors assigned are without merit. They deal with matters which involve only the law of the State of New York, and do not present a Federal question. The recital in the remittitur cannot confer jurisdiction on this Court to review alleged errors concerning which no Federal right was asserted. The claims made in the motion for reargument are worthless as a basis for this Court's jurisdiction, because the motion was denied and the purported Federal questions there raised for the first time were not passed upon.

ARGUMENT.

I.

The guaranty of due process of law does not furnish a right to have decisions of state courts reviewed upon the ground of alleged erroneous findings of fact or erroneous determinations of law concerning state matters. In determining whether there is any basis for the claim that petitioners were denied their constitutional rights "we must remember that the Fourteenth Amendment does not limit the powers of the States to try and deal with crimes committed within their borders, and was not intended to bring to the test of a decision of this Court every ruling made in the course of a State trial". (Avery v. Alabama, 308 U. S. 444, 446-447.) "This Court is not made, by the laws passed in pursuance of the Constitution, a court of appeal from the highest courts of the states, except to a very limited extent, and for a precisely defined purpose." (Sauer v. New York, 206 U. S. 536, 546.)

When federal power is invoked to set aside what the highest court of a state regards as a fair trial "it must be plain that a federal right has been invaded". (Lisenba v. California, 314 U. S. 219, 239.) Such a right is invaded where a defendant in a capital case is denied representation by counsel (Powell v. Alabama, 287 U. S. 45), or where by the active conduct or the connivance of the prosecution a conviction is obtained through the use of perjured testimony (Mooney v. Holohan, 294 U. S. 103) or through the use of a confession wrung from the accused by overpowering his will (Brown v. Mississippi, 297 U. S. 278; Chambers v. Florida, 309 U. S. 227), or where the trial is dominated by mob violence in the courtroom, so that there is an actual interference with the course of justice (Moore v. Dempsey, 261 U. S. 86).

The case at bar is outside the scope of those decisions. Petitioners were represented by able and experienced counsel, who were given ample opportunity to prepare their defense. The trial lasted about eleven weeks. The widest latitude was given in the selection of the jury, which, as we have demonstrated, resulted in obtaining a fair and impartial jury. Equally wide latitude was given to the defense in the cross-examination of the people's witnesses and in summations to the jury. And upon appeal to the Court of Appeals petitioners were given a full and conscientious hearing. In short, at every vital stage of the proceedings due process of law was had.

The criticism directed against the trial judge seems to be based on the notion that trial judges should be reduced to the humiliating position of having no right to say or do anything in a jury trial except to rule in monosyllables on questions presented by counsel, that they should do nothing to guide and control the course of the trial, or to restrain counsel and keep them within bounds, or even prevent them from taking an unfair advantage by misleading the jury by false suggestions and the like.

"The trial judge is," however, "something more than a mere automaton." (People v. Ohanian, 245 N. Y. 227, 232.) He "is not a mere moderator, but is the governor of the trial for the purpose of assuring its proper conduct and of determining questions of law. This discharge of the judicial function, as at common law, is an essential factor in the process for which the Federal Constitution provides". (Herron v. Southern Pacific R. Co., 283 U. S. 91, 95.)

Trial by jury can never be an effective means for administering justice as long as it is characterized by appeals by able advocates to the emotions of untrained men with the judge muzzled and relegated to the side lines and not allowed any substantial part in the trial except to say "yes" or "no" to propositions drafted by counsel and used by them for partisan effect.

The notion that a jury, called upon to render a verdict on disputed facts and subjected to the obfuscating arguments of opposing counsel, are unable to reach a fair decision because the court seeks to help them by analysis and comment is absurd. The court has been trained to understand and clarify factual as well as legal intricacies, penetrate the devices of counsel and observe where the truth is apt to be. To deprive him of the right to aid the jury in arriving at a just verdict on the evidence would emasculate his usefulness. As was said by Dean Ezra Thayer (quoted in Wigmore on Evidence [3rd ed.] sec. 2551-a, p. 510):

> "In a long trial, perhaps involving hard questions of expert judgment, the business of weighing conflicting testimony is a serious task for men unused to analysis or to abstract ideas; and a system which gives full scope to the eloquence of lawyers and then denies the jury the assistance of the only trained and impartial mind in the court room, whatever its excuse in days of royal Tyranny or lay magistrates, is today a senseless perversion."

The criticism of the trial judge for permitting petitioners to be manacled to police officers while being brought to and from the courtroom is certainly unwarranted. Where, as here, the defendants on trial for murder are desperate and dangerous criminals, such precautions must be taken to prevent their escape. (Kelly v. Oregon, 273 U. S. 589; State v. Temple, 194 Mo. 237; People v. Kimball, 5 Cal. Rep. [2d] 608.) It is specious to contend that by so doing their constitutional rights were violated. The words of Judge Cooley, a great judicial interpreter of the organic law, are quite pertinent. He said (People v. Murray, 52 Mich. 291):

> "I do not understand that the Constitution is an instrument to play fast and loose with in criminal cases, any more than in any others; or that it is the business of Courts to be astute in the discovery of technical difficulties in the punishment of parties for their criminal conduct."

And this Court in a situation analogous to the one at bar said (Kelly v. Oregon, 273 U. S. 589, 591):

> "Another assignment of error is to the fact that the plaintiff in error was constantly in the custody of the warden of the penitentiary, inside and outside of the court room, during the trial. It is argued that he was entitled to be free from any custody, in order that he might fully make his defense, and that this deprived him of due process. It is a new meaning attached to the requirement of due process of law that one who is serving in the penitentiary for a felony and while there commits a capital offense must, in order to secure a fair trial, be entirely free from custody (citing cases). There is no showing that he had not full opportunity to consult with counsel or that he was in any way prevented from securing needed witnesses. The assignment is wholly without merit."[14]

The same is true of the complaint against the presence of detectives in the courtroom when the people's witnesses were testifying. We have already stated the facts controlling this situation. It is pertinent here to quote the considered judgment of an eminent committee of the American Bar Association in their report on "Improvements In The Law

14. It is to be remembered that at the trial Buchalter and Weiss were Federal prisoners.

of Evidence (Reports of the Section of Judicial Administration at Annual Meeting for July 25-27, 1938):

> "10. Intimidation of Witnesses.
>
> In most of the large cities there is probably more or less intimidation of witnesses in felony cases. This, when it exists, is the supreme disgrace of our justice. It is well-known to all that the success of the 'racket' is due chiefly to the lack of proof caused by the intimidation of witnesses. This intimidation takes place either in the court premises or outside of them.
>
> (A) In the court premises it is the duty of the judge to install arrangements for protecting the witnesses, and also to instruct and require his bailiffs to exclude from the courtroom and its premises known bullies and touts. All this part of the remedy comes home to the judge's responsibility."

II.

We further maintain that, apart from the lack of merit to the points raised by petitioners, none of the questions presented is reviewable.

1. The denial of the motions for a change of venue does not involve a Federal question. "Matters of this sort are addressed to the discretion of the trial judge" (Stroud v. United States, 215 U. S. 15, 20), and where the decision is that of a state court it is not subject to review here (Barrington v. Missouri, 205 U. S. 483; Thomas v. Texas, 212 U. S. 278, 281-282.) In the Barrington case, just cited, the defendant applied for a change of venue on the ground of local prejudice. His motion was denied, and he was convicted of murder in the first degree. This Court in dismissing his application to review for want of jurisdiction said (p. 485):

> "In our judgment no Federal question was involved. Were this otherwise it would follow that we could de> cide in any case that the trial court had abused its discretion under the laws of the state, although the supreme court of that state had held to the contrary."

2. The same holds true of the denial of Capone's motion for a severance and of the motions for a three-month adjournment. "In the course of trial, * * *, many procedural questions necessarily arise which must be decided by the trial judge in the light of facts then presented and conditions then existing. Disposition of a request for a continuance is of this nature and is made in the discretion of the trial judge, the exercise of which will ordinarily not be reviewed." (Avery v. Alabama, 308 U. S. 444, 446; Franklin v. South Carolina, 218 U. S. 161, 168.)

In Davis v. Texas, 139 U. S. 651, the defendant was convicted of murder. In dismissing a writ of error this Court said (pp. 652-653):

> "The fifth error relates to the action of the trial court in refusing a continuance, and the sixth, to the action of that court in respect to that refusal upon the motion for a new trial. * * * It was for the court of appeals to determine whether the discretionary power of the trial court had been so abused as to amount to error, and whether its reconsideration, upon the motion for a new trial, of the refusal to continue called for revision. * * * The matter was for the state courts to decide, and their action presents no federal question."

3. We have demonstrated in our statement of the facts that a fair and impartial jury was impanneled. Petitioners also contend that by reason of alleged erroneous rulings on challenges for cause to jurors who were excused peremptorily, they were improperly compelled to exhaust their peremptory challenges. This contention does not present a Federal question, even though the last two trial jurors were selected after petitioners had used up their thirty peremptory challenges. (Spies v. Illinois, 123 U. S. 131, 168-180.) As was said in Brown v. New Jersey, 175 U. S. 172, 175):

> "* * * the purpose of criminal procedure is not to enable the defendant to select jurors, but to secure an impartial jury. 'The accused cannot complain if he is still tried by an impartial jury. He can demand nothing more. Northern P. R. Co. v. Herbert, 116 U. S. 642. The right to challenge is the right to reject, not to select, a juror. If from those who remain an impartial jury is obtained, the constitutional right of the accused is maintained' Hayes v. Missouri, 120 U. S. 68, 71."

4. The charge to the jury did not present any Federal question. No claim was made at the trial that it violated the Federal Constitution. Nor was any such claim made or decided by the Court of Appeals. The charge, therefore, is not reviewable here. As stated in Franklin v. South Carolina, 218 U. S. 161, 172.

> "The supreme court of South Carolina considered and overruled certain grounds of appeal, which embrace objections to the charge. But we do not find in these rulings any determination of Federal questions adverse to plaintiff in error which would warrant a reversal by this court. These rulings were upon questions of general law, concerning which no Federal right was asserted and denied, as is essential to enable this court to review the judgment of a state court."

5. Finally, it is to be remembered that the prop upon which this Court's jurisdiction is invoked is the vague recital in the remittitur and the briefs submitted on the motion for reargument.

The remittitur, however, cannot confer jurisdiction to review questions which were not raised. (Honeyman v. Hanan, 300 U. S. 14; Capital City Dairy Co. v. Ohio, 183 U. S. 238, 244.) Obviously, "a point that was never raised cannot be said to have been decided adversely to a party who never set it up or in any way alluded to it". (Dewey v. Des Moines, 173 U. S. 193, 200.) Since in the case at bar the alleged errors concerning the conduct of the trial were never set up or claimed to be in violation of the Federal Constitution, the recital in the remittitur can have no bearing at all as to them. For it is settled law that "the certificate of a court of last resort of a State may not import a Federal question into a record where otherwise such question does not arise". (Rector v. City Deposit Bank Co., 200 U. S. 405.) As this Court said quite recently (Honeyman v. Hanan, supra, 300 U. S. at p. 22):

> "Thus the true function of a certificate or statement of a state court, by way of amendment of, or addition to, the record, is to aid in the understanding of the record, to clarify it by defining the Federal question with reasonable precision and by showing how the question was raised and decided, so that this Court upon the record as thus clarified may be able to see that the Federal question was properly raised and was necessarily determined."

As to the motion for rearguument, which was denied without passing upon the alleged Federal questions there raised for the first time, it suffices to say:

> "This court has decided many times that it is too late to raise a Federal question for the first time in a petition for rehearing in the court of last resort of a state after that court has pronounced its final decision. Locher v. Schroeder, 149 U. S. 580, 585; Pim v. St. Louis, 165 U. S. 273. It is true that we have also decided that, if the court entertains the motion and passes on the Federal question, we will review its decision. But it must appear that the court has done so."
>
> McCorquodale v. Texas, 211 U. S. 432, 437.
> Forbes v. State Council of Virginia, 216 U. S. 396, 399.

III.

The petitions for writs of certiorari should be denied.

Respectfully submitted,

THOMAS CRADOCK HUGHES,
Acting District Attorney,
Kings County, N. Y.

HENRY J. WALSH,
SOLOMON A. KLEIN,
Assistant District Attorneys,
Of Counsel.

Appendix.

Affidavit for Special Jury and Trial Date.

COUNTY COURT—KINGS COUNTY

THE PEOPLE OF THE STATE OF NEW YORK,

Plaintiffs.

—against—

LOUIS BUCHALTER, alias "Lepke"; EMANUEL WEISS, alias "Mendy Weiss"; HARRY STRAUSS, alias "Pittsburgh Phil"; JAMES FERACO; PHILIP COHEN, alias "Little Farvel"; LOUIS CAPONE,

Defendants.

Indictment No. 23855.

STATE OF NEW YORK, }
CITY OF NEW YORK, } ss.:
COUNTY OF KINGS, }

SOLOMON A. KLEIN, being duly sworn, deposes and says:

That he is an Assistant District Attorney in the office of the District Attorney of Kings County and that the sources of his information and the grounds of his belief are the records and files of said office.

An indictment, No. 23855, was filed in the County Court of Kings County, on May 28, 1940, charging the above named defendants with the crime of Murder in the First Degree for the killing of one Joseph Rosen on September 13, 1936, by shooting and killing him with revolvers. A copy of said indictment is hereto annexed and marked "A".

On May 28, 1940, the defendants Capone and Strauss were arraigned in the County Court of Kings County and entered separate pleas of not guilty to the said indictment. The defendant Strauss has recently been electrocuted for the commission of another murder. The defendant Feraco has as yet not been apprehended. On December 2, 1940, the defendant Cohen was arraigned in the County Court of Kings County and entered a plea of not guilty to the said indictment. On April 11, 1941, the defendant Weiss was arraigned in the said court and likewise entered a plea of not guilty. On May 29, 1941, the defendant Buchalter was arraigned in the said court and a plea of not guilty was entered for him.

The District Attorney intends to move the trial of the said indictment in the County Court of Kings County, Part II., before Hon. Franklin Taylor, not later than July 14, 1941.

Deponent is fully familiar with the facts and circumstances involved in the case against the aforesaid defendants and states that a special jury is required to try the issues for the following reasons:

The case is one of great importance and intricacy, involving proof that the defendants are guilty of the crime of Murder in the First Degree, committed with premeditation, deliberation and intent. This proof consists not only of voluminous and complicated testimony by lay witnesses, but also of expert testimony of a technical nature. The trial will also involve intricate and unusual questions of law. In addition to the complicated questions of fact and intricate questions of law, the circumstances concerning the case are such as to render it one of extreme importance both from the standpoint of the people as well as of the defendants.

Deponent further states and fully believes that the due, impartial and efficient administration of justice in this case will be advanced by having the trial herein before a special jury instead of an ordinary jury.

That no previous application for the relief herein sought has been made.

WHEREFORE, deponent prays for an order directing that the trial herein be had before a special jury in accordance with the statute in such case made and provided, and for such other and further relief as the court may deem just and proper.

SOLOMON A. KLEIN.

Sworn to before me this
23rd day of June, 1941.

CHARLES T. SCHACK
Notary Public
Kings County.

STATE OF NEW YORK, }
COUNTY OF KINGS, } ss.:

I, FRANCIS J. SINNOTT, Clerk of the County of Kings, and Clerk of the County Court in and for said County (said Court being a Court of Record) DO HEREBY CERTIFY that I have compared the annexed with the original Motion for Special Jury filed in my office June 26, 1941, and that the same is a true transcript thereof and of the whole of such original.

IN TESTIMONY WHEREOF, I have hereunder set my hand and affixed the seal of said County and Court, this 30th day of December, 1942.

FRANCIS J. SINNOTT, Clerk.

Buchalter's Answering Affidavit.

COUNTY COURT—KINGS COUNTY

THE PEOPLE OF THE STATE OF NEW YORK,

Plaintiffs.

—against—

LOUIS BUCHALTER, alias "Lepke"; EMANUEL WEISS, alias "Mendy Weiss"; HARRY STRAUSS, alias "Pittsburgh Phil"; JAMES FERACO; PHILIP COHEN, alias "Little Farvel"; LOUIS CAPONE,

Defendants.

Indictment No. 23855.

STATE OF NEW YORK, }
COUNTY OF NEW YORK, } ss.:

HYMAN BARSHAY, being duly sworn, deposes and says:

1. I am an attorney admitted to practice in the State of New York.

2. On May 28, 1941, I was retained as counsel for the defendant, LOUIS BUCHALTER.

3. On that day I filed a special notice of appearance on behalf of that defendant, my client.

4. On behalf of the defendant, LOUIS BUCHALTER, the jurisdiction of this Court to try him under the pending indictment has been questioned and a proceeding is now pending in the United States Courts wherein the question of the jurisdiction of this Court to try that defendant under the indictment referred to in the caption herein is sought to be questioned.

5. Reference is made to the question of the jurisdiction of this Court only for the purpose of indicating that my appearance in limited opposition to this motion is not to be construed as a waiver of the contention heretofore asserted on behalf of that defendant that this Court is without jurisdiction to try that defendant under this indictment.

6. No objection is made on behalf of my client to that aspect of the motion which seeks an order for the trial of this case before a special jury.

7. I note, however, from the affidavit of Solomon A. Klein, submitted in support of the motion, that the District Attorney intends to move the trial of this case "not later than July 14, 1941". I oppose that aspect of this motion and for the following reasons:

I cannot be adequately prepared on behalf of my client for the trial of this action on July 14, 1941.

As heretofore stated, I was retained on behalf of the defendant, LOUIS BUCHALTER, on May 28, 1941. Nevertheless, I was not permitted to confer with him until June 17, 1941.

The defendant, LOUIS BUCHALTER, is in the custody of the Attorney General of the United States. The Director of Federal Prisons, Mr. James V. Bennett on May 30, 1941, informed my associates in this case, that I would not be permitted to consult with the defendant. That announcement was made by telegram addressed to J. Bertram Wegman, the contents of which stated:

> "Regret we cannot permit Mr. Barshay interview Buchalter."

Thereafter, on return of a writ of habeas corpus issued by the United States District Court for the Southern District of New York, as I am informed, the United States District Court for the Southern District of New York, instructed an Assistant United States Attorney in the office of the United States Attorney for the Southern District of

New York, to obtain the consent of the Federal Director of Prisons for permission to allow me to see my client. I was afforded that opportunity for the first time on June 17, 1941.

8. My client, LOUIS BUCHALTER, is charged with murder in the first degree and the affidavit of Solomon A. Klein, submitted in support of this motion, states that this case "is one of great importance and intricacy, involving proof that the defendants are guilty of the crime of Murder in the First Degree, committed with premeditation, deliberation and intent. This proof consists not only of voluminous and complicated testimony by lay witnesses, but also of expert testimony of a technical nature. The trial will also involve intricate and unusual questions of law. In addition to the complicated questions of fact and intricate questions of law, the circumstances concerning the case are such as to render it one of extreme importance both from the stand point of the people as well as of the defendants".

9. I cannot prepare this case for trial in less than a month. There are only twenty-two working days between June 17, 1941, the day when I was permitted access to my client, and July 14, 1941, the day when the District Attorney seeks to set as the date of trial. I respectfully submit that in view of the complicated nature of this case as proved by the District Attorney himself, through the affidavit of his assistant, it is physically impossible to prepare the case in that time.

10. I have spoken to the defendant personally on three occasions since June 17, 1941. The facilities at the Jail at best are insufficient for long conferences. Other prisoners are entitled to the use of the same counsel room and a two hour stay is the longest for one day, without trespassing on the time of others. There are thousands of pages of testimony of other trials that I must read. There are numberless witnesses that I must interview both in and out of town. Even the help of my associates is insufficient to properly prepare in so short a time. Intricate questions of law must be searched and prepared. The Court will understand the many things necessary to be done in a case of this magnitude. This time of the year many people take vacations and it therefore takes a longer time to reach them. Their convenience must be served as well as mine. I have already encountered three such situations in this case.

11. If it is impossible to prepare the case within that time, the setting of the date by the District Attorney involves the imposition of a gross injustice upon my client and great hardship upon me. As the situation is posed by the District Attorney's moving affidavit, the District Attorney has worked on this case and has had for the purposes of preparation, a period of at least fifteen months. The District Attorney asserts, by necessary implication, that I ought to be required to complete my preparation for the defense in twenty-two working days. I am certain the District Attorney does not want any man on trial for his life to be represented by counsel inadequately prepared to try the case.

12. No reason is given in the moving affidavit as to the necessity of trying this intricate, important and involved case before a special jury in the midst of the summer. No tenable reason could be proffered in support of that aspect of this application. If it be said, as it formerly has been said in informal discussion that the trial must proceed on that date by reason of the insistence of subordinates of the United States Attorney General, then I respectfully submit that I ought have an opportunity to solicit an expression of opinion from the United States Attorney General or his subordinates. I am reasonably certain that the Attorney General of the United States can be made to understand that the trial of a State murder case should not be had under conditions which would deprive the defendant of a reasonable opportunity to prepare his defense. This defendant is in a sense the ward of the Attorney General. I am certain that the Attorney General or any of his subordinates would want that the defendant be given an opportunity for the preparation of his defense.

13. I respectfully request that the trial of this case be set for a day not earlier than the first week of September. All of the intervening interval between that date and today is needed for the preparation of the defense.

HYMAN BARSHAY.

Sworn to before me this
25th day of June, 1941.

HARRIET COHEN
Notary Public
Kings County.

STATE OF NEW YORK, }
COUNTY OF KINGS, } ss.:

I, FRANCIS J. SINNOTT, Clerk of the County of Kings, and Clerk of the County Court in and for said County (said Court being a Court of Record) DO HEREBY CERTIFY that I have compared the annexed with the original affidavit filed in my office June 26, 1941, and that the same is a true transcript thereof and of the whole of such original.

IN TESTIMONY WHEREOF, I have hereunder set my hand and affixed the seal of said County and Court, this 30th day of December, 1942.

FRANCIS J. SINNOTT, Clerk.

Weiss' Answering Affidavit.

COUNTY COURT—KINGS COUNTY

THE PEOPLE OF THE STATE OF NEW YORK,

Plaintiffs,

—against—

LOUIS BUCHALTER, alias "Lepke"; EMANUEL WEISS, alias "Mendy Weiss"; HARRY STRAUSS, alias "Pittsburgh Phil"; JAMES FERACO; PHILIP COHEN, alias "Little Farvel"; LOUIS CAPONE,

Defendants.

Indictment No. 23855.

STATE OF NEW YORK,
CITY OF NEW YORK,
COUNTY OF NEW YORK, } ss.:

JAMES I. CUFF, being duly sworn deposes and says that he is the attorney for EMANUEL WEISS, one of the defendants in the above entitled indictment, and your deponent has been retained to represent the said defendant as trial counsel in the trial of the indictment against him.

That deponent was retained by the said defendant on June 11, 1941, and duly filed his Notice of Appearance in the Office of the Clerk of the County Court, Kings County on June 12, 1941.

That deponent does not oppose the application for the trial of the indictment before a special jury, but deponent does oppose that part of the application which seeks to have the trial set for July 14, 1941, for the reason that it will be physically impossible for deponent to properly prepare the case for trial in the limited time at deponent's disposal.

Since deponent was retained in this case he had prior commitments for trials in the Supreme Court which occupied most of his time, and practically the only time that deponent has been able to devote to the case since June 12, 1941, up to the present time was during the evenings, except for the few times that deponent has been able to interview his client in the Federal Detention Prison at 427 West Street, Borough of Manhattan, City of New York.

The proper preparation of this case for trial will involve the interviewing of a very large number of possible witnesses and the examination of voluminous documents and records of other trials in which deponent believes that many of the witnesses that will be called on this trial appeared as witnesses and gave testimony.

Deponent intends to devote himself exclusively to the preparation of this case between now and the time that it is reached for trial, but from what deponent has ascertained to date has firmly convinced him that there will not be sufficient time at his disposal to do the work that it will be necessary for him to do in order that the defendant's interests may be properly, fully and sufficiently protected at the trial and his defense properly and fully presented.

Deponent believes that this Court might take judicial notice of the fact that the case is one of great importance, and that it is such as to require a tremendous amount of time and labor in order that the defendant's interests might be fully protected and his defense fully presented at the trial.

Indeed, the affidavit of Mr. Klein submitted in support of the application states that the proof to be submitted on behalf of the prosecution consists of voluminous and complicated testimony of lay witnesses and in addition there will be expert testimony of a technical nature. He also states that the trial will involve intricate and unusual questions of law. In this deponent agrees with Mr. Klein and wishes to add that in so stating he puts the case very mildly.

Deponent's sole desire is to see that his client's interests are fully and properly protected and this cannot be done unless deponent has sufficient time to make the necessary investigations and interview all of the persons who might be called as witnesses on behalf of deponent's client, and deponent is certain that there will not be sufficient time at his disposal even if he should devote himself exclusively to this work day and night until July 14, 1941.

The affidavit of the District Attorney does not present any good or sufficient reason why it should be necessary to start the trial of this case on July 14, 1941, and deponent submits that it will not be for the best interests of the defendant to have the case tried a the time specified which will be during the very hottest period of the summer.

WHEREFORE deponent asks that in considering this motion that the Court give due consideration to the situation in which deponent finds himself, and to the utter impossibility of deponent properly preparing the case of his client for trial in the limited time at his disposal, and deponent respectfully asks that the case be set down for trial for some time in the month of September, at which time deponent will be properly prepared for the trial.

JAMES I. CUFF.

Sworn to before me this
25th day of June, 1941.

CLAIRE SCHUTZ
Notary Public
Queens County.

STATE OF NEW YORK, }
COUNTY OF KINGS, } ss.:

I, FRANCIS J. SINNOTT, Clerk of the County of Kings, and Clerk of the County Court in and for said County (said Court being a Court of Record) DO HEREBY CERTIFY that I have compared the annexed with the original affidavit filed in my office June 26, 1941, and that the same is a true transcript thereof and of the whole of such original.

IN TESTIMONY WHEREOF, I have hereunder set my hand and affixed the seal of said County and Court, this 30th day of December, 1942.

FRANCIS J. SINNOTT, Clerk

Order Granting Motion for Special Jury.

At a Term, Part I, of the County Court of Kings County held at the Court House thereof, 129 Schermerhorn Street, Borough of Brooklyn, City of New York, on the 2nd day of July, 1941.

Present: Hon. PETER J. BRANCATO, County Judge.

THE PEOPLE OF THE STATE OF NEW YORK,

Plaintiffs,

—against—

LOUIS BUCHALTER, alias "Lepke"; EMANUEL WEISS, alias "Mendy Weiss"; HARRY STRAUSS, alias "Pittsburgh Phil"; JAMES FERACO; PHILIP COHEN, alias "Little Farvel"; LOUIS CAPONE, Defendants.

Indictment No. 23855.

The plaintiffs having applied to this court for a special jury to try the issues arising in the above entitled action and the said motion having duly come on and been heard on June 26, 1941, and the District Attorney of Kings County, by Burton B. Turkus, Assistant District Attorney, of counsel, having appeared in support thereof, and Hyman Barshay, Esq., attorney for the defendant, Louis Buchalter, alias "Lepke"; James L. Cuff, Esq., attorney for the defendant, Emanuel Weiss, alias "Mendy Weiss"; Saul Price, Esq., attorney for the defendant, Philip Cohen, alias "Little Farvel", and Leon Fischbein, Esq., attorney for the defendant, Louis Capone, appearing and consenting to the granting of the motion for a special jury but opposing the trial date, namely, July 14, 1941, and due deliberation having been had,

NOW on reading and filing the notice of motion dated June 23, 1941; the affidavit of Solomon A. Klein, duly verified June 23, 1941; a copy of the indictment herein and the pleas thereto, and on proof of due and timely service of the said notice of motion and affidavit, submitted in support of said motion, and upon all other papers and proceedings heretofore had herein, it is on motion of William O'Dwyer, District Attorney of Kings County,

ORDERED, that the said motion be, and the same hereby is, in all respects granted and that a special jury be empanelled to try the issues arising upon the above entitled action and that the trial of the above entitled action be had before such special jury, and it is further ORDERED, that the said special jury shall be drawn pursuant to the provisions of the statute in such case made and provided at the Office of the County Clerk, Department of Jurors, Room 407, Municipal Building, Borough of Brooklyn, City of New York, on July 8, 1941, at 9:30 A. M., and that the number of such special jurors to be drawn shall be 250 and they shall be required to attend a Trial Term, Part II., of the County Court of Kings County, before the Hon. Franklin Taylor, County Judge, on August 4, 1941, and upon such subsequent days as they may be directed by the court.

Enter:

PETER J. BRANCATO,
County Judge.

Granted
Jul. 2, 1941

FRANCIS J. SINNOTT
Clerk.

STATE OF NEW YORK, }
COUNTY OF KINGS, } ss.:

I, FRANCIS J. SINNOTT, Clerk of the County of Kings, and Clerk of the County Court in and for said County (said Court being a Court of Record) DO HEREBY CERTIFY that I have compared the annexed with the original Order filed in my office July 21, 1941, and that the same is a true transcript thereof and of the whole of such original.

IN TESTIMONY WHEREOF, I have hereunder set my hand and affixed the seal of said County and Court, this 30th day of December, 1942.

FRANCIS J. SINNOTT, Clerk.

Section 377 New York Code of Criminal Procedure.

"§ 377. Grounds of challenge for implied bias.

A challenge for implied bias may be taken for all or any of the following causes, and for no other:

1. Consanguinity or affinity within the ninth degree, to the person alleged to be injured by the crime charged, or on whose complaint the prosecution was instituted, or to the defendant;

2. Bearing to him the relation of guardian or ward, attorney or client, or client of the attorney or counsel for the people or defendant, master or servant, or landlord or tenant, or being a member of the family of the defendant, or of the person alleged to be injured by the offense charged, or on whose complaint the prosecution was instituted, or in his employment on wages;

3. Being a party adverse to the defendant in a civil action or having complained against, or been accused by him in a criminal prosecution;

4. Having served on the grand jury which found the indictment, or on a coroner's jury which inquired into the death of a person whose death is the subject of the indictment;

5. Having served on a trial jury, which has tried another person for the crime charged in the indictment;

6. Having been one of a jury formerly sworn to try the same indictment, and whose verdict was set aside or which was discharged without a verdict, after the cause was submitted to it;

7. Having served as a juror, in a civil action brought against the defendant, for the act charged as a crime;

8. If the crime charged be punishable with death, the entertaining of such conscientious opinions as would preclude his finding the defendant guilty; in which case he shall neither be permitted nor compelled to serve as a juror." (L. 1881, ch. 442, sec. 377 in effect Sep't. 1, 1881.)

FILE COPY

MAY 6 1943

In the Supreme Court of the United States

OCTOBER TERM, 1942

Nos. 606, 610, 619

LOUIS BUCHALTER, EMANUEL WEISS, and LOUIS CAPONE,
Petitioners,

—against—

THE PEOPLE OF THE STATE OF NEW YORK,
Respondents.

ON WRIT OF CERTIORARI TO THE COURT OF APPEALS OF THE STATE OF NEW YORK.

RESPONDENTS' BRIEF.

THOMAS CRADOCK HUGHES,
Acting District Attorney,
Kings County,
New York.

SOLOMON A. KLEIN,
HENRY J. WALSH,
EDWARD H. LEVINE,
Assistant District Attorneys,
Of Counsel.

INDEX

PAGE

Opinions Below 1

Jurisdiction 2

Questions Presented 2

Statement of the Case 3

Proceedings Prior to Trial 11

The Jury Panel 18

The Trial Jury 19

(a) The First Nine Jurors 19

(b) The Last Three Jurors 23

The Court's Conduct in the Selection of the Jury. 26

The Trial 28

(a) As to the Alleged "Suppression of Evidence" 29

(b) As to the "Alleged Show of Force" 33

(c) As to the Prosecutor's Summation and the Court's Charge to the Jury 37

(d) As to the Defense 38

Review by the Court of Appeals 39

Argument 41

Conclusion 53

APPENDIX

New York Judiciary Law, Section 749-aa 55

New York Code of Criminal Procedure, Section 377.. 57

CASES CITED

	PAGE
Adams v. United States, 317 U. S. 269	47
Arnstein v. United States, 296 Fed. 946	53
Avery v. Alabama, 308 U. S. 444	53
Barrington v. Missouri, 205 U. S. 483	48
Betts v. Brady, 316 U. S. 455	42
Brown v. Mississippi, 297 U. S. 278	42
Brown v. New Jersey, 175 U. S. 172	49
Chambers v. Florida, 309 U. S. 227	42
Frank v. Mangum, 237 U. S. 309	42
Franklin v. So. Carolina, 218 U. S. 161	51
Glasser v. United States, 315 U. S. 60	41
Goldman v. United States, 316 U. S. 129	53
Herron v. Southern Pacific R. Co., 283 U. S. 91	50
Johnson v. United States, 317 U. S. (Feb. 15, 1943)	42
Kelly v. Oregon, 273 U. S. 589	35, 51
Lisenba v. California, 314 U. S. 219	42, 53
McKane v. Durston, 153 U. S. 684	49
Mooney v. Holohan, 294 U. S. 103	42
Moore v. Dempsey, 261 U. S. 86	42, 43
Norris v. Alabama, 294 U. S. 587	42
Ownbey v. Morgan, 256 U. S. 94	53
People v. Brindell, 194 App. Div. N. Y. 776	44
People v. Cohen, 223 N. Y. 406	8
People v. Doran, 246 N. Y. 409	49
People v. Dunn, 157 N. Y. 528	49
People v. Goldstein, 285 N. Y. 376	4
People v. Hines, 168 Misc. Rep. N. Y. 453	45, 46
People v. Kimball, 5 Cal. Rep (2d) 608	35, 51
People ex rel. Lemon v. Supreme Court, 245 N. Y. 24	53
People v. Murray, 52 Mich. 291	51
People v. Nebbia, 262 N. Y. 259	43

PAGE

People v. Ohanian, 245 N. Y. 227 50
People v. Seidenshner, 210 N. Y. 341 8
People v. Strauss, 285 N. Y. 376 4
People v. Wilcox, 245 N. Y. 404 53
Ponzi v. Fessenden, 258 U. S. 254 ..... 11, 36
Powell v. Alabama, 287 U. S. 45 42

Reetz v. Michigan, 188 U. S. 505 49

Sauer v. New York, 206 U. S. 536 53
Snyder v. Massachusetts, 291 U. S. 97 ..... 43, 54
Spies v. Illinois, 123 U. S. 131 49
State v. Temple, 194 Mo. 237 ..... 35, 51
Stilson v. United States, 250 U. S. 583 49
Stroud v. United States, 215 U. S. 15 48

Thomas v. Texas, 212 U. S. 278 48
Tumey v. Ohio, 273 U. S. 510 42

United States v. Wood, 299 U. S. 123 47

STATUTES CITED

New York Code of Criminal Procedure, Section 373 ... 20
New York Code of Criminal Procedure, Section 377 ... 24
New York Judiciary Law, Section 749-aa 49

TEXTS

Wigmore on Evidence (3d ed) Section 2551-a, p. 510 .. 50

American Bar Association Reports of the Section of Judicial Administration, at Annual Meeting for July 25-27, 1938 32

IN THE

Supreme Court of the United States

OCTOBER TERM, 1942

Nos. 606, 610, 619

LOUIS BUCHALTER, EMANUEL WEISS, and LOUIS CAPONE,
Petitioners,

—against—

THE PEOPLE OF THE STATE OF NEW YORK,
Respondents.

ON WRIT OF CERTIORARI TO THE COURT OF APPEALS
OF THE STATE OF NEW YORK.

RESPONDENTS' BRIEF.

Opinions Below.

The petitioners were convicted of the crime of Murder in the First Degree in the County Court of Kings County, State of New York, after a trial which lasted eleven weeks (R. 4030). On appeal to the Court of Appeals, the highest court of the state, the judgments of conviction were affirmed by a divided court. Exhaustive majority and dissenting opinions were written which are officially reported in 289 N. Y. 181-243. Thereafter, petitioners made a motion for reargument which was denied with a Per Curiam opinion officially reported in 289 N. Y. 244.

Jurisdiction.

The jurisdiction of this Court is invoked under Section 237 (b) of the Judicial Code as amended [28 U. S. C. A. Sec. 344 (b)] upon the claim that petitioners were denied due process of law as guaranteed by the Fourteenth Amendment to the Constitution of the United States. The facts in relation to the requirements of this statute were set forth at pages 36-39 and 46-47 of our brief in opposition to the petitions for a writ of certiorari. They need not here be repeated. It suffices to note that on February 15, 1943, this Court denied certiorari, but one month later, upon an application for rehearing, the order was vacated and certiorari was granted.

Questions Presented.

Petitioners' "Specifications of Error to be Urged" (Brief, pp. 35-36) raise the following questions:

1. Whether the trial "was held in a poisoned atmosphere in which a fair and impartial jury could not be and was not obtained, and a fair trial could not be and was not had."

2. Whether the trial court "prevented the impaneling of a fair and impartial jury" and whether the Court of Appeals arbitrarily refused to review rulings on challenges for actual bias.

3. Whether "evidence relevant and material to the defense, in the possession of the prosecution, was suppressed by the State."

4. Whether the trial court's charge to the jury and comments during the trial and the prosecuting attorney's summation "combined to deprive petitioners of the right to fundamental fairness in the trial."

5. Whether the denial of Capone's motion for a trial separate from Buchalter and Weiss deprived him of due process of law.

Statement of the Case.

In July, 1935, the Governor of the State of New York appointed an Extraordinary Special and Trial Term of the Supreme Court for the purpose of inquiring into "all acts of racketeering" and "all organized crime." Mr. Thomas E. Dewey was designated to conduct the investigation as special prosecutor (R. 1370-1375, Peo.'s Exhs. 33 and 34). At that time the petitioner Buchalter, referred to by the witnesses throughout the trial as Lepke, was a leader of organized crime who for years had thwarted apprehension and punishment. In the language of his own counsel in summation to the jury, "Lepke was not just an ordinary racketeer" (R. 3589); he "was being looked for by Dewey as king of the flour racket and king of the crime racket" against whom there were "thousands of complaints in extortion totaling half a million dollars" (R. 3584-3585; 289 N. Y. at pp. 184-185).[1]

Buchalter had on his payroll professional murderers (R. 2211, 2213-2214, 2228, 2232, 2245-2246), "sluggers", strike-breakers (R. 1796-1798, 1906-1907, 1917, 1921, 2228), and collectors of extortion moneys (R. 1990-1992). In this group was his chief aide, the petitioner Weiss (R. 2213, 2215-2216, 2365-2366) who, together with Harry Strauss, a member of an underworld association known as "The Combination," of which petitioner Capone was one of the leaders (R. 2425-2427, 2565-2566), fired the shots that killed the deceased in the case at bar (R. 740-741, 4042-4043; 289 N. Y. at pp. 194-195).[2]

---

1. The jury was apprised of these facts by Buchalter's counsel, not by the prosecuting attorney, in an attempt to induce the jury to believe that Buchalter, having committed only "a possible misdemeanor" against Joseph Rosen and having many more serious charges to worry about, would have no motive to order Rosen's death (R. 4031-4032; 289 N. Y. at p. 184).

2. Strauss was not on trial, having been previously convicted and executed for the commission of a separate murder (R. 3041; 289 N. Y. at p. 193).

Another member of the organization was the people's witness Tannenbaum who up to the time of his arrest was Buchalter's employee for nine years (R. 2232; 289 N. Y. at p. 193). He took orders from Buchalter and Weiss and from "Gurrah" Shapiro (R. 2215-2216, 2365-2366; 289 N. Y. at p. 193). Shapiro was Buchalter's partner (R. 1329). In the course of his employment Tannenbaum's salary increased from thirty-five to one hundred and twenty-five dollars per week (R. 2214). In addition to being a slugger and strike-breaker in the clothing district (R. 2211, 2228), he participated in six murders and helped to "dump the body of a dead man" for "disposition" and "concealment" (R. 2228, 2245-2246).

The witnesses Magoon and Bernstein were Capone's employees (R. 2425-2427; 289 N. Y. at pp. 193, 194). Magoon's salary started at forty dollars a week and later rose to seventy-five (R. 2567). He always obeyed "orders and instructions" from his superiors (R. 2427-2428). He participated as the "wheel-man" in two murders, delivered the car to be used in still another murder, and helped to dispose of an empty gasoline can, the contents of which had been used to burn the body of the victim in a murder committed by Strauss and others (R. 2470-2471; 289 N. Y. at p. 193; see also People v. Goldstein and Strauss, 285 N. Y. 376).

As for Bernstein, he performed many "jobs" for Capone (R. 695) and committed crimes whenever he got "orders from the mob" (R. 768, 770, 776, 777). He helped bury a dead body (R. 778-779), and in the instant case drove the "get-away" car under orders and instructions of Capone and Weiss. Capone taught him the route and aided Weiss and the others to make their escape after the murder was committed (R. 714-716, 720-721, 745-748; 289 N. Y. at pp. 194-195).

The record further shows that the witness Paul Berger and one Danny Fields acted not only as Buchalter's agents in the collection of extortion money (R. 1990-1992) but also as intermediaries between Buchalter and corrupt labor union officials affiliated with the Amalgamated Clothing Workers of America (R. 1317-1320, 1800-1801; 289 N. Y. at p. 186). Buchalter and his partner Shapiro were on the union payroll for many years (R. 1299, 1800-1801, 1943). They participated in determining who should have control over certain of its Locals, who should occupy office, and how strikes should be conducted (R. 1796-1801, 1310-1316). One of the union officials who was kept in office as business agent through Buchalter's domination was the witness Max Rubin (R. 1313-1314; 289 N. Y. at pp. 185-187).

To render their control and influence over the union more profitable, Buchalter, Weiss and Shapiro acquired various interests, as undisclosed principals, in concerns engaged in the manufacture and transportation of clothing, which the union officials permitted to be conducted as non-union shops (R. 526, 1323, 1628, 1634, 1932, 1934, 2968-2969).

Competition by other non-union concerns would, of course, lessen Buchalter's profits. One of such competitors was Joseph Rosen's clothing-trucking company. It operated in competition with the Garfield Express, a non-union concern in which Buchalter became a partner. Consequently, in the course of a general stoppage of all trucks carting clothing in and out of New York City, Buchalter forced Rosen out of business, and the Garfield profited materially (R. 4033-4034; 289 N. Y. at pp. 186-187). The meeting at which Rosen was ordered to give up his business is briefly described in the opinion of Judge Conway as follows (289 N. Y. at p. 186):

> "Buchalter told Rubin he wished to see Rosen and they met at the office of one Weiner, a former business associate of Buchalter. Rubin, Danny Fields and one Gurrah were present. Rosen told Buchalter that the Pennsylvania business was the only thing he had in the N. Y. and N. J. Co., and that if that were lost that he would lose everything. Buchalter then said that he wished to see Rosen's books. In response to a telephone message, they were brought by Rosen's daughter, Sylvia, who was a witness upon the trial.[3] Buchalter and Gurrah then went over the books and told Rosen what business he could not take. Rosen said he would be ruined. Rubin told him 'not to hit his head against a stone wall.' Buchalter then promised that they would do something for him and Rosen left."

This brings us to Buchalter's efforts to thwart investigation of his criminal activities. His technique of circumventing the law was revealed by him to Mr. Edward C. Maguire who was the attorney for the Local of which Rubin was business agent. Mr. Maguire was a witness for the people (R. 1757-1775) about whose testimony petitioners' brief says nothing.

---

3. At page 3 of petitioners' brief the statement is made that:

"The entire case against petitioners depended upon the testimony of the witnesses Bernstein, Rubin, Berger, Tannenbaum and Magoon.". (Italics ours.)

And at page 32:

"The prosecutor must have known that the testimony of the widow and children of the deceased was so fantastic as to be beyond the trial court's considerable capacity for credence. Yet they were put before the jury to enhance, by the sympathy which their bereavement naturally induced, the prejudice against petitioners who were accused as the cause of their sorrow. Weeks later, their testimony was stricken from the record (R. 3525-3534), but by that time their appearance on the witness stand had had full effect on the jury." (Italics ours.)

These statements are in direct conflict with the record facts. In addition to the witnesses named by petitioners, Rosen's daughter and three other witnesses (Maguire, Aman and Bell), whose testimony will later be discussed, supplied highly material proof. The testimony of Rosen's daughter concerning the conference at which Buchalter ordered her father to give up his business appears at pages 564-584 of the record. It was not adduced for "sympathy" or "prejudice" but in corroboration of similar testimony given by the witness Rubin (R. 1329-1332). Nor was it stricken from the record. A motion to strike this testimony was expressly denied (R. 3529). The same is true as to the testimony of Rosen's son (R. 3526-3528).

In connection with investigations that were being conducted by the authorities Mr. Maguire, in Buchalter's presence, advised Rubin not to become a fugitive from justice (R. 1761). Buchalter disagreed and told Mr. Maguire that,

> "If witnesses are not available, investigations collapse" (R. 1762; 289 N. Y. at p. 189).

It was in line with this policy that Buchalter, after Mr. Dewey was appointed by the Governor of the State to investigate "all acts of racketeering" and "all organized crime," sent money to Joseph Rosen with instructions to leave the city and to stay away until he was told to return (R. 1360; 289 N. Y. at pp. 187-188). Later, when Buchalter learned that Rosen threatened to go to Mr. Dewey, he said to Rubin:

> "Well he is not going down to Dewey or any other place. He and nobody else are going down any place or do any more talking or any talking at all" (R. 1365; 289 N. Y. at p. 188).

On the same day Buchalter gave the necessary instructions to his chief aide Weiss and to his employee Berger (R. 1804-1807). Within forty-eight hours Rosen's body was found riddled with seventeen bullet holes (R. 343).

As we have already noted Buchalter's orders were carried out by Weiss, Capone, Berger, Bernstein and others. Weiss together with Strauss fired the shots; Capone aided in planning the murder and in the escape. On the day following Rosen's death Weiss rendered his report to Buchalter who expressed his satisfaction with the way the job was done (R. 2222-2224). In short, as Chief Judge Lehman said:

> "Joseph Rosen was killed on September 13, 1936, in circumstances which leave little room for doubt that he was shot by a gang of criminals to promote the ne> farious purposes of the gang. * * * The accusing witnesses and the defendants were, as I have said, members of a gang or, at least, had close relations with leaders of a gang engaged in criminal practices nefarious even beyond the imagination of any fiction writer unless he had the genius of a Balzac" (289 N. Y. at pp. 222, 228).[4]

The foregoing facts do not yet complete the background of this case. It is necessary to note what happened to witnesses other than Rosen. Danny Fields, who it will be recalled was present with Rubin at the meeting where Buchalter ordered Rosen to give up his business, fled from the Dewey investigation on Buchalter's instructions (R. 1942, 1956, 1978). Fields is no longer alive (R. 1319). Rubin, too, was sent away by Buchalter to hide out until the investigations in Manhattan and Brooklyn were over. Buchalter sent him to Salt Lake City, New Orleans and to various other cities throughout the country (R. 1383-1419, 1814-1821; 289 N. Y. at pp. 189-190).

But that was not all. After successfully keeping Rubin away for about a year, Buchalter was faced with Rubin's

---

4. Petitioners stress the depraved character of some of the people's witnesses, a fact which was quite apparent to the jury and of which they were frequently reminded. The crux of the matter is that "in fixing the blame for such a crime as we are here considering the state is not likely to discover witnesses of high character" (People v. Cohen, 223 N. Y. 406, 422). These witnesses were petitioners' employees. "In the very nature of things horrible events such as the one narrated in this record are not witnessed, except it be by mere chance, by people of savory history and clean, moral lives. This record shows that an awful crime was committed in defiance of law for some specific purpose and pursuant to a deliberate plan. The crime was neither an accident nor the result of heated passion. To determine who were the persons guilty of the crime there was no choice of witnesses. It was necessary to take the testimony of such persons as saw the occurrence and of those who had knowledge of facts leading up to the homicide" (People v. Seidenshner, 210 N. Y. 341, 358).

refusal to continue to remain in hiding outside the State of New York. Rubin, however, was "a key witness in the trial of the instant case" (289 N. Y. at p. 216). As a warning to Rubin, Buchalter asked him how old he was, and, on being told, said, "It was a ripe age" (R. 1424, 4038). Thereafter Weiss told Berger that "We got some information that Max Rubin is squealing and he has got to be hit" (R. 1838, 4039, 4064). Capone told Magoon, "Rubin is hurting Lep (meaning Buchalter), and we got to hit him in the head and get rid of him" (R. 2453-2454). In the words of the majority opinion of Judge Conway:

> "Defendant Buchalter's efforts to keep the witness Rubin out of town, as indicated in Rubin's testimony, indicate that Buchalter as well as Weiss and Capone realized the key position and importance of Rubin in case of the trial of any charge growing out of the Rosen murder, or any charge which might lead the District Attorney to the uncovering of those responsible for the Rosen murder. * * * From their standpoint it was necessary to remove Rubin and so prevent him from testifying against them. This was in line with Buchalter's statement to Mr. Maguire that 'If witnesses are not available, investigations collapse'" (289 N. Y. at pp. 216-217).

Accordingly, a few days after Rubin testified before the grand jury he was shot through the head, the bullet entering the back of his neck and emerging at the bridge of the nose in close proximity to the right eye (R. 2371-2375). The shooting was planned and directed by Weiss (R. 1838-1845, 1854, 1859-1860). Fortunately, however, Rubin survived.

About one month after Rubin was released from the hospital he was questioned by an assistant district attorney of Kings County concerning the Rosen murder. Due to overpowering fear engendered by the almost successful attempt to kill him. Rubin denied that he knew anything about the case (R. 2408, 2419-2420).[5]

That Rubin's fear was fully justified is further evident from the fact that when Weiss learned Rubin came out of the hospital alive, he resolved to "catch up with him" (R. 1855) and enlisted the aid of Capone and Capone's "Combination" in a second attempt to kill him (R. 2434-2436, 2446-2447, 2453-2454; 289 N. Y. at p. 194). But Rubin was under police protection and their plan had to be abandoned (R. 1868, 2458-2459; 289 N. Y. at p. 192).

In June, 1937, Buchalter told Berger that "things were getting too hot" and that he (Buchalter) would have to go away (R. 1831; 289 N. Y. at p. 192). The following month he disappeared (R. 2271). Rewards were then posted by the Federal and State Governments for information leading to his arrest (R. 46, 47, 48). It was not, however, until August, 1939, that Buchalter decided to surrender to the Federal Bureau of Investigation (R. 1889), as a result of which he was convicted in the United States District Court for the Southern District of New York and was sentenced to a term of imprisonment in the Federal Penitentiary at Leavenworth, Kansas (R. 126).[6]

---

5. At page 6 of petitioners' brief we are told: "It was shown, however, that in December, 1937, when Rubin would have implicated Buchalter if he could (R. 2400-01), as he had already implicated him in other crimes, he had made a statement to Mr. McCarthy * * * in which Rubin completely exculpated Buchalter of any complicity in the Rosen murder." The reason for Rubin's prior statement should, however, be added. As he explained: "I had just been shot in the head. I went to the Grand Jury, where anybody (sic) knew where I was. I was shot in the head" (R. 2408), and gave "untruthful answers to Mr. McCarthy due to fear of Lepke" (R. 2420). In view of this fact coupled with Rubin's knowledge of the reason for the murder of Rosen, we can readily understand why he then "exculpated Buchalter of any complicity in the Rosen murder".

6. The Federal trial, just as the trial at bar, was preceded and accompanied by wide newspaper publicity. See, e. g., R. 45-51, containing the New York Times headlines as collated in its Index under Buchalter, an exhibit filed by counsel for Capone.

In March, 1940, Buchalter's employee Tannenbaum was arrested (R. 2315) and by court order was placed in police custody as a material witness (R. 2231, 2346). Weiss then informed Berger that "It looks like Allie (Tannenbaum) is talking and I will have to duck" (R. 1872, 1875). Shortly thereafter Weiss fled from the State. He was apprehended a year later by agents of the United States Bureau of Narcotics in Kansas City, Missouri, where he was hiding under an assumed name and other disguise (R. 2607-2698).

The Attorney General of the United States then consented to the production of Buchalter and Weiss for the purpose of standing trial in Kings County upon condition that they "should at all times remain in the custody of the United States Marshal of the Eastern District of New York until the conclusion of the trial" (R. 126-127).[7]

Proceedings Prior to Trial.

On May 9, 1941, Buchalter was brought to the County Court of Kings County to be arraigned on the indictment. He requested permission to confer with members of his family, who were in the courtroom, "about getting counsel". Permission was granted. He then requested an adjournment for one week "within which to get counsel to appear for him on the arraignment". This was consented to, and the matter was adjourned (V. 1-4).[8]

On the adjourned date he appeared by counsel who stated that "the defendant stands mute", and, upon the ground that there was a serious question as to the court's jurisdiction to be considered, requested another adjournment for two weeks. Again, the request was granted on consent (V. 4-8).

---

7. This was in accord with this Court's decision in Ponzi v. Fessenden, 258 U. S. 254.

8. The designation "V" is used to distinguish pages in Volumes VI through VIII from pages in preceding volumes which are designated "R".

At the third appearance Buchalter refused to plead to the indictment, his counsel stating "We seriously doubt that this Court has any jurisdiction to try this defendent" (V. 8). This time the prosecuting attorney objected to any further delay. A plea of not guilty was then entered by the court and the case was set for trial for July 14th, six weeks thence (V. 11-13). Whereupon, counsel objected that six weeks would not give them "adequate opportunity to prepare for the defense" (V. 14).

Buchalter's next move was to sue out a writ of habeas corpus in the United States District Court seeking to be returned to Leavenworth. He contended that the Attorney General had no right to order his transfer to Kings County. The writ was dismissed, an opinion being written by District Judge Conger (R. 127). Thereupon, he applied to the Circuit Court for leave to appeal and for a stay of the trial. The application was denied by Judge Learned Hand (V. 25-26).

Soon thereafter the district attorney made a motion for an order directing the drawing of a panel of special jurors to attend at the trial on July 14th, the date originally fixed by the court (R. 127). This motion was made pursuant to the provisions of Section 749-aa of the New York Judiciary Law which permits the defendant or the district attorney to apply for such a jury where the subject matter of the indictment "has been widely commented upon" (R. 127, 173; Appendix, infra). Subdivision 2 of that statute provides, in part, as follows:

> "No person shall be selected as such special juror * * * who doubts his ability to lay aside an opinion or impression formed from newspaper reading or otherwise, or to render an impartial verdict upon the evidence, uninfluenced by any such opinion or impression * * *." (Appendix, infra; quoted by Court of Appeals 289 N. Y. at p. 221.)

As stated by Judge Conway, "Each of the defendants consented to be tried before such special jury" (289 N. Y. at pp. 220-221; see also R. 127-128, 165). Counsel for Buchalter submitted an affidavit in which he said:

> "6. No objection is made on behalf of my client to that aspect of the motion which seeks an order for the trial of this case before a special jury."

Counsel for Weiss likewise consented. In his affidavit he said:

> "That deponent does not oppose the application for the trial of the indictment before a special jury, * * *."

Accordingly, the court order after reciting that counsel for each defendant

> "appeared and consented to the granting of the motion for a special jury."

directed that a panel of two hundred and fifty talesmen be drawn, and, since counsel claimed that they needed more time to prepare for trial, the order postponed the trial date to August 4th (R. 127-128).[9]

---

9. Petitioners failed to cause their affidavits and the court order to be printed in the record. Instead, this Court was told in Buchalter's petition for certiorari that,

> "Petitioner's counsel had not consented. The papers on that motion are a part of the record; from them it clearly appears that the court at nisi prius in granting the motion for a special jury misstated the fact in recording that there was consent."

In view of that statement we obtained permission from the Clerk of this Court, by letter dated Dec. 24, 1942, to file certified copies of the motion papers and court order and to print them as an Appendix to our brief in opposition to certiorari. Petitioners, therefore, do not now repeat their former assertion, but characterize their unequivocal consent as "a failure to object" (Brief, p. 52).

After notice to petitioners, the provisions of said order were complied with, a Justice of the Supreme Court presiding at the selection of the panel (R. 128). But despite their consent to proceed to trial before a special jury drawn from the citizens of Kings County, pursuant to which two hundred and fifty talesmen were already drawn and notified to appear in court (R. 128, 165), petitioners decided to apply for a change of venue to a place "outside the City of New York" (R. 76-77).

Buchalter urged that he could not receive a fair trial in the City of New York because for "the past two years" he received widespread notoriety by newspaper, radio, and magazine, "as society's most dangerous enemy", as the "master mind" of all criminals and as "a vicious racketeer" (R. 76-109, 121). After quoting many newspaper clippings his counsel admitted under oath that the district attorney was not responsible for the notoriety, stating,

> "No doubt many of the quotations attributed to the District Attorney of Kings County and his various aides as set forth in the exhibits annexed to this affidavit, were improper in the sense that they were made without authorization" (R. 108).[10]

Indeed, the publicity given to Buchalter's long record of crime dated back to at least the year 1935 and was nation-wide in scope (R. 36, 42, 45-54, 129-130, 165-166; V. 28).

Weiss and Capone joined in the motion for a change of venue, their argument being that because of the unfavorable notoriety received by Buchalter, they, as co-defendants,

---

10. In Buchalter's petition for certiorari (p. 48) the accusation was made that "it is beyond cavil that he (the prosecuting attorney) was responsible for this propaganda". The brief now filed modifies the accusation. Although the expressions "propaganda" and "newspaper campaign in advance of arraignment" are still retained (p. 10), petitioners reluctantly concede that the "publicity may not have been the fault of the State" (p. 42).

would be indirectly affected by the alleged prejudice against him (R. 129, 4123-4126). Capone has maintained this position despite the subsequent admission by his counsel, in a sworn affidavit seeking a separate trial, that,

> "The defendant Capone has been practically unheard of in the newspapers and has received no publicity which would cause members of a jury to consider him a sinister or notorious character" (R. 56).

Significantly, not a single affidavit of a resident of the community was submitted to show that there existed any prejudice which would prevent or hinder a fair and impartial trial. The applications were based upon the speculation and surmise of counsel and the report of a hired investigator whose affidavit was patently worthless (see Justice Daly's opinion, R. 166). The affidavit of Buchalter's brother, a sentence of which is quoted in a footnote at page 34 of petitioners' brief, was even worse than the one submitted by the hired investigator. In that affidavit the brother asserted that an assistant district attorney assigned to try the case, whose name he did not disclose, told him: "I don't need any evidence or witnesses to try this case, all I need is the indictment and a summation" and that "current prejudice existing in this locality against the defendant, Louis Buchalter, is so strong that the mere making of any charge against him would result in his conviction" (R. 111). It was evident from the very wording of the quoted statements that they were concocted to meet the occasion. The two assistant district attorneys assigned to try this case denied under oath that they ever said, in words or substance, any such thing (R. 123-124, 131).

At all events, after a full hearing was had in the Supreme Court the motions were denied with an opinion that they were devoid of merit (R. 165-168). Later, a second application, based solely upon additional newspaper clippings, was made by Buchalter before a different Justice of the Supreme Court who likewise denied it (R. 155-163, 175-176).[11]

Finally, on August 4th the case was called for trial. The district attorney stated he was "ready" (V. 15). Counsel for Weiss said, "defendant Weiss is ready" (V. 15). Counsel for Buchalter, however, said,

> "This defendant refuses to answer ready, because he has not been afforded a reasonable opportunity to properly prepare his defense. He, by virtue of that, maintains that he cannot receive a fair trial" (V. 16).

In support of this position counsel stated that they "deemed it necessary" to interview Buchalter's associate, Jacob Shapiro, who was then a Federal prisoner and who "could and would give information vital and essential to the defendant's defense" (V. 16); that to enable them to interview Shapiro they sued out a writ of habeas corpus, but that the Federal Director of Prisons caused Shapiro's transfer to Springfield, Missouri, "as a device to avoid an order on the writ" and "bluntly" refused to grant permission for an interview (V. 17-18). It was further contended that although the Attorney General of the United States turned Buchalter over to the state authorities for trial, "he has deprived him of the opportunity to prepare and present his defense" (V. 23).

Thereupon, the trial court and the prosecuting attorney agreed to arrange with the Attorney General of the United

---

11. The statement in Buchalter's petition for certiorari (p. 37) that "the Court of Appeals refused to review the question of whether * * * a change of venue should have been granted" is in direct conflict with the written opinions of that court. The question was expressly reviewed on the original appeal (280 N. Y. at pp. 220-221) and on the motion for reargument (280 N. Y. at p. 245), and on each occasion it was held that the question had been correctly determined.

States to have Shapiro transferred to a Federal prison in New York City where he could be interviewed (V. 33-35).[12]

After the court marked the case ready for trial, it developed that 26 jurors failed to appear and that 129 jurors offered either legal excuses or asked to be relieved from jury duty because of summer vacation commitments (V. 30-31). Under these circumstances the prosecuting attorney suggested that the case be adjourned until September (V. 33) which was the month originally requested by defense counsel (V. 13). When the court indicated that it would follow that suggestion, counsel for Buchalter, who, only a few hours before, refused to answer ready upon the grounds that they had "not been afforded a reasonable opportunity to properly prepare" for trial (V. 16), suddenly announced that they were fully prepared and opposed the adjournment in these words:

> "We are as ready as we will ever be and if we can get permission to interview Jacob Shapiro, we will not delay the trial one minute" (V. 35-36).

The court in deciding to postpone the trial until September 15th said:

> "This jury situation is unprecedented. It is practically a run-out. The reason for it may be reluctance to give protracted service during the hottest month of the year. There is merit to that position. To arbitrarily combat it would smack of coercion and would tend to undermine that quality of jury service which is essential for a fair trial of this case" (V. 44).

---

12. The record does not disclose the result of whatever steps were taken. But it is significant that Shapiro was not called as a witness and that no claim has ever been made, not even now, that the defense was deprived by either the Federal or State authorities of an opportunity to interview or call Shapiro as a witness.

The Jury Panel.

Petitioners tell us that newspaper publicity "resulted in a panel so infected with the virus of prejudice, that it was impossible to obtain a fair and impartial trial" and that they were compelled to select a jury "from a panel mentally conditioned to convict" (Brief, pp. 14, 42).

We shall soon demonstrate that a fair and impartial jury was in fact selected. Let us first consider an important fact concerning the panel.

When the case was marked ready for trial on August 4th and before it was postponed to September 15th, Judge Talley, one of the counsel for Weiss, called the court's attention to some newspaper items about the case (V. 40). In response, the court said:

> "The Court: There is just a little matter referred to by Judge Talley and that is in relation to this present panel being influenced by these newspapers. I take it that you mean that on account of being on the panel their attention, their interest, will be particularly directed?
>
> Mr. Talley: It undoubtedly has been directed.
>
> The Court: I submit this for consideration. In the event of the case being continued until after the extremely hot weather and until bearable trial weather, regardless of when it is, that if all counsel for the defense agree, then the Court would be agreeable to drawing of additional talesmen and upon those talesmen coming here the Court will then, the counsel for all defendants agreeing, discharge the present talesmen, but those talesmen will not have to be drawn right away and their attention would not therefore be particularly directed, their interest would not be particularly directed, by being drawn as talesmen, to the stories now being carried in the New York American" (V. 41).

Later, when the court postponed the trial it again said:

> "Should a new panel be desired, counsel for all the defendants should agree on that" (V. 45).

At no time, however, did counsel for petitioners accept the court's offer to discharge the panel. If, as they now complain, the panel was "so infected with the virus of prejudice that it was impossible to obtain a fair trial", why did not counsel take the opportunity given to them by the court to obtain a new panel? The obvious answer is that counsel knew they could, and in fact did, select from the panel a fair and impartial jury.

Let us see.

The Trial Jury.

Throughout their brief petitioners repeatedly assert that they were not tried by a fair and impartial jury (pp. 20, 36-37, 41, 43, 46, 51, 77). What are the facts?

(a) The First Nine Jurors.

The record shows that the first nine jurors who participated in the verdict were pronounced "satisfactory to the defendants":

1.	Charles E. Stevens,	V.	356–391
2.	Chester T. Prentice,	"	752–776
3.	Charles A. Murphy,	"	983–1000
4.	David N. Day,	"	1112–1119, 1133
5.	Henry T. Gill,	"	1207–1221
6.	James B. Cummings,	"	1232–1238, 1288
7.	George B. Hall,	"	1310–1315, 1377
8.	Harold F. Cross,	"	1477–1487
9.	James L. Edghill,	"	1859–1891

These jurors were pronounced "satisfactory" by able and experienced counsel when their peremptory challenges had not yet been exhausted. Indeed, before the next talesman was questioned the defense still had one more peremptory challenge (V. 1928-1929). None of the nine jurors above listed was challenged for bias, actual or implied. And it is inconceivable that if there were the slightest doubt about the fairness of any one of these jurors that counsel would have deliberately refrained from excusing him peremptorily.

This brings us to a consideration of the facts in relation to petitioners' argument concerning the foreman of the jury, Charles E. Stevens. At pages 17-18 of their brief petitioners quote a clipped excerpt from the voir dire examination of Mr. Stevens, namely, that after being served with a notice to appear as a juror his office associates made some prejudicial remark about one of the defendants. Concerning this incident he told defense counsel that "if I had accepted what they were saying as facts and absorbed them as such, I could have possibly been prejudiced, * * * but if I am called upon to serve, it seems to me such a terrific responsibility that I can't understand why people who know nothing about it can attempt to influence a man who might have to make such a grave decision".

These excerpts are described by petitioners as "most significant" and at page 42 of their brief the following statement is made:

> "It has been seen that Mr. Stevens, who was sworn and acted as a juror, was faced with the necessity of staving off prejudicial influences. There can be no assurance that, despite his commendable efforts, he was not subconsciously affected, particularly since he still faced the prospect of justifying himself to his co-workers, should he vote for a verdict of acquittal."

We are constrained to say that the foregoing distorts the record to an amazing degree. The entire examination of Mr. Stevens appears in Volume VI at pages 356-391. At the time he was questioned petitioners had used only three of their thirty peremptory challenges given to them by law (V. 108, 181, 356; N. Y. Code of Crim. Proc. § 373). Mr.

Stevens was not challenged for cause, and a reading of his examination shows that no such challenge could fairly be interposed. If, as is now claimed, Mr. Stevens "was faced with the necessity of staving off prejudicial influences" and "the prospect of justifying himself to his co-workers should he vote for a verdict of acquittal", why did not counsel use one of their twenty-seven peremptorily challenges, instead of announcing "satisfactory to the defendants" (V. 391)? The conclusive answer appears in the record. We quote from the examination of Mr. Stevens conducted by Buchalter's counsel:

> "Q. Were you in any wise influenced by the making of that statement or those statements by your associate or associates? A. No, I resented their making them.
>
> Q. You resented their making them? A. Yes.
>
> Q. Did you express your resentment? A. Well, I said that I felt that the men were entitled to trial and that until they were judged guilty I did not see how anybody could make loose, irresponsible statements, such as I considered theirs to be.
>
> Q. You said then that you thought that that was an unjust thing for anybody to say? A. In substance, yes.
>
> Q. That was your feeling about it? A. Yes.
>
> Q. You particularly resented those statements being made to you in view of the fact that your associates already knew that you had been summoned here as a prospective or possible juror in the trial of this case? A. That is right.
>
> Q. Is that right? A. Yes.
>
> Q. And, having that in mind, you were quick to express your resentment of these prejudicial remarks; is that correct? A. Yes.
>
> * * * * *
>
> Q. Because you felt that that was an un-American statement to make, did you not? A. Yes.
>
> Q. And you are in favor of the policies of the law that a fair trial must be accorded all men; is that correct? A. That is correct.

Q. And you felt that that kind of talk was unjust and unfair and illegal; is that correct? A. That is correct.

Q. Because it might possibly prejudice a defendant and deprive him of a fair hearing upon a trial; is that correct? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And that is your state of mind now, as you sit here? A. It is.

Q. And were you sworn as a juror you could approach the issues in this case without any prejudice against any defendant; is that correct? A. I feel sure I could.

* * * * *

Q. Reverting for a minute to those conversations that you had with your associates at the United States Envelope Company, were the participants in that conversation or those conversations your superiors? A. No, they were my equals. In other words, in the same capacity as I am.

Q. They were sales representatives? A. That is right, other types of the company.

Q. You would not feel beholden to anybody for the propriety of your verdict in a case of this kind, would you? A. I did not hear the question.

Q. I say you would not be beholden to anybody for the propriety of your verdict in a case of this kind, would you? A. No, I would not.

Q. In other words, in a matter of this kind you swear to do your honest duty, assuming that you are chosen as a juror; is that correct? A. That is right.

* * * * *

Q. Would you feel reluctant to do your sworn duty by reason of the fact that somebody having nothing to do with the administration of justice, somebody who by accident was an associate of yours in a commercial firm, in your place of employment, somebody had perhaps intimated that he would not have agreed with that—would that influence you at all? A. It would have no bearing on the matter.

Q. Assuming that you did bring in a verdict of Not Guilty, you would not be reluctant to meet with your associates again, would you? A. No reason why I should be.

Q. You would not feel reluctant to bring in such a verdict because it might be in the back of your mind that, having done it, brought in a verdict of Not Guilty, it involved a certain mental courage on your part to meet with these co-employees who possibly harbor a different view? A. It would have no bearing on the matter at all" (V. 370-374).

It is no wonder, therefore, that at the end of the examination defense counsel announced that Mr. Stevens was "Satisfactory to the defendants" (V. 391).

(b) The Last Three Jurors.

Petitioners say that the last three jurors "were selected after petitioners had exhausted all of their peremptory challenges" (Brief, pp. 24, 26). That is not correct. We proceed to prove it.

After the ninth juror was accepted two prospective jurors (Mr. Andrews and Mr. Rorke) were called for questioning. The examination of Mr. Andrews failed to disclose the slightest basis for interposing a challenge for cause (V. 1900-1904, 1908-1918). He stated that he had not formed any impression about the case or the defendants (V. 1909-1910) and that he knew of no reason which would prevent him from presiding as a fair and impartial juror (V. 1918). Under these circumstances counsel did not challenge for cause but merely stated that they had no further questions to ask (V. 1930).

But before Mr. Andrews was challenged peremptorily, the questioning to determine the fitness of Mr. Rorke was commenced. It developed during his examination that he was the nephew of a police inspector "in charge of traffic" (V. 1918). He stated that he had no impression adverse to any defendant (V. 1922), that if accepted as a juror he would "do justice" by his verdict (V. 1906) and that there was nothing to prevent him from rendering "a just verdict" under his oath (V. 1907).

Defense counsel, however, challenged him for "implied bias" (V. 1922). Mr. Rorke was not disqualified under any of the grounds specified by statute as constituting implied bias.[13] Counsel, therefore, appealed "to the discretion of the court" (V. 1925).

When the challenge was overruled a discussion was had, not within the hearing of the jurors (V. 1928-1930). In this discussion counsel urged that if their challenge for implied bias was not sustained, they would be compelled to use their last peremptory challenge, which would leave them without the power of peremptorily challenging the other juror (V. 1928-1929). The court, however, adhered to its original decision. Whereupon Mr. Rorke was again questioned. In this second examinaton Mr. Rorke stated that he was not prejudiced, that he would accord the defendants the presumption of innocence, that if chosen as a juror they could rely upon him "for the preservation of every right that the law gives", and that if there should be a reasonable doubt of guilt in his mind he would give them the benefit of such doubt (V. 1932, 1934).

Thereafter, Mr. Andrews, whose fairness was at no time questioned, was peremptorily challenged by the defense (V. 1935). It is thus evident that petitioners, with full and unrestricted power to exclude Mr. Rorke, chose to have him as a juror. That there was no basis to challenge him for cause we have already demonstrated.

We now come to Mr. Link, who was the eleventh juror. His examination appears in Volume VIII at pages 1959-1981. A reading thereof shows that there is not a single word to suggest bias or prejudice. The innuendo conveyed at page 25 of petitioners' brief by the statement that Mr. Link "had been called into consultation with reference to a radio program called 'Mr. District Attorney'" is unwarranted. The fact is that he was a radio announcer on a fiction program called "Mr. District Attorney" (V. 1960, 1977). Typical of this man's qualifications to serve as a juror are his answers to the concluding questions put to him by counsel for Buchalter. We quote from the record:

13. Under the N. Y. Code of Criminal Procedure, § 377 a juror can be challenged for implied bias for eight specific reasons, "and for no other" (Appendix, infra).

> "Q. Can Mr. Buchalter as an individual depend on you and entrust to you his keeping and preservation?
> A. Yes, sir.
> Q. Without any sympathy or bias or prejudice?
> A. Yes, sir.
> Q. I take it you will consider your oath on that?
> A. Yes, sir" (V. 1971).

And on questioning by counsel for Weiss, he said:

> "Q. Do you realize that if you are selected as a juror, under your oath you must determine and find according to the way you regard the facts?
> A. That is right.
> Q. Without fear or favor or prejudice or bias?
> A. Yes, sir.
> Q. And can you do that?
> A. Yes, sir" (V. 1972-1973).

None of the counsel challenged him for bias, actual or implied. They merely said, "We rest on the record" (V. 1981).

As to the twelfth juror, John E. Coleman, the record shows that he was eminently qualified to serve (V. 1983-1995). Two illustrations will suffice. Upon being questioned by counsel for Buchalter the juror said:

> "Q. While you were sitting here did anything occur in the courtroom to cause favor or prejudice to either side?
> A. No, sir.

Q. Nothing at all?

A. No, sir.

Q. I take it you realize as well as anyone else the extreme importance of getting an impartial jury?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. So that now there is no prejudice in your mind, or anything at all which would preclude you from giving Mr. Buchalter a fair trial?

A. Nothing (V. 1990).

* * * * *

Q. The law says that every defendant is entitled to a fair trial at your hands. Will you give it to Mr. Buchalter?

A. Yes, sir" (V. 1993).

And under questioning by counsel for Capone:

"Q. Have you had any discussion at all about this case?

A. No, sir.

Q. Have you formed any impression of any character in the courtroom?

A. No, sir.

Q. Your mind is clear now as to the fact that you can sit here as a fair and impartial juryman and take the evidence from the witnesses?

A. Yes, sir" (V. 1993).

Here again counsel said, "we rest on the record" (V. 1995), but made no challenge.

It is thus clear that there is no basis whatever for the assertion that petitioners were not tried by a fair and impartial jury.

The Court's Conduct in the Selection of the Jury.

At page 20 of petitioners' brief the statement is made that "This jury was selected only after repeated efforts of the trial judge to induce talesmen to abjure prejudice whether or not actually entertained". And at page 43 of their brief they say: "A jury was selected only after the court had browbeaten talesmen, thereby leading others in the panel to deny prejudice to avoid criticism".

This startling accusation is devoid of any sound support and is based solely upon fanciful imagination. The record shows that immediately before the questioning of jurors began the court said:

> "The Court will allow abundant latitude to all counsel to make searching examination of every member of the panel who is drawn, for the purpose of determining whether such member has any prejudice that will prevent a fair and impartial trial of these defendants" (V. 49).

That this was done is overwhelmingly proved by the record. Approximately four weeks were consumed in questioning of jurors. The transcript is over two thousand pages (Vols. VI to VIII). No greater latitude could have been given defense counsel than was allowed in this case. Finally, as conclusive proof of the complete lack of substance in petitioners' accusation, we find that before administering the oath the court took the following precaution to avoid any possibility of any juror having become biased or prejudiced after he was selected:

> "The Court: Before selecting the alternates, of course, the oath will have to be administered to the jury. This question is asked of all twelve members of the jury: Since you were tentatively accepted by both sides at the conclusion of your examination, you have been repeatedly cautioned by the Court not to discuss the case, not to let anybody talk to you about it, not to read the newspapers or otherwise read about it, not to listen to the radio about it. I am going to ask each one of you gentlemen individually if you have strictly followed those instructions.
>
> (Mr. Stevens, Mr. Prentice, Mr. Murphy, Mr. Day, Mr. Gill, Mr. Cummings, Mr. Hall, Mr. Cross, Mr.

Butt, Mr. Edghill, and Mr. Rorke each answered individually, "I have.")

The Court: Mr. Link, I do not have to ask you; you were only accepted this morning" (V. 1981-1982).

Thereafter the court, pursuant to counsels' suggestion, asked the following question:

"The Court: The question is now: Has anything happened to change your viewpoint in regard to the case in the meantime, to change your attitude as impartial jurors? If so, raise your hand.

(Juror No. 9, Mr. Butt, raises his hand.)

The Court: This will have to be at the bench, and not in the hearing of the jury" (V. 1982).

Mr. Butt was then invited by the court to state what had happened. He replied that "Based upon the various questions that have been asked in court" he developed a "conviction towards prejudice in this case" which he was "afraid" would prevent him from rendering a fair and impartial verdict (V. 1982). The court then excused the juror stating,

"This is in fairness to the defense. The man has a feeling in his mind which he has frankly expressed. The Court believes it to be an honest one" (V. 1983).

Thereafter, another juror was chosen in Mr. Butt's place.

The Trial.

Petitioners suggest that they were subjected to "a speedy trial" where their rights were "trampled upon" (Brief, p. 45). The fact is that the trial lasted eleven weeks (R. 1030). In these lengthy proceedings petitioners were "zealously—even hotly—defended by experienced counsel" (289 N. Y. at p. 224, per Lehman, Ch. J.). "Buchalter and Weiss were each represented by two attorneys, each of whom was permitted by the court to participate actively in the trial" (289 N. Y. at p. 183, per Conway, J.). At every stage of the proceedings the requirement of due process of law as guaranteed by the Federal Constitution was fully observed. Indeed, with the single exception of Capone's obviously flimsy assertion that under the Constitution of the United States he was entitled to a separate trial (R. 36-37), the able counsel for petitioners never complained, either prior to or during the trial, of any deprivation of a right, privilege or immunity under the Federal Constitution.

They now come to this Court and complain about several rulings during the trial which they claim deprived them of due process of law. We proceed to state the facts as to each of those complaints.

(a) As to the Alleged "Suppression of Evidence".

Immediately before the cross-examination of the people's witness Berger, a request was made for official records of the Police Department of the City of New York, known as "D. D. 4's". These records were reports made by police officers of the movements of various underworld characters including Buchalter (R. 1881, 2142-2143).

The court's denial of permission to inspect those reports, it is claimed, constituted a suppression of material evidence. Petitioners say (Brief, p. 57):

> "Not only were petitioners deprived of the essential right of cross-examination of the prosecution witnesses, Rubin, Tannenbaum and Berger, in respect of any disparity between the testimony of these witnesses and the reports of the police officers, itself a deprivation of due process of law, but the petitioners were deprived of a fair opportunity to present their defense affirmatively."

Now, as to the facts.

When the court ruled against the requested inspection of the reports, counsel for Buchalter said:

> "Mr. Barshay: * * * Whether or not the D. D. 4's had anything to do with this case, they are only concerning the movements of the defendant Buchalter in the years 1935, 1936 and 1937 in Manhattan and have absolutely no bearing upon this case.
>
> The Court: I know nothing about it. * * * If you wish you can have it marked for identification and then offer it in evidence, and if there is an objection the Court will rule.
>
> Mr. Barshay: May we have them marked for identification? * * *" (R. 1881-1882).

Later, in the absence of the jury, and while the witness Berger was still under cross-examination, the request for the police reports was repeated. At that time counsel for Buchalter said:

> "* * * If your Honor pleases, those are not records having to do with this case as a case but rather are they records having to do, as I understand the situation, with the work of the Police Department of the City of New York during the period from about September of 1935 to the end of 1936 in respect to the surveillance by agents of that department of one of the persons on trial" (R. 2141-2142).

The court then made the following inquiry:

> "The Court: Are they required in connection with the examination of this witness?
>
> Mr. Climenko: They may be, your Honor, * * *" (R. 2142).

Thereafter, the court asked the prosecuting attorney the following questions:

> "The Court: I am asking you this: Do they contain any Q's and A's by witnesses in this case?

Mr. Turkus: They do not.

The Court: Do they contain any depositions by witnesses in this case?

Mr. Turkus: They do not.

The Court: Are they purely police reports?

Mr. Turkus: They are police confidential reports of activities of the Police Department.

The Court: No depositions?

Mr. Turkus: No depositions.

The Court: No admissions?

Mr. Turkus: No conversations, no admissions that I could find. They are about three inches thick" (R. 2146).

When the court asked Buchalter's counsel what he desired to have done so that the court could make an intelligent ruling (R. 2146), he replied:

> "Mr. Wegman: These records of the police department show the report of these police officers as to where the defendant Buchalter was, and with whom he spoke, and who spoke to him, over the period of time as to which these witnesses have testified. It is important for the purpose of contradicting the testimony of the witness Rubin and of the witness Berger to show that the police department's own records indicate that their testimony could not have been true" (R. 2147).[14]

Later, another counsel for Buchalter said they wished to inspect the reports

> "to see whether or not there is something in those records which would dispute the truth of their (Rubin's and Berger's) allegations" (R. 2151).

---

14. In the brief filed with this Court it is said at page 55: "What these reports disclosed, petitioners have no way of knowing. Whether they were complete or not, petitioners cannot know."

Finally, the court, in denying the request said:

> "The Court: If a policeman took the stand and testified otherwise, then the question as to whether or not these records could be used to contradict the policeman, provided they were made by him, would come up and call for a ruling, but that is not present at this moment. Now as it stands, in addition to the fact that these are privileged and confidential under the law, they are hearsay" (R. 2151).

At no time did the court preclude petitioners from offering any defense they pleased. At the end of the people's case petitioners were free to call the Police Commissioner, or anyone else in authority, to reveal the names of the officers who made the reports and then to call such officers to testify on any competent matter. As we have noted the court specifically informed defense counsel that "if a policeman took the stand * * *, then the question as to whether or not these records could be used to contradict the policeman, provided they were made by him, would come up and call for a ruling" (R. 2151). But counsel failed to do so. Instead, they preferred to attempt in summation to induce the jury to draw an unfavorable inference against the prosecution because it did not call the police officers as witnesses (R. 3589-3592). And they also obtained an instruction from the court that "the jury may draw no unfavorable inference because of the defendants' failure or neglect to call any particular witness" (R. 3933).

The reason for the defense strategy is revealed by the finding of the Court of Appeals which examined the police reports. The court said:

> "This court considered the refusal of the trial court to accord the defendant access to the records of the Police Department of the City of New York. The ruling was correct on the facts presented. (See People ex rel. Lemon v. Supreme Court, 245 N. Y. 24.) The records in question were deposited with this court > at the time of the argument of the appeal and were examined. The so-called surveillance amounted to very little. It was of the entrance and lobby of the office building and not of the floor upon which defendant Buchalter had his office. The reports established that the defendant could and did elude the police at will" (289 N. Y. 244 at p. 245; Italics supplied).[15]

(b) As to the alleged "show of force".

1. Under a heading called "The Physical Trappings of the Trial" petitioners complain that they "were brought into the courtroom manacled to police officers" and that "the process of unshackling took place in the presence of the jury and after the jurors had taken their places in the jury box" (Brief, pp. 28, 46). This, it is contended, was "manufactured" by the State and "placed before the jury" for the purpose of conveying the belief that petitioners were "desperate criminals".

That petitioners were desperate criminals was conclusively established by the evidence and did not need any further support. As stated by Chief Judge Lehman, the evidence showed that petitioners "were members of a gang engaged in criminal practices nefarious even beyond the imagination of any fiction writer" (289 N. Y. at p. 228). Indeed, the evidence was so strong that even "counsel for the defense did not attempt to picture the defendants as honest, law abiding citizens" (Idem.). We quote from the summation of Buchalter's counsel:

> "I said I did not represent an angel, I meant just this: I condemn the defendant Buchalter's past life with as great vehemence as I possess. I am not in

15. In this connection it is significant that in summation to the jury Buchalter's counsel said: "What right have we to assume that the police assigned to do their duty were not watching at least the front entrance of number 200 Fifth Avenue, the side entrance or the one in the rear." (R. 3592) sympathy with his activities in the past—I condemn the vicious circle which contrived those people to domineer unions—the racketeers Weinstein and Katz. I condemn them with all the strength I have. It is they who prey upon innocent workmen in this city. I condemn the manufacturers and employers who did not complain to the authorities so that they could put an end to this vicious practice of preying upon labor. But they did not complain—not because they were afraid because some of them hoped, by yielding to the racketeers of the industry, that they would gain an economic or financial advantage over their competitors. I condemn every act of the defendant Buchalter's past life (R. 3546-3547).

* * * * *

So, gentlemen do you get my point—that Buchalter, who was being looked for by Dewey as king of the flour racket and king of the crime racket—he was looked for by the Government—he had so many charges hurled against him that everybody in this universe was searching for him, that he would worry about a possible misdemeanor? I say, 'Possible misdemeanor' at the hands of Rosen. * * * What was there that Buchalter had to fear at the hands of Rosen with thousands of complaints running to Dewey in extortion totaling a half a million dollars? (R. 3584-3585).

* * * * *

You know that Lepke (Buchalter) was not just an ordinary racketeer" (R. 3589).

True it is that Buchalter's counsel told these things to the jury for the purpose of showing that "the position of the defendant Buchalter was so important that it was incredible that there was any reason for the defendant Buchalter to order or direct Rosen's death" (289 N. Y. at p. 184). None the less, the stubborn fact remains that his disclosures far outweighed the conjectural prejudice which petitioners claim arose from the fact that they were brought to and from the courtroom in manacles.

Moreover, the precautions taken to prevent their escape were proper,[16] and would hardly have been noticed by the jury had not defense counsel directed attention to it. We quote from the record:

> "The Court: * * * Did I understand you to say that the defendants are brought in in chains?
>
> Mr. Talley: Yes.
>
> The Court: You mean they are manacled?
>
> Mr. Talley: Yes, sir, manacled with these officers that are with them.
>
> The Court: At the present time?
>
> Mr. Talley: No, the manacles are removed when they come in the courtroom, but not before; when they are seated and not before; and your Honor requires the jury to be in their seats so they can see this spectacle of how these men are brought in.
>
> The Court: Do you impugn the Court's honor? The Court does not require the jury to be in their seats in order to see 'the spectacle,' because the Court is not aware of it; and the Court has not been aware of it until you just informed the Court to that effect. This compels, being before the jury, a ruling in the presence of the jury, and that is, so far as the custodianship is concerned, until the defendants enter the courtroom and are seated it is not within the Court's jurisdiction, and is not under the Court's direction. That is a responsibility that is elsewhere charged. But at no time during the trial will the Court permit any defendant to sit here manacled, and, so far, as the Court is informed by you, the defendants have not sat here manacled" (R. 766-767).

In connection with the court's ruling it is to be recalled that the Attorney General of the United States consented to the production of Buchalter and Weiss for trial in Kings

---

16. For similar situations where such precautions were held to be proper see Kelly v. Oregon, 273 U. S. 589, 591; State v. Temple, 194 Mo. 237, 248; People v. Kimball, 5 Cal. Rep. (2d) 608.

County upon condition that they "should at all times remain in the custody of the United States Marshall" (R. 126-127).[17]

2. Petitioners also assert that "witnesses for the prosecution, when on the witness stand, were surrounded by police and court officers" and that the "insidious suggestion to the jury" was that these witnesses had "to be protected" against petitioners (Brief, pp. 28-29).

To begin with, the witnesses referred to were the murderers Bernstein, Tannenbaum, Berger and Magoon, all of whom were petitioners' employees and were held in police custody. Secondly, the description that they were "surrounded by police" is misleading. The court accurately described the scene as follows:

> "The Court: In the courtroom, behind or at the end of one of the rear corners of the jury box, are two men with badges whom I presume to be detectives. One is against the side window and one is directly in the corner. There are two court officers in their proper places, one directly behind the witness, another one to his left, at the steps. You have your record. It calls for no ruling. Of course, I deny the motion for a mistrial" (R. 688-689).

And finally, the jury was informed that this was not an exceptional set-up and that it was the usual practice followed in all cases for the purpose of preventing escape of witnesses in police custody. The court said:

> "The Court: All right, for the purpose of the record —the set-up is the usual one which is followed in this court in all cases so far as the Court can recall. When

17. As was said in Ponzi v. Fessenden, 258 U. S. 254, at p. 260, "The trial court is given all the jurisdiction needed to try and hear him by the consent of the United States, which only insists on his being kept safely from escape or from danger under the eye and control of its officer."

witnesses are brought in, in custody, detectives who are charged with the custody—that is, detectives or other officers or jailers who are charged with the custody, stand back in the corner, substantially out of sight of the jury, but close enough not to lose technical custody. Then the two attendants of this court stand, first the Judge's personal attendant, directly behind the prisoner witness, and next another one, in a position where he can guard the door, which is directly to the left of the witness stand and which opens into the Judge's chambers, and provides a means of escape. There is nothing unusual about this, so that is not considered seriously, and it is denied" (R. 765-766).

The "insidious suggestion to the jury" complained by petitioners is thus a figment of their imagination.

(c) As to the prosecutor's summation and the court's charge to the jury.

Petitioners' arguments in this respect are based upon isolated excerpts, paraphrase and inference, without regard to the arguments they presented in their summations which occupy over two hundred pages of the record (R. 3543-3782). A reading thereof shows that counsel for petitioners appealed to every possible prejudice that might influence the jury and had in it every technique to confuse and divert the jury from the real issues in the case. It would unduly prolong the length of this brief to discuss their many transgressions. We think it suffices to say that an examination of the summation by the prosecuting attorney shows it to be a fair reply to the arguments made for the defense. It must be remembered that eleven weeks of anxiety and strain would necessarily strike occasional sparks from the temper of counsel and give momentum to overforceful expression. Under such conditions it would be too much to expect summations to be couched in the carefully weighed and measured language of judicial opinions. Indiscreet statements were bound to occur.

As for the court's charge to the jury, it appears at pages 3871-3991 of the record. The parts criticized are discussed in the majority and dissenting opinions of the Court of Appeals (289 N. Y. 181-243). We need only add that the trial court repeatedly instructed the jury, with great emphasis, that they were the sole judges of the facts, that the credibility of witnesses was for them to determine (R. 3874, 3880, 3890, 3902, 3903), and that,

> "The important thing is to get a mature decision, based upon the evidence and the evidence alone, a decision which will be fair and impartial, which will be without passion, without prejudice, and without sympathy (R. 3871).
>
> * * * * *
>
> The case must be decided fairly, without prejudice and without sympathy. That means not only to one side, but to both—fairly, without prejudice or sympathy to either the defendants or to the people of the State of New York—because this requirement is a rule that works both ways. The scales of justice must be kept evenly balanced to see that the rights of both sides are respected. That is what the trial of a case in court, according to the accepted standards, means (R. 3872).
>
> * * * * *
>
> As you sift through the mass of testimony that has gone into the case, in a record approximating a million words, you will seek to bring forth the germs of truth. Decide without fear and favor; see that the rights of both sides are preserved throughout, and to the full extent permissible, without prejudice" (R. 3873).

(d) As to the defense.

In view of petitioners' reliance upon Judge Rippey's dissenting opinion wherein he said that the conduct of the trial deprived petitioners "of any free consideration by the jury of their defenses", it is well to note that none of the petitioners took the witness stand. Capone offered no defense whatever. In the case of Buchalter, Judge Conway said (289 N. Y. at pp. 210-211):

> "* * * so weak was his defense that great harm might have been occasioned to Buchalter if the court had attempted to analyze the testimony of the witnesses called by him."

And Chief Judge Lehman in his concurring opinion added (289 N. Y. at p. 227):

> "Argument not without weight might, indeed, be made that any attempt to present in the charge a statement or summary of the testimony of the witnesses produced by the defendants would inevitably disclose the lack of substance of such testimony."

Review by the Court of Appeals.

Petitioners contend that the Court of Appeals arbitrarily refused to review the rulings on challenges for "actual bias" and they urge that this presents a question "whether, through inadvertence or indirection, the right to trial by a fair and impartial jury may unwittingly be waived and lost".

These contentions present a non-existent issue. The opinion of the Court of Appeals denying the motion for reargument said (289 N. Y. 244, at p. 245):

> "This court examined and found no error in the rulings of the trial court upon the challenges for implied bias. On the motion for a special jury under the statute (Judiciary Law, art. 18-B; Cons. Laws, ch. 30) the defendants appeared by attorney and consented to be tried before such special jury. A majority of this court is of the opinion that they thereby consented also to the statutory provision (Judiciary Law, § 749-aa, subd. 7) that rulings of the trial court upon challenges for actual bias are final and not appealable."

We have seen that only Mr. Rorke was challenged for "implied bias" and that as to Mr. Link and Mr. Coleman petitioners merely "rested on the record" and made no challenge for bias, actual or implied. The other nine jurors were pronounced "satisfactory to the defendants". Consequently, the holding of the Court of Appeals that by virtue of the Judiciary Law the "rulings of the trial court upon challenges for actual bias are final and not appealable" necessarily applies to challenges for actual bias made against jurors who did not participate in the verdict. Petitioners' contention, therefore, that the decision of the Court of Appeals deprived them of "the right to question the fairness and impartiality of the jury impanelled" (Brief, pp. 51-52) raises a false issue.

Finally, the opinions of the Court of Appeals show a most careful and conscientious consideration of the case. Briefly stated, the majority of the court held that petitioners were found guilty upon legally sufficient evidence and that they had a fair and impartial trial. Judge Conway, in whose opinion Judge Lewis and Judge Finch concurred, found after a detailed analysis of the facts (289 N. Y. at pp. 185-198) that the guilt of Buchalter and Weiss "was clearly established" and that Capone's guilt "was peculiarly a jury question" which was "properly left to the jury" (289 N. Y. at p. 221).

In a separate opinion Chief Judge Lehman pointed out that in reviewing a capital case the Court of Appeals must determine not only whether the verdict is against the weight of evidence but also "whether justice requires a new trial" (289 N. Y. at p. 223). He further noted that it was the court's "duty to determine whether errors or defects, if any, have tainted the jury's verdict and may have deprived the accused of his right to a judgment of a jury of his peers, arrived at after a fair trial conducted in accordance with the law" (289 N. Y. at p. 224). After thus describing the extent of the review given to the case Judge Lehman held that although there were "errors and defects", they could not have had the effect of depriving petitioners of a fair trial. He said (289 N. Y. at pp. 229-230):

> "The verdict of the jury rests, it is plain, on its conclusion that the story of the People's witnesses is credible and furnishes proof of the defendants' guilt beyond a reasonable doubt, in spite of the pollution of the source of the proof. * * * The jury has appraised the evidence and in my opinion it cannot reasonably be said that any ruling of the trial judge which is challenged on the appeal may have affected that appraisal. * * * I recognize that no intrusion by the trial judge upon the field reserved for the jury may be lightly disregarded. Even so, I conclude that in this case the errors viewed as a part of a long trial could not have affected the verdict. It is difficult, perhaps impossible to avoid all error upon such a trial, but the vital question involved was so plain and the meaning of the challenged parts of the charge so obscure that I cannot believe that the jury was misled. * * * Because I have no doubt that the errors did not affect the verdict I am constrained to vote to affirm."

ARGUMENT.

"It is a commonplace in the administration of criminal justice that the actualities of a long trial are too often given a meretricious appearance on appeal; the perspective of the living trial is lost in the search for error in a dead record" (Glasser v. United States, 315 U. S. 60, 88). This "regrettably familiar phenomenon" (Idem) is given fresh point in petitioners' briefs. Not only are important facts having a direct bearing on the questions presented omitted, but by faulty paraphrasing and in some instances misguided distortions of the record the realities of the trial are beclouded and submerged while occurrences of little importance in their setting are magnified far beyond their true significance. We find that, in the main, petitioners' arguments rest on isolated excerpts wrenched from their context and considered without any regard for what preceded or followed.

To evaluate their contentions in true perspective and to perceive more sharply the precise issues involved it is, of course, essential to "re-live the whole trial imaginatively and not to extract from episodes in isolation abstract questions" (Johnson v. United States, 317 U. S. —, Decided Feb. 15, 1943, 87 Law ed., Adv. Op., 496, 503). "Asserted denial (of due process of law) is to be tested by an appraisal of the totality of facts in a given case" (Betts v. Brady, 316 U. S. 455, 462).

When thus tested there is no room for fair argument that petitioners were denied due process of law, which, as applied to a criminal case, means the failure to observe that fundamental fairness "essential to the very concept of justice" and that "the acts complained of must be of such quality as necessarily prevent a fair trial" (Lisenba v. California, 314 U. S. 219, 236).

The guides for decision are clear. Such unfairness exists where an accused in a capital case is denied the right to be represented by counsel (Powell v. Alabama, 287 U. S. 45); where by the active conduct or the connivance of the prosecutor a conviction is obtained through the use of perjured testimony (Mooney v. Holohan, 294 U. S. 103) or through the use of a confession wrung from the accused by overpowering his will (Brown v. Mississippi, 297 U. S. 278; Chambers v. Florida, 309 U. S. 227); where in the selection of jurors to be called for service discrimination is practiced because of race, color or creed (Norris v. Alabama, 294 U. S. 587); where an accused is subjected to a trial under a system by which the judge is paid for his service only when he convicts the defendant (Tumey v. Ohio, 273 U. S. 510); or where the trial is dominated by mob violence in the courtroom so that there is an actual interference with the course of justice (Moore v. Dempsey, 261 U. S. 86; compare Frank v. Mangum, 237 U. S. 309).

The case at bar is outside the scope of those decisions. In their brief, counsel for petitioners rely on several of the cases above cited and quote excerpts therefrom, such as the one in Moore v. Dempsey (supra) where this Court in holding there was a denial of due process of law said that "counsel, jury and judge were swept to the fatal end by an irresistible wave of public passion and that the state courts failed to correct the wrong".

But "Sentences in judicial opinions are misleading if taken out of their context and read as if they were the gist of the decision. Mechanical concepts of jurisprudence make easy a decision on the strength of seeming authority" (People v. Nebbia, 262 N. Y. 259, 270). As was said by Mr. Justice Cardozo:

> "A fertile source of perversion in constitutional theory is the tyranny of labels. Out of the vague precepts of the Fourteenth Amendment a court frames a rule which is general in form, though it has been wrought under the pressure of particular situations. Forthwith another situation is placed under the rule because it is fitted to the words, though related faintly, if at all, to the reasons that brought the rule into existence" (Snyder v. Massachusetts, 291 U. S. 97, 114).

Petitioners' version of the case at bar may appear to fit the words used by this Court in other situations, but, garbled as that version is, it cannot be made to fit the facts of those cases. Thus, for example, the above quoted statement from Moore v. Dempsey was "wrought under the pressure" of the following uncontradicted facts as stated in the opinion of Mr. Justice Holmes (261 U. S. 86, at pp. 89-90):

> "* * * the committee made good their promise by calling colored witnesses and having them whipped and tortured until they would say what was wanted, among them being the two relied on to prove the petitioners' guilt. * * * the petitioners were brought into court, informed that a certain lawyer was appointed their counsel, and were placed on trial before a white jury, —blacks being systematically excluded from both grand and petit juries. The court and neighborhood were thronged with an adverse crowd that threatened the most dangerous consequences to anyone interfering with the desired result. The counsel did not venture to demand delay or a change of venue, to challenge a juryman, or to ask for separate trials. He had no preliminary consultation with the accused, called no witnesses for the defense, although they could have been produced, and did not put the defendants on the stand. The trial lasted about three quarters of an hour, and in less than five minutes the jury brought in a verdict of guilty of murder in the first degree. * * * no juryman could have voted for an acquittal and continued to live * * *, and if any prisoner, by any chance, had been acquitted by a jury, he could not have escaped the mob."

It requires a gross distortion of the facts for petitioners to say, at page 44 of their brief, that "The spirit which permeated the panel was no different from that of the mob which this Court condemned in Moore v. Dempsey"—a panel which we have shown counsel for petitioners deliberately refrained from discharging although given the opportunity to do so by the trial court. In view of the facts in the case at bar we say that the foregoing assertion, as well as many others of similar quality, is shocking and represents a desperate attempt to set free vicious leaders of organized crime.

The fact that Buchalter, because of his breath-taking criminality for many years, received wide notoriety by press and radio as "society's most dangerous enemy" does not justify the claim that he and his associates were tried in "a poisoned atmosphere" where they could not receive a fair trial. "If newspaper articles furnished ground for removal, no defendant could ever be tried for a spectacular crime" in the county of indictment (People v. Brindell, 194 N. Y. App. Div. 776, 781). Moreover, the newspaper comments were not limited to the city of New York. We quote from the affidavit of counsel for Capone, filed June 5, 1941, on his application for a separate trial:

> "The defendant Louis Buchalter, alias Lepke, is a person of national prominence * * * whose career has been painted from coast to coast as the ruler of a criminal empire" (R. 36, 42).

So too, counsel for Weiss in a similar application on August 4, 1941, said:

> "Louis Buchalter, generally known as Lepke, is hailed throughout the press of not only this county but of the city and I dare say the country at large, as the leader of a band, etc." (V. 28).

And Mr. Justice Daly in denying the motions for change of venue held:

> "It is evident, however, that such notoriety was not confined to the metropolitan press, which circulates throughout the country, and certainly was not limited to radio listeners in the city and state of New York" R. 165-166).

The record further shows that experience in the Boroughs of Manhattan and Brooklyn has proved that its citizens do not become "poisoned" by newspaper stories. "In the much publicized case of People v. Hines, the pretrial newspaper accounts concerning the corrupt and criminal alliance of Hines with the underworld were much more constant and voluminous than the newspaper items printed with reference to the case at bar" (R. 134). In answer to the contention that because of such publicity Hines could not receive a fair trial in New York County, Mr. Justice Pecora said:

> "Any resident in this county must recognize the fact that it has a most cosmopolitan population, eminently fair and tolerant in its sentiments. That its people are capable of using discrimination in the formation > and exercise of their individual judgment has often been demonstrated at the polls where they have voted in large majorities against predominating newspaper opinion and exhortation" (People v. Hines, 168 N. Y. Misc. Rep. 453, at p. 470).

In the final analysis, therefore, the sole question on the motions for a change of venue was whether there existed in the County of Kings such prejudice as would prevent a fair trial. Upon that question petitioners were given a full hearing in the Supreme Court on two successive occasions before different Justices of that court (R. 155-163, 175-176). In denying the motions Mr. Justice Daly said:

> "After a careful consideration of the application herein, the court is of the opinion that there is no merit thereto. The papers do not establish by convincing proof that the defendant, by reason of prejudice or passion, cannot obtain a fair trial in this county. * * * It is inconceivable that in a cosmopolitan community such as Kings County, with a population of over two million people, a jury cannot be found, qualified to fairly and impartially try the defendant on the evidence" (R. 165-166).

Such a jury, we have demonstrated, was in fact obtained. The first nine jurors were pronounced by petitioners as "satisfactory to the defendants" at a time when they had not exhausted their peremptory challenges. Two of the other jurors were not challenged for bias, actual or implied. And the third, although challenged for "implied bias", was seated as a juror when petitioners had it in their power to excuse him by using their last peremptory challenge against him. Instead, they used that challenge against a juror whose fairness they at no time impugned.

Now come petitioners and tell us that "While the jurors said they were unbiased, and swore to act impartially, it is clear that their frame of mind was such that they did not 'stand indifferent between the parties'" (Brief, p. 42). Such clairvoyance must surely be envied, but hardly trusted. For, "While bias, as has been said, is 'an elusive condition of the mind', that consideration affords no ground for extreme and fanciful tests" (United States v. Wood, 299 U. S. 123, 150). As was recently observed by this Court, per Frankfurter, J.:

> "If the result of the adjudicatory process is not to be set at naught, it is not asking too much that the burden of showing essential unfairness be sustained by him who claims such injustce and seeks to have the result set aside, and that it be sustained not as a matter of speculation but as a demonstrable reality" (Adams v. United States, 317 U. S. 269, 281).

In Buchalter's petition for certiorari it was claimed (p 37) that "the Court of Appeals refused to review the question of whether * * * a change of venue should have been granted". To eliminate any possible doubt, we quote from Judge Conway's opinion:

> "Defendants urge that they are entitled to a reversal of the judgment of conviction as matter of law because of the denial of their motion for change of venue to another county of the State, made pursuant to subdivision 2 of section 344 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. In our judgment there is no merit in defendants' claim for a number of reasons.
>
> In the first place, the defendants were tried before a special jury drawn pursuant to article 18-B of the Judiciary Law (Cons. Laws, ch. 30). Each of the defendants consented to be tried before such special jury. The statute (Judiciary Law, § 749-aa, subd. 2) provides, 'No person shall be selected as such special juror * * * who doubts his ability to lay aside an opinion or impression formed from newspaper reading or otherwise, or to render an impartial verdict upon the evidence, uninfluenced by any such opinion or impression * * *.'
>
> The motion was addressed to the sound discretion of the court. We are not prepared to say on this record that its denial was an abuse of discretion (People v. Hyde, 75 Misc. 407 [opinion by Mr. Justice Lehman, now Chief Judge of this Court]; aff'd., 149 App. Div. 131; People v. Brindell, 194 App. Div. 776, 781; People v. Hines, 168 Misc. 453, 470; People v. Sarris, 69 App. Div. 604). This may also be said with reference to the motions of the defendants Weiss and Capone for a change of venue and for a severance" (289 N. Y. at pp. 220-221).

And in denying the motion for reargument the court said:

"This court did not restrict its review to a mere determination that there was no abuse of discretion as a matter of law by the Justices of the Supreme Court in denying the motions for a change of venue. A majority of the court is of the opinion that the discretion was properly exercised" (289 N. Y. at p. 245).

Surely, this decision does not involve a Federal question. "Matters of this sort are addressed to the discretion of the trial judge" (Stroud v. United States, 215 U. S. 15, 20), and where the decision is that of a state court it is not subject to review here (Barrington v. Missouri, 205 U. S. 483; Thomas v. Texas, 212 U. S. 278, 281-282.) In the Barrington case, just cited, the defendant applied for a change of venue on the ground of local prejudice. His motion was denied, and he was convicted of murder in the first degree. This Court in dismissing his application to review for want of jurisdiction said (p. 485):

"In our judgment no Federal question was involved. Were this otherwise it would follow that we could decide in any case that the trial court had abused its discretion under the laws of the state, although the supreme court of that state had held to the contrary."

The same holds true as to the denial of Capone's motion for a separate trial. Both under Federal and State law the granting or denial of such a motion is discretionary (Stilson v. United States, 250 U. S. 583; People v. Doran, 246 N. Y. 409, 424). It certainly does not raise a question of due process of law under the Fourteenth Amendment.

So, too, the claims concerning challenges for cause against jurors who did not participate in the verdict and concerning the non-reviewability of rulings on such challenges do not present a constitutional question. A right of review by appeal is not an essential element of due process of law (McKane v. Durston, 153 U. S. 684, 686; Reetz v. Michigan, 188 U. S. 505, 508). It rests entirely with the legislature. Thus subdivision 7 of section 749-aa of the New York Judiciary Law, abolishing the right of appeal on challenges to special jurors has been held constitutional (People v. Dunn, 157 N. Y. 528). Since in the instant case petitioners were in fact tried by a fair and impartial jury they have no basis for complaint (Spies v. Illinois, 123 U. S. 131, 168-180). As stated in Brown v. New Jersey, 175 U. S. 172, 175:

> "* * * the purpose of criminal procedure is not to enable the defendant to select jurors, but to secure an impartial jury. 'The accused cannot complain if he is still tried by an impartial jury. He can demand nothing more. Northern P. R. Co. v. Herbert, 116 U. S. 642. The right to challenge is the right to reject, not to select, a juror. If from those who remain an impartial jury is obtained, the constitutional right of the accused is maintained' Hayes v. Missouri, 120 U. S. 68, 71."

The criticism against the trial judge seems to be based on the notion that trial judges should be reduced to the humiliating position of having no right to say or do anything in a jury trial except to rule in monosyllables on questions presented by counsel; that they should do nothing to guide and control the course of the trial, or to restrain counsel and keep them within bounds, or even prevent them from taking an unfair advantage by misleading the jury by false suggestions and the like.

"The trial judge is," however, "something more than a mere automaton." (People v. Ohanian, 245 N. Y. 227, 232.) He "is not a mere moderator, but is the governor of the trial for the purpose of assuring its proper conduct and of determining questions of law. This discharge of the judicial function, as at common law, is an essential factor in the process for which the Federal Constitution provides". (Herron v. Southern Pacific R. Co., 283 U. S. 91, 95.)

Trial by jury can never be an effective means for administering justice as long as it is characterized by appeals by able advocates to the emotions of untrained men with the judge muzzled and relegated to the side lines and not allowed any substantial part in the trial except to say "yes" or "no" to propositions drafted by counsel and used by them for partisan effect.

The notion that a jury, called upon to render a verdict on disputed facts and subjected to the obfuscating arguments of opposing counsel, are unable to reach a fair decision because the court seeks to help them by analysis and comment is absurd. The court has been trained to understand and clarify factual as well as legal intricacies, penetrate the devices of counsel and observe where the truth is apt to be. To deprive him of the right to aid the jury in arriving at a just verdict on the evidence would emasculate his usefulness. As was said by Dean Ezra Thayer (quoted in Wigmore on Evidence [3rd ed.] sec. 2551-a, p. 510):

> "In a long trial, perhaps involving hard questions of expert judgment, the business of weighing conflicting testimony is a serious task for men unused to analysis or to abstract ideas; and a system which gives full scope to the eloquence of lawyers and then denies the jury the assistance of the only trained and impartial mind in the court room, whatever its excuse in days of royal tyranny or lay magistrates, is today a senseless perversion."

Moreover, the charge to the jury fails to present any Federal question. No claim was made at the trial that it violated the Federal Constitution. Nor was any such claim made or decided by the Court of Appeals. The charge, therefore, is not reviewable here. As stated in Franklin v. South Carolina, 218 U. S. 161, 172.

> "The supreme court of South Carolina considered and overruled certain grounds of appeal, which embrace objections to the charge. But we do not find in these rulings any determination of Federal questions adverse to plaintiff in error which would warrant a reversal by this court. These rulings were upon questions of general law, concerning which no Federal right was asserted and denied, as is essential to enable this court to review the judgment of a state court."

The criticism of the trial judge for permitting petitioners to be manacled to police officers while being brought to and from the courtroom is certainly unwarranted. Where, as here, the defendants on trial for murder are desperate and dangerous criminals, such precautions must be taken to prevent their escape. (Kelly v. Oregon, 273 U. S. 589; State v. Temple, 194 Mo. 237; People v. Kimball, 5 Cal. Rep. [2d] 608.) It is specious to contend that by so doing their constitutional rights were violated. The words of Judge Cooley, a great judicial interpreter of the organic law, are quite pertinent. He said (People v. Murray, 52 Mich. 291):

> "I do not understand that the Constitution is an instrument to play fast and loose with in criminal cases, any more than in any others; or that it is the business of Courts to be astute in the discovery of technical difficulties in the punishment of parties for their criminal conduct."

And this Court in a situation analogous to the one at bar said (Kelly v. Oregon, 273 U. S. 589, 591):

> "Another assignment of error is to the fact that the plaintiff in error was constantly in the custody of the warden of the penitentiary, inside and outside of the court room, during the trial. It is argued that he was entitled to be free from any custody, in order that he might fully make his defense, and that this deprived him of due process. It is a new meaning attached to the requirement of due process of law that one who is serving in the penitentiary for a felony and while there commits a capital offense must, in order to secure a fair trial, be entirely free from custody (citing cases). There is no showing that he had not full opportunity to consult with counsel or that he was in any way prevented from securing needed witnesses. The assignment is wholly without merit."

The same is true of the complaint against the presence of detectives in the courtroom when the people's witnesses were testifying. We have already stated the facts controlling this situation. It is pertinent here to quote the considered judgment of an eminent committee of the American Bar Association in their report on "Improvements In The Law of Evidence (Reports of the Section of Judicial Administration at Annual Meeting for July 25-27, 1938):

"10. Intimidation of Witnesses.

In most of the large cities there is probably more or less intimidation of witnesses in felony cases. This, when it exists, is the supreme disgrace of our justice. It is well-known to all that the success of the 'racket' is due chiefly to the lack of proof caused by the intimidation of witnesses. This intimidation takes place either in the court premises or outside of them.

(A) In the court premises it is the duty of the judge to install arrangements for protecting the witnesses, and also to instruct and require his bailiffs to exclude from the courtroom and its premises known bullies and touts. All this part of the remedy comes home to the judge's responsibility."

As to petitioners' request for permission to inspect the police department reports, it was clearly an attempt to go "upon a tour of investigation, in the hope that they would find something which would aid them" (Arnstein v. United States, 296 Fed. 946, 950). It is settled law, however, that "Documents are not subject to inspection for the mere reason that they will be useful in supplying a clew whereby evidence can be gathered" (People ex rel. Lemon v. Supreme Court, 245 N. Y. 24, 29; see also, Goldman v. United States, 316 U. S. 129, 132).

Conclusion.

That the trial was not faultless may be conceded, but "we cannot expect perfection on the trial of a criminal case" (People v. Wilcox, 245 N. Y. 404, 406). As stated by Chief Judge Lehman in the case at bar, "It is difficult, perhaps impossible to avoid all error upon such a trial" (289 N. Y. at p. 230). "The due process clause", however, "does not impose upon the States a duty to establish ideal systems for the administration of justice" (Ownbey v. Morgan, 256 U. S. 94, 110). Nor does it limit "the powers of the States to try and deal with crimes committed within their borders" or "bring to the test of a decision of this Court every ruling made in the course of a State trial" (Avery v. Alabama, 308 U. S. 444, 446-447). "This Court is not made, by the laws passed in pursuance of the Constitution, a court of appeal from the highest courts of the states, except to a very limited extent, and for a precisely defined purpose" (Sauer v. New York, 206 U. S. 536, 546). And when federal power is invoked to set aside what the highest court of a state regards as a fair trial "it must be plain that a federal right has been invaded" (Lisenba v. California, 314 U. S. 219, 239).

We submit that such is not the case here. Petitioners were represented by able and experienced counsel, who were given ample opportunity to prepare for trial. The trial lasted eleven weeks. The widest latitude was given in the selection of the jury, which resulted in obtaining fair and impartial jurors. Equally wide latitude was given to the defense in the cross-examination of the people's witnesses and in summations to the jury. And upon appeal to the Court of Appeals petitioners were given a full and conscientious hearing. In short, at every stage of the proceedings due process of law was had.

The words of Mr. Justice Cardozo in Snyder v. Massachusetts, 291 U. S. 97, at p. 122, are quite apt here:

> "The constitution and statutes and judicial decision of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts are the authentic forms through which the sense of justice of the People of that Commonwealth expresses itself in law. We are not to supersede them on the ground that they deny the essentials of a fair trial because opinions may differ as to their policy of fairness. * * * There is danger that the criminal law will be brought into contempt—that discredit will even touch the great immunities assured by the Fourteenth Amendment—if gossamer possibilities of prejudice to a defendant are to nullify a sentence pronounced by a court of competent jurisdiction in obedience to local law, and set the guilty free."

For the foregoing reasons the judgments below should not be disturbed.

Respectfully submitted.

THOMAS CRADOCK HUGHES,
Acting District Attorney,
Kings County, N. Y.

SOLOMON A. KLEIN,
HENRY J. WALSH,
EDWARD H. LEVINE,
Assistant District Attorneys,
Of Counsel.

Appendix.

New York Judiciary Law.

"§ 749-aa. Special jurors in certain counties.

1. * * * * *

2. Persons ineligible. No person shall be selected as such special juror who is by law disqualified or who claims and is allowed exemption from service as a trial juror, or who has been convicted of a criminal offense, or found guilty of fraud or other misconduct by the judgment of any civil court or who possesses such conscientious opinions with regard to the death penalty as would preclude his finding a defendant guilty if the crime charged be punishable with death, or who doubts his ability to lay aside an opinion or impression formed from newspaper reading or otherwise, or to render an impartial verdict upon the evidence, uninfluenced by any such opinion or impression, or whose opinion as to circumstantial evidence is such as would prevent his finding a verdict of guilty upon such evidence, or who avows such a prejudice against any law of the state as would preclude his finding a defendant guilty of a violation of such law, or who avows such a prejudice against any particular defense to a criminal charge as would prevent his giving a fair and impartial trial upon the merits of such defense, or who avows that he cannot in all cases give to a defendant who fails to testify as a witness in his own behalf the full benefit of the statutory provision that such defendant's neglect or refusal to testify as a witness in his own behalf shall not create any presumption against him.

3. * * * * *

4. Application for [illegible] jury. Whenever an issue of fact has arisen in any civil or criminal action triable by a jury empaneled within the provisions of this section, the [illegible] attorney of the defendant, if in a criminal action, or either party in a civil action may apply for a special jury to try such issue. * * * Where, upon such application, it appears to the court that by reason of the importance or intricacy of the case, a special jury is required, or that the subject-matter of the indictment or the issue to be tried has been so widely commented upon that the court is satisfied that an ordinary jury cannot without delay and difficulty be obtained to try such issue, or that for any other reason the due, efficient and impartial administration of justice in the particular case would be advanced by the trial of such an issue by a special jury, the court to which the motion is made may make an order directing that such trial be had by a special jury, and such trial shall be had accordingly. * * *

5. * * * * *.

6. * * * * *.

7. Challenges; trial. The parties to such an action shall have the same number of peremptory challenges and the same challenges for cause to be tried in the same manner as upon a trial with an ordinary jury. The rulings of the trial court, however, in admitting or excluding evidence upon the trial of any challenge for actual bias shall not be the subject of exception. Such rulings and the allowance or disallowance of the challenge shall be final. Upon the formation of a special jury as hereinbefore provided the issue must be tried by such jury as prescribed by the code of criminal procedure or the civil practice act with respect to a jury trial in a criminal or civil action with an ordinary jury.

8. * * * * *.

9. * * * * *.

10. * * * * *."

Section 377 New York Code of Criminal Procedure.

"§ 377. Grounds of challenge for implied bias.

A challenge for implied bias may be taken for all or any of the following causes, and for no other:

1. Consanguinity or affinity within the ninth degree, to the person alleged to be injured by the crime charged, or on whose complaint the prosecution was instituted, or to the defendant;

2. Bearing to him the relation of guardian or ward, attorney or client, or client of the attorney or counsel for the people or defendant, master or servant, or landlord or tenant, or being a member of the family of the defendant, or of the person alleged to be injured by the offense charged, or on whose complaint the prosecution was instituted, or in his employment on wages;

3. Being a party adverse to the defendant in a civil action or having complained against, or been accused by him in a criminal prosecution;

4. Having served on the grand jury which found the indictment, or on a coroner's jury which inquired into the death of a person whose death is the subject of the indictment;

5. Having served on a trial jury, which has tried another person for the crime charged in the indictment;

6. Having been one of a jury formerly sworn to try the same indictment, and whose verdict was set aside or which was discharged without a verdict, after the cause was submitted to it;

7. Having served as a juror, in a civil action brought against the defendant, for the act charged as a crime;

8. If the crime charged be punishable with death, the entertaining of such conscientious opinions as would preclude his finding the defendant guilty; in which case he shall neither be permitted nor compelled to serve as a juror." (L. 1881, ch. 442, sec. 377 in effect Sep't. 1, 1881.)

FILE COPY

Office - Supreme Court
FILED
MAR 10 1943
CHARLES ELMORE CROPLEY
CLERK

IN THE

Supreme Court of the United States

OCTOBER TERM, 1942

Nos. 606, 610, 619

LOUIS BUCHALTER, EMANUEL WEISS and LOUIS CAPONE,
Petitioners,

against

THE PEOPLE OF THE STATE OF NEW YORK,
Respondents.

PETITION FOR REHEARING OF APPLICATIONS FOR WRIT OF CERTIORARI

I. MAURICE WORMSER,
J. BERTRAM WEGMAN,
Counsel for Petitioner Buchalter.

ARTHUR GARFIELD HAYS,
JOHN SCHULMAN,
Counsel for Petitioner Weiss.

SYDNEY ROSENTHAL,
Counsel for Petitioner Capone.

INDEX

PAGE

I—This case presents directly the question whether, through inadvertence or indirection, the right to trial by a fair and impartial jury may be unwittingly waived and so lost 4

II—Evidence in the possession of the prosecution was earnestly claimed to have been suppressed. The majority of the Court of Appeals indirectly sanctioned that suppression by saying, on reargument, that the evidence was not conclusive 6

III—The dissenting judges in the Court of Appeals emphasized that while the form of a trial had been observed, the substance and essence of fair play were lacking 7

CASES CITED

Johnson v. U. S., decided February 15, 1943 (Law Ed. Adv. Op. Vol. 87, p. 503) 8

Mooney v. Holohan, 294 U. S. 103 7

Moore v. Dempsey, 261 U. S. 86 5

People ex rel. Battista v. Christian, 249 N. Y. 341 6

People v. Becker, 210 N. Y. 274 3

People v. Nitzberg, decided January 21, 1943 (N. Y. Court of Appeals) 3

STATUTES CITED

New York State Constitution:
Article I, Section 2 6

IN THE

Supreme Court of the United States

OCTOBER TERM, 1942

LOUIS BUCHALTER, EMANUEL WEISS, and LOUIS CAPONE, Petitioners, against THE PEOPLE OF THE STATE OF NEW YORK, Respondents.	Nos. 606, 610, 619

PETITION FOR REHEARING OF APPLICATIONS FOR WRIT OF CERTIORARI

To the Honorable, The Chief Justice and Associate Justices of the Supreme Court of the United States:

COME NOW Louis Buchalter, Emanuel Weiss and Louis Capone and respectfully petition this Honorable Court for a reconsideration of their several petitions for a writ of certiorari to review the judgment of the County Court of the County of Kings, State of New York, as affirmed by the Court of Appeals of the State of New York, whereby your petitioners were adjudged guilty of murder in the first degree, and sentenced to death.

The several petitions were submitted under numbers 606, 610 and 619, respectively, of the October Term, 1942, and were denied by order filed February 15, 1943. The stay of execution, theretofore granted by Mr. Justice Roberts, was vacated. No new date of execution has yet been set; petitioner Buchalter is still a prisoner of the United States of America, confined at Federal Detention Headquarters at New York City; petitioner Weiss and petitioner Capone are prisoners of the State of New York, confined at Sing Sing State Prison, Ossining, New York.

Counsel for petitioners are not unmindful that full consideration was given to the petitions. Yet they are so convinced that there was a denial of due process in this case, that they believe the failure so to demonstrate was due to fault on their part. In an effort to present a comprehensive review of the proceedings below, the very volume of the matters discussed may have obscured the fundamental problem sought to be presented.

Counsel recognize that while this Court is reluctant to review the administration of justice in the several States, it has repeatedly acted when it believed that fundamental due process had been denied. In this case, the belief that this has occurred arises from no single incident. In other contexts, this Court has recognized the necessity for consideration of all of the elements of a situation and has sometimes spoken of a "bundle of rights". Here it is not amiss to suggest that there has been a "bundle of wrongs".

A fair trial before an unbiased tribunal is the keystone of the structure of justice assured by the Fourteenth Amendment to the citizens of the several States.

Counsel recognize, moreover, the natural reluctance to grant a writ because such action might lead to a plethora of criminal cases in which writs might hereafter be sought.

But this is an unparalleled case; it really has no counterpart. Rarely, if ever, does a case arise where a trial is so grossly unfair that judges of the State Court are moved to say that the defendants had been deprived of "even a remote outside chance of any free consideration by the jury".

If this Court can be convinced:

(A) That the trial was held in a poisoned atmosphere, one which in all probability precluded the selection of a fair jury;

(B) That the physical trappings of the trial—for example, the unmanacling of the defendants in the presence of the jury, and the proximity of guards to the witnesses while they testified—were calculated to intensify the hostile atmosphere;

(C) That witnesses for the State were confessed criminals and murderers who had had the opportunity to frame their stories to save their own lives;

(D) That evidence which might have tended to contradict these witnesses was suppressed;

(E) That, by the Trial Judge's charge, cross-examination was derided and the jury was led to condone attempted perjuries by the prosecution's witnesses; would it then say that what occurred at this trial was not bad enough to warrant its intervention? The petitioners' plea is that they be given the opportunity to convince this Court that these and other factors as well precluded a fair trial.

Nearest in analogy to this case is People v. Becker, 210 N. Y. 274, to which particular attention is invited, because counsel could not more forcefully present the argument here than was stated by the opinions of the Court in that case. There the New York Court of Appeals intervened. Here the judgment of death was affirmed, despite the fact that an actual majority of the Court of Appeals expressed at least a reasonable doubt of guilt.*

Is there so little merit to a claim of denial of due process where three-sevenths of the Court below said that petitioners were deprived of even "a fair chance to defend their lives"? Is such a case so free from doubt that this Court will not hear argument on the merits?

---

* In a later case decided by that very Court, People v. Nitzberg (decided January 21, 1943, not yet officially reported, printed in New York Law Journal, front page, February 17, 1943), it saw fit to denounce the principal witnesses for the prosecution, two of whom were, as here, Tannenbaum and Magoon.

The Chief Judge of the Court of Appeals voted to affirm because, he concluded, the errors at the trial did not affect the verdict. Perhaps that may be, but for a reason different from that assigned by the Chief Judge; this jury was preconditioned to believe that these defendants were guilty, and the Trial Court confirmed that belief by communicating unmistakably to the jury his own conviction of guilt, his own view that the trial was but an irritating and tiresome formality. And the learned Chief Judge apparently did not measure that unfairness by the standard of "due process"; apparently he did not take into account the lurid articles in the local newspapers which, as even the Trial Judge recognized, raised "havoc with the jurors" (S. M. p. 614, September 24, 1941).

The other three judges of the Court of Appeals who voted for affirmance spoke through Judge Conway. They found no error. They thought the summation of counsel for Buchalter made immaterial the denunciatory newspaper stories; they failed to perceive that such a summation was an expedient made necessary by the exigencies of the atmosphere created by those very newspaper stories.

I

This case presents directly the question whether, through inadvertence or indirection, the right to trial by a fair and impartial jury may be unwittingly waived and so lost.

This would seem to be a matter meriting review by this Court.

On the appeal below, it was contended that such bias and prejudice permeated the entire panel that no fair trial jury could have been chosen, and that the rulings of the Trial Judge foreclosed any possibility of proper examination and selection of jurors for the trial.

The majority of the Court below, however, in the per curiam opinion denying the motion for reargument (R. 4121), said that no review was permissible of the rulings of the Trial Court upon challenges for actual bias. It did so in reliance upon a local statute making such rulings of the trial judge final and not reviewable upon appeal.

In this, the majority of the Court below fell into grave error of Constitutional Law which this Court should correct.

The consent, if such it can be called, to be tried by a special jury cannot be tortured into a consent to be tried by a contaminated jury. It is crystal-clear that this whole panel was so infected by prejudice and bias that there was little, if any, likelihood of obtaining a fair and impartial jury. If in this situation, recognized by the Trial Court, as witness his comment that the newspaper articles were "raising havoc with the jurors", it was not his duty on his own motion to declare a mistrial and permit renewal of the motions for a change of venue, then at the very least he should have allowed the widest scope to the investigation of the state of mind of each juror—as indeed at the outset he had promised to do. Not only did he improperly restrict that examination, by his comments and strictures he bludgeoned the talesmen into abjuring prejudice and bias in order to qualify.

Where it is charged, as here, that error intervened to the prejudice of defendants in the rulings of the trial judge which prevented the proper examination of the talesmen upon challenges for actual bias, it is no answer to say that the local statute makes such rulings immune from appeal. The Fourteenth Amendment's guaranty of due process would be idle words were its high purposes so easily circumvented. How, then, would a defendant be guarded against an admittedly hostile jury?

This case is not dissimilar to Moore v. Dempsey, 261 U. S. 86. There (p. 91) "counsel, jury and judge were swept to the fatal end by an irresistible wave of public passion, and * * * the State Courts failed to correct the wrong". Here it was the same vice, but in more subtle form. Yet the same result—deprivation of due process of law—ensued. Indeed, the evil is the greater when subtlety replaces violence, because men can, if strong of will, defy and disregard armed threats. They can seldom escape the insidious effect of community-wide prejudice—for its very nature is such that they are ignorant of their being seized and affected by it.

A fair and impartial tribunal for the trial is of the essence of due process. To say, as is implicit in the decision below, that a constructive, as distinguished from an actual, consent to trial by special jury carries with it a consent to give up the right to question the fairness and impartiality of the jury impanelled is not consonant with any concept of due process. And this holding by the Court of Appeals of New York is the more remarkable since New York State does not countenance waiver of trial by jury in a capital case. Article I, Section 2, N. Y. State Constitution; People ex rel. Battista v. Christian, 249 N. Y. 341. So the startling inconsistency now develops that New York insists upon a jury, but if it is a "special" jury, will not allow inquiry into whether that jury has been properly chosen.

Here, specifically, the highest court of a state has refused to review rulings upon challenges to jurors for actual bias, because a state statute precludes such review. Thereby due process was denied, because in the first instance the Trial Court precluded a demonstration of bias, and the State statute has been said to be a bar to correction of this fatal defect. Unless this Court correct this error, this "hard case" has made "bad law" indeed.

II

Evidence in the possession of the prosecution was earnestly claimed to have been suppressed. The majority of the Court of Appeals indirectly sanctioned that suppression by saying, on reargument, that the evidence was not conclusive.

Is "due process of law" to be determined by such criteria?

The majority of the judges of the Court of Appeals held that certain errors at the trial could be disregarded because it did not think those errors were sufficient to prejudice the jury. But, when it came to consider the refusal of the Trial Court to allow the defendants free access to available evidence, the majority of the judges decided that it probably would not have made a difference—thus usurping, doubtless inadvertently, the province of the jury.

Defendants should not have to demonstrate that the suppressed evidence would have changed the result; it should be enough that it might have. Surely no one can say with certainty that the jury might not have been influenced by the reports of the police officers who were shadowing Buchalter, thereby corroborating the testimony of the defense witness Shapiro.

It is one thing to say, as did the majority below, that certain errors did not have influence. It is a quite different matter to say that the suppressed evidence would have had no effect.

It is as repugnant to the concept of a fair trial for the prosecution to withhold evidence which might have helped the defense as it is for the prosecution to use evidence which it knows to be false. (Cf., Mooney v. Holohan, 294 U. S. 103.)

III

The dissenting judges in the Court of Appeals emphasized that while the form of a trial had been observed, the substance and essence of fair play were lacking.

"Fair play" connotes protection against the interposition of extrinsic factors, of extraneous influence. For example, it is not observed where, as here, the prosecutor was allowed in summation to interject the issue of his personal integrity, and to disparage, if not condemn, defense counsel as devil's advocates hired with tainted money. This factor of extraneous influence seems to be the common thread tying together the various decisions of this Court touching the issue of due process.

In short, the distinction between mere error in the trial and a deprivation of due process of law is the difference between a venial mistake or error of judgment and a failure to provide a safeguard against foul blows.

To appraise individual errors each by itself and to examine "in isolation abstract questions of evidence and procedure" cannot be a fair test whether "due process" was had. To deny a petition for a writ of certiorari here is "to acquiesce in low standards of criminal prosecution". (Frankfurter, J., in Johnson v. U. S., decided February 15, 1943, Law Ed. Adv. Op. Vol. 87, p. 503.)

Counsel appreciate that this Court may be hesitant to review a case which received careful consideration by the New York Court of Appeals. But the very divergence of the opinions of the Judges of that Court shows that there was almost an equal division on the question of the fundamental fairness of the trial. Not long ago petitioners would have had the right of direct appeal to this Court. Appeal is nonetheless a privilege they should be accorded where there is such strong doubt that they received a fair trial.

When dissenting judges of such distinction feel that there has been only lip service to fair play (which is all "due process" really means), the case surely is one which involves such fundamental principles as to warrant its review by this Court.

Rare, indeed, are those cases of so close a division on such an issue in the highest court of a State. This Court is not asked to set a precedent for unlimited review of criminal cases from State Courts. But, if cases could come to this Court by certificate from a State Court, it is clear that this case would be so certified, not simply because the majority below remained burdened with a reasonable doubt of guilt, but for a far more important reason.

There is here, certainly, reasonable doubt whether these petitioners received a fair trial. No judgment, especially of death, ever should go unreviewed in this Court where there is reasonable doubt of that.

WHEREFORE, your petitioners, by counsel whose signatures are subscribed, pray that their petitions for a writ of certiorari may be reconsidered.

Counsel certify that this petition is presented in good faith and the sincere belief that it has merit, and not for the purpose of delay.

And your petitioners will ever pray, etc.

LOUIS BUCHALTER, Petitioner,
by I. MAURICE WORMSER,
J. BERTRAM WEGMAN,
Counsel.

EMANUEL WEISS, Petitioner,
by ARTHUR GARFIELD HAYS,
JOHN SCHULMAN,
Counsel.

LOUIS CAPONE, Petitioner,
by SYDNEY ROSENTHAL,
Counsel.

SUPREME COURT OF THE UNITED STATES.

Nos. 606, 610, 619.—October Term, 1942.

606	Louis Buchalter, Petitioner, vs. People of the State of New York.	On Writ of Certiorari to the County Court of Kings County, State of New York.
610	Emanuel Weiss, Petitioner, vs. People of the State of New York.	On Writ of Certiorari to the Court of Appeals of the State of New York.
619	Louis Capone, Petitioner, vs. The People of the State of New York.	On Writ of Certiorari to the County Court of Kings County, State of New York.

[June 1, 1943.]

Mr. Justice Roberts delivered the opinion of the Court.

The petitioners were convicted of first degree murder in the County Court of Kings County, New York, after a trial lasting over nine weeks. The printed record consists of over twelve thousand pages. The judgments were affirmed by the Court of Appeals of the State.[1] Numerous errors were there assigned. Four opinions were written, two of which dissented from the judgments of affirmance, as to which the court divided four to three. In his concurring opinion the Chief Judge said that he agreed with one of the dissenting opinions that errors and defects occurred in the trial which could not be "disregarded without hesitation lest in our anxiety that the guilty should not escape punishment we affirm a judgment tainted with errors obtained through violation of fundamental rights." His conclusion was, however, that the errors did not affect the verdict. Two dissenting judges were of opinion that such substantial error was committed as to require a reversal. One judge was of opinion that the conduct of the trial was so grossly unfair as to leave the defendants without a remote chance of free consideration of their defenses by the jury; so unfair as to deprive them of the presumption of innocence and the requirement of proof beyond a reasonable doubt.

[1] 289 N. Y. 181; rehearing denied 289 N. Y. 244.

The remittiturs of the Court of Appeals recited that the appellants in brief and argument raised the point that they had been denied their constitutional rights under the Fourteenth Amendment to the Constitution of the United States and that this point was considered and necessarily decided. The same contention was the basis of the petitions for certiorari.

The petitioners rely not on any one circumstance but insist that they were not afforded a fair and impartial jury free from influences extraneous to the proofs adduced at the trial; that they were deprived of an impartial and unbiased judge to preside at the trial and that the prosecutor resorted to unfair methods to influence the jury.

This court granted certiorari in order that the petitioners' claims of denial of a federal right might be examined in the light of the record with the aid of briefs and oral argument. As the opinions rendered in the court below state the facts and discuss the alleged trial errors in detail we need not restate them.

The due process clause of the Fourteenth Amendment requires that action by a state through any of its agencies must be consistent with the fundamental principles of liberty and justice which lie at the base of our civil and political institutions, which not infrequently are designated as "the law of the land."[2] Where this requirement has been disregarded in a criminal trial in a state court this court has not hesitated to exercise its jurisdiction to enforce the constitutional guarantee.[3] But the Amendment does not draw to itself the provisions of state constitutions[4] or state laws.[5] It leaves the states free to enforce their criminal laws under such statutory provisions and common law doctrines as they deem appropriate; and does not permit a party to bring

[2] Hebert v. Louisiana, 272 U. S. 312, 316. See also: In re Kemmler, 136 U. S. 436, 448; Caldwell v. Texas, 137 U. S. 692, 697; Lisenba v. California, 314 U. S. 219, 236.

[3] Moore v. Dempsey, 261 U. S. 86; Powell v. Alabama, 287 U. S. 45; Brown v. Mississippi, 297 U. S. 278; Avery v. Alabama, 308 U. S. 444; Chambers v. Florida, 309 U. S. 227; White v. Texas, 310 U. S. 530; Smith v. O'Grady, 312 U. S. 329; Ward v. Texas, 316 U. S. 547.

[4] Rawlins v. Georgia, 201 U. S. 638; Patterson v. Colorado, 205 U. S. 454, 459; Hebert v. Louisiana, supra, 316.

[5] Leeper v. Texas, 139 U. S. 462; Rawlins v. Georgia, supra.

to the test of a decision in this court every ruling made in the course of a trial in a state court.[6]

The petitioners assert that, in view of unfair and lurid newspaper publicity, it was impossible to obtain an impartial jury in the county of trial, and that the rulings of the court denying a change of venue, and on challenges to prospective jurors, resulted in the impanelling of a jury affected with bias. We have examined the record and are unable, as the court below was, to conclude that a convincing showing of actual bias on the part of the jury which tried the defendants is established. Though the statute governing the selection of the jurors and the court's rulings on challenges are asserted to have worked injustice in the impanelling of a jury such assertion raises no due process question requiring review by this court.[7]

The petitioners insist that the rulings upon evidence and instructions to the jury, when taken in their totality, indicate that, whatever the intention of the trial judge, his rulings and attitude precluded a fair consideration of the case. The Court of Appeals held that certain of the challenged rulings and instructions were erroneous but that ~~they~~ the were not substantial in the sense that they affected the ability of the jury to render an impartial verdict, and that others of the alleged errors were not such under the law of New York. As already stated, the due process clause of the Fourteenth Amendment does not enable us to review errors of state law however material under that law. We are unable to find that the rulings and instructions under attack constituted more than errors as to state law. We cannot say that they were such as to deprive the petitioners of a trial according to the accepted course of legal proceedings.

Finally, the petitioners assert that the prosecuting officer, by suppression of evidence, and by statements in his addresses to the jury, was so unfair as to deprive the trial of the essential quality of an impartial inquiry into their guilt. The point as to the alleged suppression of evidence is without merit. Certain documentary evidence was in court. The judge ruled that the

---

[6] Avery v. Alabama, supra, 446-447; Leeper v. Texas, supra; Howard v. North Carolina, 191 U. S. 126, 136, 137; Burt v. Smith, 203 U. S. 129, 135; Barrington v. Missouri, 205 U. S. 483, 488; Ughbanks v. Armstrong, 208 U. S. 481, 487; Caldwell v. Texas, supra, 697; Hebert v. Louisiana, supra, 316.

[7] Hayes v. Missouri, 120 U. S. 68, 71; Spies v. Illinois, 123 U. S. 131, 168; Rawlins v. Georgia, supra; Franklin v. South Carolina, 218 U. S. 161, 168.

prosecuting officer need not submit it to defense counsel for examination. If there was error in the ruling it was error of the court. Upon motion for rehearing the Court of Appeals examined the papers and found that they were not of significance in respect of any issue in the case. No such showing of suppression of evidence or connivance at perjury, as has heretofore been held to require corrective process on the part of the state,[8] was shown.

The speeches of counsel for defendants apparently provoked statements by the District Attorney of which petitioners now complain. This does not raise a due process question.

As we have recently said, "it is not asking too much that the burden of showing essential unfairness be sustained by him who claims such injustice and seeks to have the result set aside, and that it be sustained not as a matter of speculation but as a demonstrable reality.[9]

The judgments are affirmed.

Mr. Justice BLACK, substantially agreeing with these views, is of opinion that the petitions should be dismissed.

Mr. Justice MURPHY and Mr. Justice JACKSON took no part in the consideration or decision of this case.

---

[8] Mooney v. Holohan, 294 U. S. 103.

[9] Adams v. McCann, 317 U. S. 269, 281.